Executive Addresses Editors at Summer White House on Geneva Meeting

RAPID CITY (S. D.) June 18. (Exclusive)—President Coolidge expressed his hope today that the conference on naval disarmament, which opens in Geneva next Monday, will mark an advance toward relief for this and other nations from the burdens of war.

He spoke of the world-important event, in which this government will play an important part, to a group of more than 300 members of the National Editorial Association, who visited him this afternoon at his summer White House in the State game park.

LINDBERGH TIRED OUT

St. Louis Cheers Him Wildly

Home Town's Great Welcome Ends Today and He Can Get Needed Quiet

Parade, Initiation Into Boy Scouts and Ball Game Feature Greeting

ST. LOUIS, June 18. (AP)—St. Louis gave Col. Charles Lindbergh a tremendous ovation today in its public acclaim of its youthful trans-Atlantic flyer who came home yesterday to an informal, virtually private, reception.

"The most enthusiastic, yet most orderly demonstration I have seen since my landing in Paris," said Lindbergh after he had ridden two hours through eight miles of unbroken cheering men, women and children packed two to twenty deep on sidewalks along the route.

His reception at Sportsman's Park this afternoon lacked only numbers to equal that of the parade. Even then, an estimated 37,000 persons, the greatest regular season throng ever to attend a St. Louis baseball game, jammed their way in to see the young flyer assist Rogers Hornsby, previously St. Louis' greatest individual hero, raise the world's series pennant won last year when he managed the Cardinals.

EVERYTHING OUTDONE

St. Louis' former standards for outpourings, the Armistice Day celebration, the annual parade of the Veiled Prophets, an dthe return of the victorious Cardinals after they had defeated the New York Yankees in America's annual baseball classic last fall, all went by the board today in estimates of the number who cheered Lindbergh.

From the time he emerged from the Congress Hotel until he left the line of march for a private luncheon before going to the ball park, probably half of St. Louis' population and possibly a quarter of a million visitors shouted his praise. The downtown district was one vast roar and the air was filled with confetti, streamers and torn newspapers and telephone books.

BYRD PLANS COURSE FOR OCEAN HOP

Newfoundland-to-Ireland Route to be Taken With New Navigation Method

WASHINGTON, June 18. (Exclusive)—Commander Richard E. Byrd when he takes off on his trans-Atlantic flight will follow a course from St. John's, Newfoundland, to Valencia Island, Ireland, which will enable him to cover the distance with only one compass setting. In planning the new aerial navigation method which, if successful, will be a major contribution to the science of trans-Atlantic flying, Commander Byrd consulted with Albert H. Bumstead, chief cartographer of the National Geographic Society. Mr. Bumstead is the inventor of the sun compass used by Commander Byrd on his polar flight.

In explaining the navigation technique involved in Commander Byrd's forthcoming flight a bulletin issued today by the National Geographic Society says:

"The irregularity of the compass bends the line Commander Byrd will take approximately toward a great circle. His route is only eleven miles longer than the shortest route he could possibly take between St. John's and Valencia Islands.

"The merit of the course Commander Byrd will follow is that he does not have to know how far he has advanced on his route in order to know how to steer his course.

"Commander Byrd will follow a route to St. John's, which will afford him the greatest number of landmarks and emergency landing fields."

Pons-Winnecke Comet Tail in View This Week

CHICAGO, June 18. (AP)—Hurtling through space faster than a bullet speeds, the Pons-Winnecke comet is rapidly nearing the fourth magnitude and within a week will be plainly visible to the naked eye, observers at the Yerkes Observatory of the University of Chicago announced tonight.

The comet is slightly beyond the fifth magnitude and appears only as a hazy splotch about the size of the moon.

Prof. Gerges Van Biesbroeck tonight between twilight and moonrise took several photographs of the solar visitor for closer study.

Calles Ban on American Goods Now in Effect

MEXICO CITY, June 18. (AP)—The recent decree of President Calles forbidding the Mexican government to purchase American products directly in the United States, became officially effective today by publication in the Diaro Official.

There had been some speculation in American circles whether the decree ever would be officially published. The Foreign Office already had declared that the decree was not intended as a boycott of American goods, which still can be purchased through a Mexican agency.

AGREEMENT REACHED ON FORTIFYING

Powers Attain Partial Accord on Destruction of Eastern Establishments

[Copyright, 1927, by Chicago Tribune]

LONDON, June 18. (Exclusive)—Advices from Geneva tonight state that a partial agreement has been reached between France, Great Britain, Germany and Italy over the question of the eastern fortifications. Dr. Gustav Stresemann, the German Foreign Minister, it is reported, has accepted Allied control over the destruction provided that the acceptance will not be made to appear as a result of the Geneva conference.

On the question of Russia, Dr. Stresemann, according to the British version, declared to the other ministers his horror and disgust at the Moscow executions, but has offered to try to approach the soviets with advances on moderate behavior, requesting them to try to follow more civilized principles.

Sir Austen Chamberlain solemnly declared that Great Britain does not contemplate war-like action against Moscow.

WASHINGTON, June 18. (AP)—A world census of automobiles made public by the Commerce Department today indicated that on January 1, 1927, there were 27,650,267 automobiles, trucks and busses in operation all over the globe. This was an increase of 3,176,638 over January 1, 1926.

The United States had in operation 80 per cent of the total, or 22,137,334 machines. The United Kingdom was second with 1,023,610, France third with 891,000 and Canada fourth with 826,918. NEW PLANE WILL SEEK NUNGESSER

Source of "Flares" Will be Hunted in Attempt to Solve Flyers' Fate

QUEBEC (Que.) June 18. (AP)—A hydroairplane owned by the Fairchild Air Service arrived in Chicoutimi today to fly over the district, following the most recent check-up of the "flares" seen in that neighborhood and thought by some to have been sent up by the missing French aviators, Nungesser and Coli.

The latest explanation of the lights—that they were made by the great power plant at Chute aux Galets, east of Chicoutimi—was proved incorrect by tests made last night.

The lights, it is said, were reported in the opposite direction from the power plant and dam.

Conference Hears of Vastly Higher Building Costs Under Unions

Presentation of Comparative Data Features Close of Bay City Sessions

SAN FRANCISCO, June 18. (Exclusive)—Differences in the costs of building construction under the American plan, or open shop, and under the unionized, or closed shop, with a wide margin in favor of the open shop, featured the closing session today of the eleventh semi-annual American Plan Open Shop Conference at the Palace Hotel here.

Pierce Wright, representative from Detroit, presented data showing that building costs run from 26 to 27 per cent cheaper under American-plan conditions than under its opposite. His figures, he explained, were a group average of engineering experiments made in Detroit, Cleveland and Pittsburgh.

Wallace M. Alexander, speaking of industrial conditions in San Francisco, told the more than 100 representatives that "all the American plan is trying to do in San Francisco, as elsewhere throughout the nation, is to maintain a balance of power with respect to both the rights of labor and the rights of capital.

NEW ORDER CITED

"In the past" he said, "we had union domination, but we are working today under a new order animated by a spirit which has risen here."

He explained that the Industrial Association of this city is not opposed to unionism, recognizing, as it does, the right of workingmen to organize and to strive legitimately for their own interests.

As an exemplification an illuminating searchlight of the actual working dress of the American plan was furnished by Harry Chandler of Los Angeles.

"The American-plan open shop denies to no working man any right properly assured him by a labor union," he stated.

"It does not deny him the right to organize for his own benefit nor to collectively bargain with employers for better hours or better wages.

"It does not deny him the right to strike if he sees fit to strike.

"It guarantees him, on the other hand, the rewards of his own initiative and skill."

HUGE MASS OF BILLS

Among the reports submitted was one by E. T. Lay of Jacksonville, Fla., on labor legislation in the United States, in which he pointed out that so far this year organized labor has introduced into the legislatures of forty-three States approximately 60,000 bills and resolutions, out of which approximately 16,000 were enacted.

"California, Illinois, Massachusetts and Ohio were scenes of the most desperate legislative struggles this year," he said.

As contrasted with 1925, his figures revealed the filing then of approximately 10,000 less bills and resolutions, or a total of 50,000, of which 11,000 were enacted.

Jacksonville, Fla., was named as the city for the next meeting, which will be conducted in February, 1928.

HUNT ON FOR ARMS SHIP

Gunboat Eludes Coast Guard

Mystery Craft Believed in Offing for War Munitions Captured on Highway

Federal Agents Investigate Probable Plot to Aid Southern Revolution

Believed to be commanded by revolutionary forces from a southern republic seeking to load contraband arms near Los Angeles a mysterious ship was sought by United States Coast Guard cutters off San Pedro last night, following the discovery yesterday morning by Department of Justice agents of $50,000 worth of munitions of war en route here on trucks from San Francisco.

Despite every effort, however, no trace of the alien vessel was found up to a late hour and the belief was expressed that the revolutionary crew had become frightened and fled toward the open sea.

Existence of the ship came to the knowledge of the government men when a truck and trailer carrying machine guns, rifles and other munitions of war were captured by Department of Justice agents on the highway near Buellton, forty miles north of Santa Barbara, and five men placed under surveillance.

ARMS WERE TO BE LOADED

Although Lucien Wheeler, in charge of the Department of Justice agents, here, refused to reveal all the details of the gun plot in the hope of making other arrests, it was learned that admissions made by those captured revealed that the arms were to have been loaded on a ship near San Pedro.

Whether the arms were intended for Mexican revolutionists or for some Central American country was not indicated by the government authorities but reports were that four of the men overtaken on the truck were Mexicans.

The ship believed to be involved in the Federal investigation did not put in an appearance despite the fact that a load of arms and ammunition was deposited at an appointed place for the expected seamen.

Agent Wheeler explained that no overt act will have been committed until an attempt is made to take the munitions out of this country and thus the men on the truck were not arrested, although their every move was watched and every effort was made to locate the ship to which they were consigned.

TOTAL IN MILLIONS

Before arriving in Los Angeles, the men in charge of the truck are reported to have telephoned the president of a San Francisco Arms Company at a Los Angeles hotel and asked for instructions and were informed they would proceed to Los Angeles Harbor and wait for the expected ship.

The name of the San Francisco man was not divulged by the government agents but it was rumored that his name indicated the arms plot to be the largest one uncovered in recent years. Another report declared the total amount of the contraband arms shipments would reach beyond the $3,000,000 mark and it is believed the revolutionary ship may already have aboard several other consignments picked up at other points.

MUNITIONS LISTED

Listed in the shipment discovered by the Department of Justice agents early yesterday were the following infantry equipment: Nine machine guns, 96 Luger automatic pistols, 16,000 rounds of Luger ammunition, 113,000 rounds of 7 millimeter cartridges,

BERLIN-BAY CITY HOP NEAR

German Ace Will Aim at New Record in Flight From Rhineland to Pacific

BERLIN, June 18. (AP)—Inspired by the successes of the trans-Atlantic flights of Lindbergh and Chamberlin, interests in Germany now are planning to establish a new world's record crossing to the west, to San Francisco and return, with the name of Antom Koennecke, German World War ace, definitely linked up with the project.

It developed today that Koennecke quietly was given a leave of absence from Lufthansa, the German Aerial League, recently for three months during which he is expected to organize a Berlin-New York-San Francisco nonstop flight.

While his backers have not been divulged, it generally is assumed that he will fly for the Rohrbach Works, whose latest three-motor models attracted much attention at the Copenhagen international aviation exhibition.

FAST TIME DESIRED

The plane, in which Koennecke hopes to reach San Francisco in sixty hours, taking thirty-five hours for the crossing to New York, will carry sufficient fuel for seventy hours and it is hoped, will be capable of maintaining an average speed of slightly more than 200 kilometers (124 miles) an hour. The plane, which will be all metal and will have three motors, will be so equipped that it can start and land both on land and water.

To escape questioning about his plans, Koennecke quietly slipped from Berlin for the week-end during which he wants to formulate further plans which now call for a hop-off on July 25, next, with the arrival in San Francisco on July 28. The plane would remain in the latter city only four days before starting on a return flight. The dates, however, may be advanced. A relief pilot will be carried as well as two passengers, one of them an unnamed industrialist who is said to be financing the venture.

Koennecke is known as one of the most reliable and daring of the pilots in Germany and always has been selected by Lufthansa to fly routes which are difficult from a meteorological viewpoint. One of the most difficult stretches in the German air service is the Berlin-Munich route by way of the Thuringian Forest. Here fogs and clouds baffle most pilots, but Koennecke never has failed to bring in his machine on schedule time.

Koennecke started out in the war as a private, but showed such coolheadedness and ability as an aviator that he was promoted at one jump from private to lieutenant, which is a promotion almost unheard of in the German army. During the war Koennecke, who is now 35 years of age and is married, was credited with victories over forty-six planes and was rewarded with the highest military decoration.

After the war Koennecke, like most other aces whose military careers ended with Germany's disarmament, turned to commercial flying.

The Ministry of Communications has approved of the prospective attempt by Koennecke to fly to San Francisco next month, and it is announced that the government is prepared to lend the undertaking all possible support.

NEW DRIVE ON PEKING REPORTED

Feng and Chiang Declared to Have Joined Forces With 500,000 Men in Push

(Copyright, 1927, by Chicago Tribune)

SHANGHAI, June 18. (Exclusive)—Oliver J. Todd, graduate of Michigan University, who is engaged in extensive reclamation projects on the Yangtse River in behalf of the Nationalist government, said today that as a result of the recent military conference held at Cheng Chow, Honan Province, Gen. Feng Yu-Hsiang and Gen. Chiang Kai-Shek have joined their armies, totaling nearly 500,000 and now are driving on Peking. He predicted the ousting of Gen. Chang Tso-Lin within sixty days.

Mr. Todd said the Fengtien forces rapidly are evacuating Shantung Province, and are trying to make a stand on a line 100 miles long, extending from Chenting Fu, located on the Peking-Hankow Railroad, to Tehchow, located in Northern Shantung on the Tien-tins-Pukon line.

FIND MAY YIELD KEY TO LETTERS

Sinai Inscriptions Probable Beginning of Alphabet

Tablets Now Being Studied by Archeologists

Discovery Made by Harvard, Michigan Expedition

JERUSALEM, June 18. (AP)—The recent discovery on Mt. Serabit of fragments of the mysterious "Sinai inscriptions" which have puzzled archeologists for years was the reward of painstaking work and a difficult journey into the interior of Sinai peninsula by Profs. Kirsopp Lake and Robert Blake of Harvard University.

The professors, members of the Harvard-Michigan expedition, had great difficulty in reaching Mt. Serabit, which is eleven days' camel ride from the coast and is in an almost inaccessible part of the region.

After taking the important find to Cairo, where the inscriptions were deposited in the museum there, the professors set to work in an attempt to decipher them. Dr. Butin, director of the American School of Oriental Research in Jerusalem, likewise is engaged in deciphering the inscriptions.

The missing link between the language of pictures—hieroglyphics—and the language of letters—the alphabet—may lie in an interpretation of the so-called "Moses inscription" as the Sinai inscriptions on stone slabs are known.

The Sinai slabs originally were found in 1906 by Sir Flinders Petri, the noted British archeologist, but were not deciphered until 1916, when Prof. Alan Gardiner, the British authority, deciphered one word, "ba alat," which means "mistress." In [illegible] the German archeologist, Prof. Grimmer, gave out a complete translation of the slabs, saying that they referred to the finding of Moses in the bull rushes. Both Profs. Gardiner and Petri, however, declared that Prof. Grimmer had misunderstood scratchings on the slabs for letters and that the translation was worthless.

Archeologists say that the one word "ba alat" shows that the people of the Sinai peninsula turned hieroglyphics or word pictures into a sort of alphabet. This is considered of great significance because from these people the Phoenicians or Aramaics may have derived their alphabet, which they passed on to the Greeks, from whom was eventually derived the alphabet in use today.

News of the discovery of fragments of the Sinai inscriptions was received in Boston on May 27 in a short message from Prof. Lake to the Boston Herald. Harvard University authorities declared that the inscriptions might throw an entirely new light on Moses and biblical history and might furnish the key to the baffling characters of the strange half-Egyptian, half-Semetic language which flourished nearly 3000 years ago.

BRITISH EXPERTS ATTACH IMPORTANCE TO DISCOVERY

LONDON, June 18. (AP)—Experts at the British Museum attach considerable importance to the find of the Harvard-Michigan expedition to the Sinai peninsula because it may settle the controversy between the British archeologists, Flinders Petri and Alan Gardiner and Prof. Grimmer of Germany, over the translation of the "Moses inscriptions."

HONORED AT BANQUET

Tonight, at a banquet of 1500 of St. Louis and Missouri notables in the Chase Hotel additional praise and honors were heaped on the tired young man who was nearing the end of four continuous weeks of public acclaim.

Gov. Baker was there with the new commission in the Missouri National Guard, elevating the youth who flew away as a flight commanding captain to a colonelcy, the highest grade in the State aviation forces.

Dwight Davis, Secretary of War, was ready to hand over the United States Army Reserve Commission recently signed by President Coolidge. It also is for the rank of colonel.

Others listed as speakers included Harry B. Hawes, United States Senator for Missouri, Mayor Miller and civic leaders, with Col. Lindbergh himself to conclude the ceremony.

Tomorrow will be another full day for Lindbergh but after that he will have a chance to get some well-deserved, and, judging from his appearance, badly needed, rest.

For the first time since he landed at Washington from the U.S.S. Memphis he found more hours for himself than on any other day. With the first appointment on his final day's public acclaim set for 3:30 p.m., and appearance at Art Hill, St. Louis's historic beauty spot where it is expected more than 100,000 persons will gather, he had fifteen hours for himself after the banquet tonight. A visit to St. Louis' outdoor municipal opera tomorrow night will conclude the formalities.

MOTHER THERE, TOO

After that the young colonel has nothing ahead but the following of his own will.

A usually happy and smiling, but sometimes nervous and perturbed background figure throughout Col. Lindbergh's home-town reception, just as she was at Washington and New York, has been his mother, Mrs. Evangeline Lodge Lindbergh, Detroit school teacher.

Shying away from photographers and directing reporters to "ask my son," she has denied herself any of the public's acclaim, other than that thrust upon her when she reluctantly appeared in public near the flyer.

Today she rode in an automobile behind that carrying Col. Lindbergh. Once she broke her reserve when she smiled and waved her hand in response to the shouted demand of a film photographer.

After the parade she gave this estimate of the home-town's tribute to her son:

"Washington was decorous, New York was tumultuous, but St. Louis was tender."

SAME SPIRIT

The same American spirit that sent Lewis and Clark out to explore and conquer the West, sent Col. Charles A. Lindbergh on his epochal flight from New York to Paris, Dwight F. Davis, Secretary of War, declared at the dinner given in honor of the intrepid flyer here tonight.

"If civilization is to advance, there must be the lone pioneer," said Secretary Davis in paying a glowing tribute to what he termed "our dauntless Viking of the air, our unofficial ambassador of good will, who has come home."

"Like the great explorers of old, he has, undaunted by perils, conquered space and distance. But unlike them, this youthful David has vanquished the giant Time as well.

"Like the early explorers, Col. Lindbergh was not lured by hope of gain. He has shown the world that romance is not dead—that the spirit of adventure, which has carved the nations from the wilderness, still lives.

"And with it all, he has shown that quality which marks true greatness, self-effacing modesty. His whole character, his every action, has been inspiration and an example to the youth of the whole world.

MEN WHO DARE

"It will be some time before air routes connect America with Europe as do the sea routes of today, but when that day comes, as surely it will, the name of Charles Lindbergh will be linked inevitably with those who have traversed the unknown sea, who have found their way through the wilderness to open new worlds to man, who have brought the elements under man's control—men who have dared, and in the daring, having won imperishable fame.

"That this most conspicuously daring act of time will have an immediate and practical effect upon the development of aviation is so apparent that I shall not enlarge upon it. May it hasten the day of everlasting peace."

Col. Lindbergh's feat of spanning the Atlantic by plane has shown clearly the possibilities of commercial aviation, Gov. Baker of Missouri declared in his address of welcome to the famous Missourian.

"Our Missouri boy," said Gov. Baker, "by his wonderful flight from New York to Paris has made history and shown to the world that America has taken first rank in the matter of aviation. He has shown the world another means of transportation, and transportation is one of the greatest factors in the development of civilization."

OSCAR LINDBERG BALKS AT EXPLOITATION

CLEVELAND, June 18. (AP)—Oscar P. Lindberg, Cleveland tool inspector, named as president of the "Lindberg Aeronautics Corporation," recently incorporated in Ohio, said today that he will seek legal advice on some action to force the company to disband.

He declared he had declined to permit his name to be used when a promoter for the corporation approached him shortly after the trans-Atlantic flight of Col. Charles A. Lindbergh.

DELAWARE REFUSES LINDBERGH APPELLATIONS

DOVER (Del.) June 18. (AP)—The State of Delaware, through the office of Secretary of State, has refused to allow any company to incorporate with the name of "Lindbergh" after the trans-Atlantic aviator.

For several weeks it was learned today from Secretary of State Grantland, a number of companies have applied for charters with "Lindbergh" as the prominent portion of their title. Grantland refused them letters of incorporation.

STATE SECRETARIES SELECT SACRAMENTO

SACRAMENTO, June 18. (AP)—Sacramento today was selected as the 1927 convention city of the National Association of Secretaries of State. Word to this effect was received by Secretary of State Frank C. Jordan from the executive committee of the association. The convention will be held at the State capital next September 6, 7 and 8, which dates fall during the week of the California State Fair. It will be the first time the association has ever met in California.

AROUND-AUSTRALIA FLYERS TAKE OFF

SYDNEY, June 18. (Exclusive)—Two airmen, C. T. Ulm and Mr. Kingsford, left here this morning in a Bristol touring plane in an attempt to lower the record for a flight around Australia. They hope to reduce the time from twenty-two days to less than eleven.

PARLEY PRAISED BY COOLIDGE

showed, in his welcome to the editors, how his mind has taken on a new perspective, geographically, at least, even in his few days of residence in the Far West.

TALKS AS WESTERNER

For he welcomed them to South Dakota and the West as one who belonged here. Tourists by the hundreds took advantage of this informal, extremely democratic day at the President's lodge, to get close to him, and all secret service and military rules and precautions were forgotten as the editors and the westerners crowded round him, photographed him, showed him their babies and gossiped as in a large family party. The President had his feet on green grass, standing at the head of the natural amphitheater which slopes from his porch to the creek, and stood there as he made his brief address.

He said:

"It is a great pleasure for me to welcome you in South Dakota. I have only been here a few days, but my own welcome was so hearty and so many privileges have been extended to me by the good people of the State that I feel that I am authorized to greet you as a South Dakotan.

"I am glad that you are having this opportunity to look over this wonderful country of ours and particularly the State of South Dakota. Nowhere will you find more inspiring and more magnificent scenery. In other States you will find more industries and they can also boast of longer history, but I have never seen anything which excels what you will see here.

HOPES FOR RESULTS

"We are many of us quite a ways from home. I am 1800 miles from my base in Washington, but I am as close to the business of the country as when I am in Washington. Here I daily receive reports and advices.

"Among the dispatches which I received this morning were several relating to the opening of the conference on naval disarmament in Geneva on Monday. I shall follow the activities there with great interest as from that conference I hope our country and all the nations interested in the world will receive great benefits."

The President found it impossible to attend a buffalo barbecue which had been arranged for the editors, but sent word for them to come to the lodge. The place was thick with tourist cars and busses and the President shook hands with more than 500 persons. He seemed to enjoy it thoroughly. Some remarked that Mrs. Coolidge who stood in the reception line with him, was getting sunburned.

"Yes, her nose is burned. She's been fishing with me," said the President. He went out early in the morning, and was rewarded by four small fish.

The editorial party was managed by Herman Roe, president, and among the editors present were Gov. McMullen of Nebraska and former Gov. McKelvie of Nebraska. Gov. McMullen has been a critic of the President and had a chat with him on the porch after the reception. Gov. Bulow of South Dakota also was present.

Now that the President has made his first contrats with the soil and the people here, political strategists are finding it a keen move on his part, whether it is to be regarded in the light of his future candidacy or merely as his way of getting a better grip on the farm-relief situation in Congress.

He is thawing perceptibly under this hot sun. Starting with hip boots, he came today to the wide felt hat of the West which is called a ten-gallon hat. He put it on to go fishing, and was the subject of frank comment from Mrs. Coolidge.

"Well it will keep the sun off, anyway," said the President. And the sun is very hot along these streams and valleys in the middle of the day. The air, however, is dry, and in the shade it is always cool.

Decimo Club's Affairs Still Under Scrutiny

SAN FRANCISCO, June 18. (Exclusive)—Although the details were not made public for the time being, Asst. Dist.-Atty. O'Connor and Deputy Corporation Commissioner Ellis learned enough of the affairs of the Decimo Club from subpoenaed members at a private conference today to warrant another meeting next week before action is taken.

The meetings are to determine if prosecution is in order for violation of State laws. The Decimo Club, so far as has been learned to date, was organized to promote better working and living conditions for small wage earners. Chauncey Tramutolo, acting as attorney for the local organization, and L. J. Waldear, national contact man, are among those who will attend the next session.

An element of grim humor entered the munitions list when, stowed away under the heavier material, two gallons of iodine and five rolls of gauze bandage were found.

NAVAL SESSION AGENDA BROAD

Saito's call and greeted Walter Bridgeman.

Tomorrow the Americans will entertain the British and Japanese delegations at a reception in the Hotel Bergues and an elaborate buffet to get acquainted.

As chief delegate of the inviting power, Mr. Gibson will assume the chairmanship at Monday afternoon's meeting, and it is expected the British and Japanese will ask him to preside over the conference.

AMERICAN PLAN

The representatives of the three powers then will make pronouncements and Mr. Gibson is expected to submit the American plan for limiting cruisers, destroyers and submarines.

The French informers, Count Clandel and Capt. Deluze, and the Italian observer, Commander Ruspoli, are welcome to attend every session of the conference, from the plenary meetings to the most secret gatherings of the trio of delegates.

"Italy and France are invited to participate or take part in any measure they see fit, and they will be entitled to assist in all the meetings," said Mr. Gibson.

Since the naval parley will be conducted entirely in English—the first time in any European conference—the French informers are expected to have difficulty in carrying out their task, as Count Claudel is ignorant of English and Capt. Deluze has only a limited ability to understand it.

Mr. Bridgeman, on arriving this morning, declined to receive newspaper men, but he intimated that he might talk a moment or two with the English pressmen only.

"I am an innocent abroad," Mr. Bridgeman remarked laughingly.

Admiral Aubrey Smith has been in Geneva several days following the League of Nations Council, which ended yesterday, and for the preparatory disarmament work.

ALL TOPICS OPEN

Sir Austen Chamberlain, British Foreign Secretary, is leaving today for a fortnight's vacation at Zermatt, Switzerland, and Dr. Gustav Stresemann, German Foreign Minister, leaves for Berlin tonight.

All phases of limitation of naval armaments may be discussed at the forthcoming conference, Mr. Bridgeman, the British delegate, today told the English press.

Even the question of capital ships and maximum tonnage of cruisers fixed at Washington in 1921 may come up for revision during the negotiations, the British delegate indicated.

"We are hopeful that an agreement on all questions and further limitation of armaments will be realized," said Mr. Bridgeman.

He declined to state whether Great Britain intends to propose reducing the maximum tonnage of cruisers below 10,000 tons, fixed at Washington, and he refused to say whether the Admiralty intends to propose a 20,000-ton capital-ship limit instead of 35,000 tons as established at Washington. AMERICA, ITS DANDER UP, VOWS REVENGE ON RIVER

Entire Nation Determined to Curb Mighty Mississippi Henceforth and End Flood Menace

This is the twelfth and last article by Harris Dickson, famous southern writer, portraying the horror and suffering caused by the great Mississippi River flood.

BY HARRIS DICKSON

[Copyright, 1927, in all countries by North American Newspaper Alliance.]

VICKSBURG (Miss.) June 18. (Exclusive)—"What are we going to do about it?" We are a forward-looking people, else there would have been no United States of America. When things go wrong, we find out what's to be done, and then do it. Once upon a time an English king and Commons fell into a snarl, and somebody asked the opinion of Oliver Cromwell. Sententiously old Noll replied, "Things will have to get much worse before the get any better."

Which well expresses our national attitude toward Father Mississippi. For generations we have rocked along, dallied and temporized with Father's outrageous misbehavior; but his latest running amuck makes him insufferable. Things have got so much wore that we can't put up with that pestiferous river for another minute. Which means that he shall mend his ways.

The fight has been long and at times discouraging. As the case first appeared upon our docket it stood, A. Farmer vs. Father Mississippi. In the beginning, at every trial, A. Farmer lost and lost. More farmers helped him, and lost. Parishes and counties helped one another and lost. States joined in, and lost. Then the United States became a party to the litigation, and we began to win.

Again and again we successfully fought off the devastating waters. But, because of such increased property and population in the lowlands, a single failure now costs us more than all our previous defeats. Americans do not relish working to build up a home, then having some tyrannical power snatch it away. After being patient for a century, Uncle Sam has got his head so that he won't lose another decision in this cause.

The United States of America vs. Father Mississippi.

The efforts of man to protect himself against this overwhelming monster began more than 200 years ago a few individual and feeble protests. But, like the American government itself, this protest has not continued feeble.

Today we have a strong levee system, replacing the flimsy string of potato ridges. The best river engineers regarded them as stout enough to withstand any known flood, or to do just a little better. And our embankments would probably have held against the highest recorded water: might have conducted the deluges of 1882 and 1897 safely to the Gulf.

Although these high, thick, well-sodded levees seem so very competent to protect us, engineer authorities realize that Father had never yet exerted his maximum power for harm. Never yet had he called upon all his tributaries to rise at once and join him. But this season, by the simultaneous overflow of every rivulet from New York to Montana, their united floods rushed southward and broke some of our levees.

IN MOUTH OF FUNNEL

Glance at a map of Father's vast watershed. Note that our lands lie in the mouth of an enormous funnel. Then remember that every creek and gutter from Western Pennsylvania to Wyoming empties its water into the top of that funnel. We get the drainge from thirty-two States.

No matter how brave a Louisiana farmer may be, no matter how much Arkansas kicks and cusses; no matter how hard the Mississippian may fight, two-thirds of this Union combines its flood to drown us. So we do earnestly insist that those who dump water into the funnel should help to minimize its disastrous results.

After every overflow, while the season may be too late to plant cotton, or the land too wet, every acre of it sprouts an abundant crop of theorists. Every farmer who has perched in a tree and watched the flood go rushing by has thought out a perfect plan for Mississippi River control. Each barber urges his scheme which will make future inundations quite impossible.

HAS PLAN HIMSELF

Far be it from me to jeer at anybody's plan. Many of these men are most sincere and public-spirited. Of course, the crank always abideth in our midst. Besides, I have a plan myself. It's a peach. And my admiring friends would allow Uncle Sam to sponsor it, if the whole project had not been plagiarized by the Mayors' convention at Chicago.

To a crude comprehension it appears that river control is an engineering problem. Last week I developed a painful tooth, and went to a dentist. I would not have permitted the first-honor man in the United States Engineer Corps to prank with that aching tooth. Neither would I delegate our Mississippi problem to the softest-spoken dentist that ever whispered, "It won't hurt you a bit."

We built the Panama Canal. Another engineering job. A whopper. And, as I now recall, the plans were not drawn exclusively by dentists, lawyers, oculists and veterinarians. Men trained in that specialty did the job.

SUGGESTIONS WELCOME

Uncle Sam's present notion is to hear from everybody who has any reasonable suggestion, levees, outlets, spillways, reservoirs, reforestation, whatever may tend toward the one grand purpose. Submit all that data to a competent commission which shall settle upon the method. Then get a bill through Congress for the money, and go to it.

At such a complicated crisis nobody foresees in detail how repetitions of the disaster will be effectually prevented. But we all know somewhat of the American fighting spirit. Old Father Mississippi has bedeviled this nation beyond endurance, and now seems to have rather the best of it.

But suppose our first 1,000,000 men in France had been slaughtered overnight. What would we have done? Quit? Not much. Answer—10,000,000 men. So if the forces now arrayed against this river be too weak, we'll double them, we'll multiply by ten.

It all simmers down to this: On these rich alluvial lands American grit has founded a civilization; and some way, somehow, by the great Jehovah, American genius will maintain it.

AUTO RUNS 59 MILES ON GALLON OF GAS

Automobile engineers who worked for years in an effort to reduce gasoline consumption have found the solution in a marvelous invention that fits all cars. An actual test made by one of the engineers showed 59 miles on a gallon of gas. Thousands of car owners have already installed this new invention. They not only report amazing gas savings but are also surprised to find quicker pick-up, instant starting, smoother running motors and disappearance of carbon. E. Oliver, 1041-2640 W. Winnebago St., Milwaukee, Wisc., for a limited time is offering a free device to those who will help introduce it. He also needs men everywhere to make over $100 weekly in their own territory taking care of local business. Write him at once for free sample and big money-making offer.—[Advertisement.

HOOVER MAKES FLOOD SURVEY

Estimates Mississippi Loss Up to $400,000,000

Says Damage Will be Shared by Entire Country

Bold Plan to Prevent New Disaster Advised

NEW ORLEANS, June 18. (AP)—The New Orleans States today published a statement in which Secretary Hoover says that the economic loss from the Mississippi flood probably will run from $200,000,000 to $400,000,000.

"In human terms this Mississippi River flood of 1927 means 750,000 persons flooded, 600,000 driven from their homes or made dependent upon relief," the statement said. "The economic loss will probably run from $200,000,000 to $400,000,000.

"That 1,500,000 of our countrymen should continue to live in such jeopardy is unthinkable.

"America will spend more than $3,000,000 in flood relief in one form or another this year, and that is but a small part.

"Every worker, every farmer, every investor in the United States will bear some part of the shock.

ADVISES BOLD PLAN

"All engineering plans for flood control of the river must be revised against any possible combination of floods from the tributaries.

"The main thing is a plan bold and strong enough to deal with the question in finality. For we must live with the river for thousands of years yet.

"As an engineer I have a technical interest in this problem. As a citizen my mind is filled with recollections of suffering and misery I have seen.

"The levee system must be revised and strengthened. Above all we must have some safety devices to relieve the strain on the levee system in periods of super-floods and make them absolutely sure once and for all.

SPILLWAYS PROPOSED

"Spillways in Louisiana are proposed. There are approximately three spillway locations. The Atchafalaya River, some spot on the Mississippi east bank above New Orleans, opening direct into Lake Ponchartrain. Some spot on the Mississippi east bank below New Orleans, approximately where the levee was dynamited at Caernarvon. Reservoirs in the upper reaches of all tributaries are also proposed.

"I am convinced that our engineers can develop plans that will prevent the flood. I believe that we can give security to the people living below the levees.

"We cannot abolish the levee system. We can strengthen the levees and supplement them strongly with safety devices of one kind or another."

FLOOD HELP NEED GROWS MORE ACUTE

Los Angeles People Urged to Send Contributions for Aiding Sufferers

The need in the Mississippi Valley flood area is increasing and The Times, which started the fund for relief, urges all who are able to do so to contribute any amount as quickly and generously as possible. The American Legion in Van Nuys has received word that the carload of baby lima beans, sent to the flood sufferers by the post, has arrived at Memphis and has been forwarded to New Orleans for distribution. Another carload will be dispatched soon. The Times fund at 3 p.m. yesterday stood at $170,819.65 with several contributions untabulated. Donations should be made payable to The Times Relief Fund and mailed to The Times, Los Angeles. If preferred they may be sent directly to the Red Cross, Transportation Building, Los Angeles.

STEINWAY
THE INSTRUMENT OF THE IMMORTALS

The Definite Gift of Permanence

...for the bride or graduate

Why do the greatest pianists, singers and conductors choose the STEINWAY?

When you learn that all the major improvements marking the progress of the piano were originated and brought to perfection in the STEINWAY workshops—that it requires five years and eleven months of preparation and construction to build a STEINWAY—that the durability of the STEINWAY resists, decade after decade, the most strenuous practice and hardest usage—you can account for the respect and admiration accorded it.

But when you hear its singing golden mezzo tones . . . the brilliant clarity of its treble . . . the true depth and mellowness of its bass . . . you learn the real reason for its overwhelming success. To your hand and spirit the answer of the STEINWAY is quick and sure.

It returns a full dividend of pleasure and delight and to this is added the definite "gift" of permanence.

DRY HEADS FACE LOSS OF POSTS

New Law May Force Several Administrators to Quit

Six Years' Experience as Executive Required

Buffalo Director Steps Out; Conference Called

WASHINGTON, June 18. (AP)—Several prohibition administrators probably will be forced to resign by a requirement of the law reorganizing the enforcement service which requires six years' executive experience for those holding the posts, Prohibition Commissioner Doran said today.

His statement was prompted by the resignation of Roscoe C. Harper, administrator for Northern and Western New York, who asserted the law "would knock out all but three administrators now in the service." Mr. Doran said "only a few men" will be affected.

The situation will be discussed at a conference here July 11, next, which will be attended by enforcement heads from every section of the country. The law reorganizing the enforcement machinery was passed at the last session of Congress. It calls for civil service status for the personnel. Thousands have entered for the examinations for the enforcement jobs.

Lincoln C. Andrews, who is soon to retire as director of the Treasury Department's prohibition policies, inaugurated the administration system in enforcement. It was said at the Treasury several weeks ago that rezoning of the country for enforcement work was under consideration. It had been suggested that the present five geographic zones be divided into three great areas, the eastern, central and western. This subject also will be discussed at the approaching conference.

ASSISTANT AT BUFFALO ALSO RESIGNS

BUFFALO (N. Y.) June 18. (AP)—All but three of the twenty-two prohibition administrators throughout the United States face disqualification under recently enacted civil service regulations governing the prohibition department, Judge Roscoe C. Harper, administrator for the Third District, declared today in announcing his resignation.

Informed by the Federal Civil Service Commission that he failed to qualify for the post because of lack of six years' previous experience in an executive capacity, Judge Harper decided to resign immediately and resume the practice of law in New York City. Capt. Leo C. Regan, assistant administrator, also tendered his resignation. Both took effect tonight.

In announcing his resignation, Judge Harper stated that unofficially he believed the ruling will similarly affect eighteen other administrators, none of whom, so far as he knew, had had the necessary experience.

MEXICO MAY PROSECUTE OIL DRILLER

Company's Disobedience of Order to Stop Operations Likely to Bring Action

MEXICO CITY, June 18. (Exclusive)—Legal action is likely to be taken against the Mexican Gulf Oil Company as a result of the company's disobedience to an order issued by the petroleum department of the Ministry of Industry, Commerce and Labor, demanding that the oil company stop operations on its holdings in the Tampico field, according to a report rendered by the ministry's consulting attorney to the office of the Attorney-General for decision.

If unprosecuted, according to the complaining attorney, the case would establish an important precedent affecting the government's control over oil companies.

The government, through the complaint, charges that the company in question has no right to drill on the Tampico properties. Disobedience to the ministry's order is punishable with six month's imprisonment, and the breaking of official government seals placed on the wells in dispute with at least three year's imprisonment.

The ministry's attorney states that his investigation warrants legal action by the government and word is awaited from the Attorney-General whether or not the findings are to be upheld by law.

Witness Tells How Woman Was Beaten With Strap

Incidents at House of David Revealed on Stand

Divorce Suit Filed by Former Israelite Member

ST. JOSEPH (Mich.) June 18. (Exclusive)—The fifth week of testimony in the suit in which the State seeks to have the House of David Israelite colony closed as a nuisance ended today. Augusta Fortney, who was considered as one of King Benjamin Purnell's favorites, is expected to take the stand on Monday. She was the first girl to sue King Ben, revealing conditions at the colony.

Mrs. Estelle Meldrum Ranft, a resident of Niles, Mich., was on the stand today. She testified that Cora Mooney, one of the women "pillars," beat a member, Eliza Murphy, with a leather strap, for accusing "King" Ben of immorality. Fifteen dollars' worth of clothing was her portion, Mrs. Ranft said, in all the seventeen years she lived at the colony. Other witnesses have testified that the Murphy girl committed suicide at High Island later.

Because she did not want to be separated from her husband, Thomas Meldrum, Mrs. Ranft testified she consented to come to the colony in 1903. Mr. Meldrum died at the colony in 1914. They lived together at the colony, she testified, only a month before being separated.

In 1923 Mrs. Ranft in a bill of complaint filed against the House of David in Federal court at Grand Rapids charged her own daughter, Edith Meldrum, with assisting Benjamin in his immoral practices.

Mary Ranger, who is declared to have led girls to Ben Purnell's chambers for the purpose of initiating them into the "purification rites" said to have been instituted by the Eden "king," has been made defendant in a suit for divorce. The suit was filed by Thomas Atkins, one of the recent witnesses in the State's dissolution case. Atkins is a former Israelite.

Atkins charges he married Mary Ranger September 5, 1914, at the colony after a threat of investigation followed charges of misconduct against Purnell.

NAMELESS GIRL SLAVE OF KIDNAPER

Beaten and Driven to Hard Labor by Man Who Stole Her from Russian Home

FAIRFIELD (Cal.) June 18. (Exclusive)—A 16-year-old girl who does not know her own name is the victim of a kidnaper, has no status as an American citizen and no relatives nearer than Russia, today claimed the attention of county officials.

According to Mrs. Rose Kellock, probation officer, the girl was smuggled into the United States from Russia in 1923, probably by way of Tia Juana. Her smuggler is asserted to have taken the girl to his ranch in the Russian colony near Elmira and to have forced her to work at hard labor for long hours, and to have beaten her with his fists and boards on frequent occasions.

The girl, who said she was brought to the United States without her parents' consent, sought refuge the 13th inst. with a neighbor, who notified Dist.-Atty. B. W. Dobbins.

Pending completion of the investigation ordered, the girl was placed in the detention home at Napa, and kept there until today, when she was taken to Vallejo by Solano probation officers.

A petition to have the girl designated a ward of the county was filed by Mrs. Kellock.

KNABE with the AMPICO

Lost in reverie, is ENID BENNETT (Mrs. Fred Niblo). But who would be, listening to the actual ing and personalities of the pianists of the concert world, marvelous Knabe Ampico?

GLORIA SWANSON, who portrays a prima donna in "The Love of Sunya", once planned a career on the operatic stage. Now she satisfies her love of good music with her Knabe Ampico, listening to the playing of the world's greatest pianists.

HAROLD LLOYD takes his music seriously. He's enjoying Rachmaninoff's "Prelude", on the Knabe Ampico. Rachmaninoff says the Ampico is the only instrument that can re-enact his playing with absolute faithfulness.

CONRAD NAGEL says: "My Knabe Ampico so thoroughly fills our need for music that we have no other instrument. Mrs. Nagel uses Ampico accompaniments for her vocal work and our Ampico library supplies us with every type of music to accompany the running of motion pictures—in our home".

MAY McAVOY hears a "little every day" on her Knabe Ampico. she's undecided which of the 135 made available by the Ampico she would rather hear first.

These are but a few of the noted film who rely on the KNABE-AMPICO, from Fitzgerald's, for home entertainment.

The KNABE with the AMPICO will change your entire idea of music in the home. it this week in our Music Rooms.

You can't blame BEN TURPIN for his aesthetic expression. He's listening to Adam Carroll of Paul Whiteman's Orchestra play the "Doll Dance" on his Knabe Ampico.

DOMINION IN FREE STEP

Canada Seeking Nation Status

Separate Delegations to be Sent to Geneva Naval Arms Conference

Victory to Have Important Results on Diplomacy of London

[Copyright, 1927, by Eugene J. Young.]

BY EUGENE J. YOUNG

NEW YORK, June 18. (Exclusive)—When the Arms Conference met in Washington in 1921 a distinguished world leader for peace was absent. Gen. Smuts, then the Premier of the South African Dominion, had raised the point that the British Dominions had become real nations through their membership in the League of Nations and that if South Africa was to send a delegation it must be invited directly by President Harding and not invited through London. The British Foreign Office and government would not concede the point. They held that "diplomatic unity" was essential to the empire and that the whole British delegation must be named by London. So Washington could not send an invitation direct to Smuts, even had it so desired, and Smuts remained away from the conference. South Africa was represented by Britishers.

Another conference for the limitation of navies is about to be held at Geneva, summoned by a President of the United States. Again the composition of the British imperial delegation has come into question. Canada refused this time to have any part in the proceedings unless she got a direct invitation from Washington and named her own delegation without the intervention of London. Ireland, South Africa and Australia backed up this attitude.

This time there is a different outcome. The London government decided it could not veto the demand of the dominions. So Washington was informed that separate invitations would not be objectionable; the invitations went out, and the dominion-nations will be represented in the Geneva conference by delegates who will speak for the dominions alone and not be accountable in any degree to London.

"REVOLUTION" CONTINUES

In the excitement over Lindbergh not much attention has been paid to this remarkable development in world affairs; but it deserves attention because it is a long step forward in that "bloodless revolution" which is steadily weakening the British Empire. Also it gives the British dominion-nations opportunity to take a much stronger position in diplomacy, and in particular a better chance to get into close touch with America and to support American policies in cases where such policies are preferred to those of London.

It follows on the action of South Africa in appointing a Minister for Foreign Affairs, who is to carry on an independent policy for that country as the Minister of Foreign Affairs at Dublin carries on Ireland's own policy at Washington, in the League of Nations and elsewhere. Canada and Australia have vested the control of their external affairs in their Premiers. All these ministers are responsible only to the Parliaments of their dominions. They recognize a common fealty to the British monarch, but this ruler must follow the "advice" of the respective ministries of the dominions in anything which affects them.

"The resulting situation may well puzzle the logician," says the outspoken Guardian of Manchester, Eng. "For what pretense is left of the unity of the Crown if the Crown may henceforth be advised by five different ministries in as many different ways—if the foreign policy of the King in one dominion may bear no relation to that of the King in another?"

To appreciate what has happened through the insistence of Canada it may be well to glance back over the stubborn contest which has led up to this incident. Its beginnings go back more than twenty years. When King Edward VII was making the deals in Europe and elsewhere which led up to the formation of the British-French-Russian Entente as an offset to the Triple Alliance the dominions became worried over the prospect of a European war and their involvement in it. As early as 1911 projects were on foot for some plan of consultation on foreign affairs which would meet their distrust of the London Foreign Office and British diplomacy in general.

When the dominions were drawn into the war they insisted on having a voice in the conduct of it and became members of the Imperial Defense Committee. At the end of the war they insisted on a share in the peace negotiations and took an active part in Paris. They became separate signers of the peace treaties and were made members of the League of Nations. They got pledges that they should be consulted in all future negotiations which might involve them in war.

DIFFICULTIES ARISE

But after the war things did not go as they expected. Lord Curzon, as Foreign Minister, ignored them in his negotiation of the Turkish treaty. Lloyd George and Winston Churchill undertook to involve them in a conflict with Turkey without consulting them in advance. In the London negotiations over German reparations they were given only a subsidiary part. The Locarno Treaty was made without their participation.

All this produced a state of strain between London and the dominions and the matter came to a head in the League of Nations, where the dominions were ranked as nations. Ireland, which had been made a free state with all the privileges enjoyed by Canada, forced the fighting. She filed with the League as a treaty the agreement with Britatin whereby she got her independence and served notice that in case of a dispute with London she would appeal to the League for arbitration.

Canada and other dominions followed suit by serving notice on the League that all business with them should be done directly instead of through the London Foreign Office. They established their own diplomatic representatives in Geneva and their League delegates did not hesitate to take a position contrary to Britain's in the League Assembly.

Foreign Secretary Chamberlain undertook to combat this tendency. In his first public utterance after taking the office he said, "The Foreign Secretary speaks in the name, not of Great Britain only, but of the British dominions beyond the seas, and it is his duty to preserve in word and act the diplomatic unity of the British Empire. . . . We must speak with one voice in the counsels of the world."

A note was sent to the League serving notice that it would not be permitted to pass on any agreement between parts of the empire and another note insisted that London alone was authorized to handle the foreign policies of the empire.

A similar position was taken when Ireland insisted on appointing a minister to Washington because Canada had the right to have such an envoy, although at the time Canada had not taken advantage of the right. Ambassador Howard notified the State Department that this minister should handle matters "exclusively relating to the Irish Free State" and "the arrangements would not denote any departure from the principle of the diplomatic unity of the empire."

UNITY FAILS TO WORK

But this diplomatic unity did not work out. The dominions simply served notice they would be bound by no negotiations of the London Foreign Office unless their Parliaments ratified any arrangements made. This made impossible any imperial policy unless a means could be found to get a joint agreement on big questions. Such an agreement was attempted in the imperial conference of last autumn. The action of Canada and the other dominions is the first test of the agreement then made.

What was attempted then, under the adroit Lord Balfour, was to give the dominions freedom and equality but to leave them bound to the Empire. For the first part the sweeping declaration was made that Britain and the dominions "were equal to each other and in no way subordinate one to the other in any aspect of their domestic or external affairs," that "each is now master of its destiny" and "subject to no compulsion whatsoever."

On the second object it was provided that in foreign relations a major share of responsibility should continue to rest with Britain. The various states were given the right to make treaties affecting their own affairs but were pledged to consult with their fellows on any project which might affect the interests of the others.

These naturally conflicting propositions have now come into conflict. The London Foreign Office and the Admiralty undertook to speak for the empire in the "three-power naval conference" which Mr. Coolidge has summoned. It was natural they should, for practically the whole of the naval defence of the empire falls on Britain, and the dominions, particularly Canada, have been reluctant to share that expense. But the dominions, as masters of their own destiny, have decided they want to say something for themselves in this matter and so they have insisted on their own delegations. What they want to say has not developed, but it may have a very serious effect on the naval conference, for they may not agree with Britain's policies and may thus block any agreement.

And do not overlook this point: All of the dominions are showing a desire for closer relations with America. As ex-Ambassador Geddes once told the British, Washington shows a better understanding of their problems than London. The freer the dominions are to act for themselves, the more likely they are to drift into the American orbit—especially as they all want money to develop their great territories.

BALE OF COTTON AUCTIONED OFF

Mrs. Chamberlin Obtains $4660 for First American Lot in Germany

[Copyright, 1927, by Chicago Tribune.]

BREMEN, June 18.—The sum of $4660 was paid for the first American bale of cotton from this year's crop to arrive at Bremen, when it was auctioned off yesterday by Mrs. Clarence D. Chamberlin for charity. The cotton exchange itself paid this huge sum for what ordinarily sells for $100. The previous high record was $2620.

UNION BANKERS SEEK WAY OUT

Institutions of Brotherhood Likely to be Merged

Outside Interests Will Have Control of Business

Agreement Before Session of Railway Engineers

CLEVELAND (O.) June 18. (AP)—Negotiations looking to a merger of all but one of the financial institutions of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers with the Mitten Management, Inc., of Philadelphia, by which it was said the present brotherhood financial operations will be increased materially, are in progress here, it became known today.

Under the merger agreement, which it is understood has been submitted to the brotherhood convention now in session, the Mitten company, of which Thomas E. Mitten is head, will put into the present brotherhood holdings with resources aggregating more than $89,000,000, "a substantial amount" of new capital, and will assume active direction of the brotherhood banks involved as well as a directing interest in the organization's other business enterprises.

It is understood the plan was presented to the convention by William B. Prenter, president of the brotherhood and its allied organization. Mr. Mitten was in Cleveland this week, but did not appear before the convention.

PLANS OUTLINED

Brotherhood officials declined to indicate the extent of Mr. Mitten's participation in the expansion plans, saying only that he will put into the project a "substantial amount" of new capital.

The negotiations are understood to be at present in the hands of the brotherhood advisory committee and a special committee appointed by the convention.

Brotherhood officials said that the merger, if carried out, will result in an enlargement of the banking activities of the organization with the establishment of banks in sections of the country not at present served by brotherhood banks.

No official announcement was made from the regular spokesmen for the convention, but confirmation of the fact that the matter is being considered was received from reliable sources within the brotherhood. It was indicated, however, that there is as yet no assurance the plan will go through.

ONE UNAFFECTED

The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers Banking and Trust Company of Birmingham, Ala., with total resources of $2,159,777.92, is understood to be the single exception in the merger plan. Why it will not be included was not indicated.

Total resources of the other banks and business institutions involved amount to $89,447,709.36. Of this the banks account for $45,656,483.53; investment companies, insurance companies and similar businesses, $27,555,852.53, and one realty company at Venice, Fla., $14,532,890.90.

Brotherhood banks involved are located in Cleveland, Minneapolis, Spokane, Portland, Or.; Tacoma, Seattle, San Francisco, Boston and Nottingham, O.

Investment companies and other business institutions are scattered through the same area with the addition of New York and Philadelphia.

Mr. Mitten is a transportation operator and banker at Philadelphia, and has been known as one of the country's leading exponents of union labor acquiring ownership of capital.

Under the projected plan, it is understood that each bank will have on its board an equal representation of brotherhood and Mitten interests, but that the deciding vote on all matters will rest with Mr. Mitten.

RULES FOR WINE TRADE SIMPLIFIED

Enforcement Officers to Draw Up Plain Code for Use in Grape States

SAN FRANCISCO, June 18. (Exclusive)—Simplification of Treasury Department regulations governing the making, selling and transportation of wine are being sought through a conference in progress here attended by Quincy J. Boone, assistant prohibition administrator in charge of the permit division, and Inspectors Harry Walker of San Francisco, and R. E. Gilreath of Los Angeles.

The prohibition office recently was separated from the Internal Revenue Bureau, which formerly enforced many of the regulations governing wine. Now that the Prohibition Bureau has taken over the sole supervision of wine-making and distribution, with the exception of collecting the stamp tax, the department must devise new regulations to suit its own needs.

Uniformity of practice and procedure is being sought, as well as elimination of unnecessary red tape and abolishing opportunities for the unlawful diversion of wine. The conclusions agreed upon at this conference will be submitted to prohibition authorities at Washington, where rules governing the entire country, succeeding Treasury Department regulations 60 and 61, in force for many years, will be promulgated.

As more wine is produced in California than in all the rest of the United States combined, it is expected that the suggestions made by prohibition officers here will be generally followed.

YOUNG BULL MOOSE VISITS MAINE TOWN

BANGOR (Me.) June 18. (Exclusive) Moose are becoming more sociable as well as more numerous in Maine. A young bull that evidently had followed the line of the Mt. Desert branch of the Main Central railroad came into the neighboring city of Brewer and spent three hours in trotting about the residential section, crossing many gardens and lawns without doing much damage and jumping high fences in a style that delighted all beholders. Finally a game warden succeeded in shooing the animal into Eastern avenue and thence out of town.

The letter to the Governor, a copy of which was forwarded to McAllister, also recommends the extension of "such executive clemency as in your judgment the cast warrants."

PLANE SMASHED BY AERIAL JOYRIDERS

CHICAGO, June 18. (AP)—Exuberant roadhouse patrons are believed to have decided on an aerial joyride and to that end attempted to make away with an airplane belonging to Karl Hawkinson, prize winner at the Ypsilanti (Mich.) air meet last week. Their take-off was poor and the plane today is badly damaged from crashing into a tree. The plane was at a private air field at Merton Grove. The would-be aerial joyriders escaped injury and arrest.

CURB ON OIL IMMINENT

Congress Likely to Act in Crisis

Federal Conservation Board Joins Study of Problem of Overproduction

Situation Forces Refiners to Abandon Their Stand Against Interference

WASHINGTON, June 18. (Exclusive)—Adoption of a comprehensive program for conservation of the country's petroleum resources and determination upon some legislation to permit reasonable restraints upon oil production is a serious problem which probably will confront Congress in the coming session.

Overproduction has brought a crisis in the industry, which has forced leading refiners to abandon their former stand against governmental interference and to join in a plea for government assistance to meet a situation admittedly beyond their control. The Federal Oil Conservation Board is co-operating with the producers in a study of the problem and probably will have some recommendations for the guidance of Congress.

The existing oversupply first began to affect the market last fall and resulted in six price cuts between November 2, 1926, and April 18, last—the price of average grade crude oil dropping from $2.27 prior to November down to $1.05 a barrel, a reduction of 55.6 per cent.

The sharp decline in crude-oil prices was reflected at once in drastic drops in oil stock values and on May 25, last, it was noted that the thirty oil stocks quoted on the New York Stock Exchange alone showed a decline of almost $560,000,000 from the 1926 high level. With the losses suffered in curb exchange and "over-the-counter" transactions in oil stocks the total loss has been estimated at more than $1,000,000,000.

SERIOUS PROBLEM

The petroleum industry in the United States represents an aggregate investment of about $10,000,000,000 and it provides the country with one of the essential commodities of the present day. On the ground that if disaster overtakes any industry of such immense proportions, the ruin will carry untold numbers of other businesses with it, Congress will be asked to deal with the problem as a matter of public concern entirely aside from any consideration of the wisdom of a Federal petroleum conservation policy.

The tendency toward rapid exploitation and the resultant overproduction in the oil industry is largely confined to the United States because here, the people are the strongest believers in the advantages of free competition and production and sale of petroleum and its products is much easier in this country than in any other.

Oil production in other parts of the world is an exceedingly difficult and expensive undertaking. The possible exceptions are Russia, Rumania and Poland, but in these countries general economic and social conditions have held back rapid development.

The United States is the only important area in the world where maximum supply and maximum demand for oil exist in close geographical proximity. It is the only highly industrialized country which possesses a relatively sparse population, and this explains at one and the same time the extraordinary need of transportation facilities and the ability to satisfy this need. In other words, no nation possesses the natural resources which are required to satisfy this need in corresponding abundance.

SCRAMBLE FOR OIL

Under American mining laws petroleum has been anything but an orderly business. Generally it is a wild scramble for oil among adjoining property owners. The chase is wildest where the surface land is subdivided into small holdings and fractional drilling sites.

Not only the rate of drilling but the production per well is subjected to an unreasonable pressure, and oil is produced in haste without regard to the needs of the market, for each owner feels that haste alone can save his property. This general condition is aggravated by specific legal regulations which serve the purpose of assuring or enhancing competition. They may take the form of clauses inserted in leases calling for rapid and thorough exploitation within a definite time, or they may place a time limit upon the lease and thus again encourage rapid exploitation.

Apart from minor interruptions the output of crude petroleum in the United States has increased continuously from 63,600,000 barrels in 1900 to 766,500,000 barrels in 1926. Present production is at the rate of almost 900,000,000 barrels a year. The increase was fairly steady until 1922 when production began to make very erratic spurts.

The increase in the 1922 output over that of 1921 was 85,300,000 barrels or almost 20 per cent. In the next year the situation was still worse. Production jumped from 557,500,000 barrels in 1922 to 732,400,000 barrels in 1923, an increase of 174,900,000 barrels or more than 30 per cent.

PRESENT SITUATION

The present condition of the industry, it is recognized, is due principally to the conflict in two lines of development—the steady adjustment of the refining branch of the industry to a condition of decreasing supply of crude oil, and the steady postponement by the producing branch of the condition for which the refining branch has been preparing.

It is agreed by leaders in the industry that elimination of this conflict is essential if the industry is to enjoy financial stability. Two ways appear to be open to this end: Either the process of integration must continue until the big companies which now control the refining industry and of the industry gain a like dominance in the field of crude oil production, or else the independents and wildcatters must devise means of bringing their production methods into line with the economic needs of the market and financial requirements of the industry.

At present there is so much discord in the industry, even among the larger companies—notwithstanding an almost unanimous agreement as to the cause of the present troubles—that a speedy solution of the business problems confronting the industry is hardly to be expected. When the recent effort was made to control the output of the Seminole field by placing authority over new drilling and the general rate of production in the hands of an umpire, two of the largest producers, the Cities Service Company and the Sun Oil Corporation, failed to join the movement, notwithstanding the fact that it had received the tacit approval of the Federal government and of the State of Oklahoma.

PROBABLE ALTERNATIVE

If the free play of economic forces does not save the industry, and if, because of the lack of harmony in the industry, voluntary co-operation fails to bring relief, the possibility of legal interference and government assistance remains the only alternative.

It has been widely suggested by leaders in the industry that the best contribution Congress could make toward a solution of the oil problem would be a revision of the Federal antitrust statutes to sanction reasonable restraints upon production, when restriction of production clearly served the public interest, and an accompanying revision of existing petroleum laws to remove the incentives they now provide to the speediest possible exploitation of the country's petroleum resources.

In addition to such liberalization and correction of existing laws, positive legal remedies have been proposed. In 1924 the American Petroleum Institute considered the draft of a model bill to be submitted to the legislatures of the oil-producing States. The bill was carefully studied by prominent lawyers who were familiar with the technical and economic difficulties of the industry. The idea was to work out a way of legalizing unit operation of pools. It was found that when due regard was had for the constitutional rights of individual property owners so many checks and counter-checks had to be written into the bill that its efficiency was seriously questioned and the plan was dropped.

So far the difficulty which has prevented the adoption of any of these proposals has been either lack of harmony within the industry itself or the fact that the proposals ran against inhibitions of the antitrust laws or against guarantees of individual rights contained in the Constitution itself.

CONSERVATION ANGLE

A second problem which confronts the industry, and the country in its dealing with the industry is that of conserving an essential and wasting natural resource. In general it may be said that the necessity of curtailing present production in the interest of future generations largely depends upon the extent of the reserves remaining to be tapped. Experts differ widely on that score, but present experience indicates that previous estimates of the petroleum reserves still left in the ground have been far too conservative. Furthermore, technical progress in the production and refining of petroleum has been very rapid. Methods of obtaining synthetic petroleum from coal and lignites have been developed and the chances of obtaining petroleum economically from oil shale have been greatly improved. All these facts would warrant a more optimistic view than was justified by the knowledge which existed a few years ago.

No matter how plentiful the reserves or how readily available substitutes may be it is generally agreed that wasteful production should not be allowed. To produce enormous quantities of oil simply because of the accidental discovery of new fields, and to flood the market with quantities far in excess of the amounts which can be absorbed without such price cuts as demoralize not only the petroleum industry, but other industries as well, is obviously an economic waste, no matter what may be thought of the respective rights of present and future generations. There is no dissent from the opinion that the best place to store oil that the market does not need is in the ground. It has been estimated that the country this year will pay approximately $130,000,000 for the storage of petroleum which has been produced in disregard of the needs of the market.

PARIS SAVED CIVIL WAR

Daudet Defiance Turns Comedy

Scene Dramatic as Chief of Police, Backed by "Army," Asks Surrender

Royalist Leader Gives Self Up and Followers Gaily Retreat

[Copyright, 1927, New York Herald-Tribune.]

PARIS, June 17. (Exclusive)—Fate, that greatest of all dramatic producers, played the French capital this week one of the kindest turns in many years. Except for a quirk of chance which in itself was dramatic France might be suffering today from a modified form of civil war between the so-called royalist forces, led by Leon Daudet, son of the famous Alphonse and himself editor, novelist and politician, and the forces of law and order.

Daudet had been sentenced to prison for five months on a charge of libel growing out of the case in which his son, Philip, had been mysteriously assassinated. Almost 500 of his followers, all young royalists and many of them armed, were concentrated within a building on the big square near the Gare St. Lazare, where Daudet's newspaper, the royalist Action Francaise, is located ready to fight to prevent their leader's arrest. In the building there were machine guns, pistols and a profusion of other weapons.

BOTH SIDES FIRM

Royalist societies throughout France were watching closely. The situation was suddenly dramatized at 6 o'clock one morning this week when 1000 police, republican guardsmen and firemen, all armed and the firemen with their fire hose, and asphyxiating gases filled the square surrounding the building. The law had determined to take Daudet even at the expense of bloodshed and subsequent civil disturbance throughout the land.

Such was the setting—a grim, forbidding building containing 500 men prepared to fight for their leader and a veritable army of the law in steel helmets outside. The time was early morning, partly because French law decrees that no man can be arrested under his own roof between sunset and sunrise, and partly because the streets were less congested at that time and if a battle resulted there would be fewer innocent victims. It looked like a conflict between Frenchmen and Frenchmen.

With the stage thus set word was sent inside to Daudet to come to the balcony on the second story. The shutter opened and Daudet appeared. From the troops in the street and under this balcony stepped forth a little man who resembled Napoleon, the prefect of police, Jean Chiappe, like Napoleon a Corsican. Thousands of eyes watched this tense moment. Daudet, a large, heavy man, silent and defiant, glared down at the little Corsican police chief. The parley meant that Daudet must yield and go to prison or war would be the immediate consequence, the results of which could not be foretold.

DRAMATIC EXCHANGE

"M. Leon Daudet," announced Chiappe in a resonant voice, audible to all his army drawn up in the big square, "I have come to appeal to your heart. I want no effusion of blood. Neither do you wish that blood shall flow. This blood will not bring back that for which you weep. Then, appealing to your heart I demand that you voluntarily constitute yourself my prisoner."

These words might have come from a playwright's script. They were even somewhat Napoleonic. Daudet had the choice of prison or war. He chose to answer in the same dramatic language which a moment before had come up t ohim from the street.

"Monsieur le prefect," he said, "in he inhumane circumstances which you held out to me there is no human language. For a nonpolitical cause neither do I wish to see human blood flow and the civil war be unchained, which you know so well would be heard throughout this country. No! I give myself up. I surrender for France and for the memory of my dear child. There are here in the ranks of your men and among my own friends young men who also have parents. I do not wish that other children shall suffer the same fate as my assassinated son, nor that other parents shall suffer as I have. Monsieur le prefect, I surrender."

Daudet's royalist defenders were permitted to file out of the building; the police troops were dismissed. Daudet is in the Sante prison today and public opinion is with him. The last act of this drama "Bien Parisien" will come on July 14, Bastille Day, when the doors of the Sante prison will open and give Daudet his freedom months earlier than otherwise. This grace will come direct from the President of the Republic—a proper finis to one of the most interesting and fortunately bloodless civil dramas that Paris has known for half a century.

The Daudet case recalls another of a famous French writer who attempted to take advantage of the sunset-sunrise law. Balzac, pursued by debt, had eluded the law for months until early one morning, when taking the air within safe reach of his house in Auteille, he was pounced upon by detectives and arrested. Balzac protested and exhibited an almanac which showed that there was still ten minutes before sunrise. Investigation proved that the almanac was wrong and that his arrest took place one minute after sunrise. Balzac served his term in prison and then sued the publisher of the almanac and was awarded heavy damages.

Echo Heard of Great Western Mining Boom

WASHINGTON, June 18. (AP)—A final chapter in the history of one phase of a great western mining boom was written today in an application to the Interstate Commerce Commission for permission to abandon the Bullfrog, Goldfield Railroad, seventy-eight miles long, in Nevada.

The line was completed in 1906, when high hopes for long productivity of newly discovered gold mines were held, the application said, but since that time it has invariably failed to earn operating and maintenance expenses.

Flight to Form Prelude to Hawaiian Race

Pasadenan Puts Affairs in Order to Enter Race

SAN FRANCISCO, June 18. (Exclusive)—Trans-Pacific airplane flight interest centered here today in the impending arrival of the three-motored Fokker in which Lieuts. Lester J. Maitland and Albert Hegenberger plan to fly to Honolulu for the United States Army prior to the prize flights of August 12 and later.

"If they make it, and there is no doubt in my mind but what they will, it will be a wonderful prelude to the commercial contest," was the comment of Frank A. Flynn, chairman of the citizens' flight committee, which has charge of arrangements for the prize hops.

The plane being constructed locally for Maj. Livingston G. Irving, former Army ace, will be ready for its first test flight July 3, next, it was announced. It is a monoplane with a wing spread of forty-one feet and will carry a maximum load of 4150 pounds, ten gallons of oil, 350 gallons of gasoline and a collapsible lifeboat.

A prospective new entry was received today in a letter from C. C. Tucker of the Lincoln Petroleum Company of Flint, Mich. He asked information and entry blanks, but did not name the pilot or give any details.

Confirmation of the contemplated flight was received by the two pilots from Washington. The aviators now plan to take off from Kelly Field, where they arrived at 5:50 yesterday, at 7 a.m. Sunday, stopping first at El Paso and then at Tucson.

PASADENA STUNT MAN PREPARES TO ENTER

PASADENA, June 18. (Exclusive)—Richard Grace, aviator, who before sailing from San Francisco for Honolulu announced that he would attempt to fly back to the mainland, sold his interest in the Travel Shop, 253 East Colorado street, last Monday, because he wanted his estate left in easily negotiable form in event he loses his life in the Hawaiian flight.

Grace established the Travel Shop two months ago, after physicians had told him that it would be dangerous for him to continue his stunt flights for Hollywood motion picture companies because of a neck fracture which necessitated his wearing a brace.

TWO HELD AS ILLINOIS SWINDLERS

Warrants Charge Five With Embezzlement from Lake County Treasury

CHICAGO, June 18. (Exclusive)—Warrants charging five men with the embezzlement of $100,000 from the treasury of Lake county, have been issued, it was learned in Waukegan, the county seat, tonight, with the arrest of Clark C. Nye, oil promoter of Wichita, Kan., and Harold Martin of Brownsville, Tex., former cashier of the defunct Security Savings Bank of Waukegan.

The others involved were said to be Roy Brancher, Lake County Treasurer; Ire Pearsall, former County Treasurer, and Caleb Busiek of Wilmette. The warrants for these, so far as could be learned, had not been served.

Nye was arrested Thursday while visiting his wife in a Wichita hospital. He waived examination and was brought to Waukegan and placed in the County Jail. Martin was taken into custody in Brownsville and, according to States Attorney A. V. Smith of Lake county, was en route back to Waukegan tonight.

According to the charges the conspiracy to plunder the county treasury goes back to 1922, when the $100,000 was removed from the defunct Security Savings Bank.

RULING REDUCES PAY OF COMMANDER BYRD

RETIRED OFFICERS ON ACTIVE DUTY TO GET LESS WHILE ON LEAVE

WASHINGTON, June 18. (AP)—Retired naval officers on active duty hereafter will receive only retired pay while on leave, Comptroller-General McCarl has ruled in the case on the rate of pay for Commander Richard E. Byrd, retired, the North Pole flyer now preparing for a trans-Atlantic flight. He set aside a ruling that retired officers on active duty while on leave earned the same benefits as active officers.

The case dealt with the rate of pay to which Commander Byrd was entitled from May 9, 1926, when he took that rank on the retired list under a special act of Congress for his Polar flight. He has been on leave from April 2 of the year of the Polar flight, the leave being extended from time to time with the last extension expiring October 1. Under the ruling he receives the commander's maximum retired pay at $4312.50 a year as long as he remains on leave.

Los Habitantes de San Luis Vitorean al Héroe

El espíritu de San Luis ascendió hoy al cenit en la bienvenida formal y oficial tributada a su indomable hijo, el coronel Charles A. Lindbergh, su querido "flaquito," que voló en su aeroplano de vikingo desde Nueva York hasta París.

Durante las tres semanas en que las aclamaciones de París, Londres, Bruselas, Washington y Nueva York atronaban los oídos del glorioso y joven aviador, San Luis, donde reside éste desde hace tres años, se recogía, y almacenaba su energía para lanzar a toda voz sus himnos de apoteosis en el momento en que tuviera la suerte de ver en su seno al triunfante volador. Hoy logróse la dicha de verlo llegar en su avión, y decidió San Luis que fuera éste un día de fiesta para agasajar al héroe.

El Presidente de Albania Trata de Despertar la Conciencia Nacional

TIRANA (Albania) Junio 18.—Achmet Zogu, presidente y primer ministro de Albania, que tiene aire más regio que el de un rey, se está esforzando por encender el fuego del sentimiento patriótico, con el propósito de impedir que su país se convierta, en futuros encuentros armados, en el campo de batalla de los yugoeslavos y los italianos.

Muchos dudan de que el Presidente Zogu pueda llegar a despertar la conciencia de los albaneses, no sólo porque la fragosa orografía del país aisla del mundo regiones enteras de la Albania, sino porque la indolencia parece haberse adueñado de los habitantes de las poblaciones, que prefieren echarse a dormir a tratar de emular la civilización extranjera.

El propio Zogu es jefe hereditario de una tribu, la de los Mati, gente poderosa de la que un grupo considerable ocupa una posición estratégica. Es uno de los jefes de estado más hermosos de Europa, siempre elegantísimo, erguido y vendiendo salud.

La cosecha se levantará en Octubre, y, según informes, va a instalarse un molino de arroz para pulir el grano. Créese que un área enorme de terrenos costeros tiene condiciones espléndidas para el cultivo del arroz, y que éste puede convertirse en uno de los productos principales del país.

Gran Auge de las Peluquerías Femeninas en París

PARIS, Junio 18.—Aquellas barberías adonde el bello sexo parisiense acude a que le recorten y aliñen la melena se han vuelto verdaderas minas de oro. Algunos de estos establecimientos se han traspasado últimamente en cifras de dinero cercanas a $500,000. Varios barberos que antes de la guerra sacaban apenas con que comer, son hoy ya casi millonarios. Las peluquerías exclusivas para señoras alcanzaban antes de la guerra un escaso total de veinte en la capital francesa, al paso que hoy suben a 500, y cada día se abren más.

Misterioso Cañonero Contrabandista de Armamento

Anoche se temía que hubiese un encuentro naval frente al Puerto de Los Angeles, según manifestaron ayer las autoridades del ministerio de Justicia, pues tenían libradas órdenes a los barcos guardacostas de hacer todo lo posible por coger un buque, dicen ser cañonero de los rebeldes de alguna república del sur, y que anda atisbando la oportunidad de cargar armamento de contrabando.

Ayer supieron los funcionarios citados de las existencia del supuesto cañonero, pues los agentes del ministerio de Justicia capturaron ayer mañana temprano un camión con su remolque, que trasportaban ametralladoras, carabinas y municiones de guerra por valor de $50,000. La ocupación de ese material se efectuó en el camino real, cerca de Buellton, a cuarenta millas al norte de Santa Bárbara, y han sido sometidos a vigilancia cinco individuos.

Las autoridades federales no han hecho conocer si el cargamento estaba destinado para los revolucionarios mejicanos o para los de algún país centroamericano; pero se sabe que cuatro de los hombres que iban en el camión son mejicanos.

Acúsase de Plagio Literario a Mary Pickford

Se ha entablado ayer en el Tribunal de Distrito de los Estados Unidos una acción en contra de Mary Pickford, por la que se reclaman a ésta daños mínimos de $100,000. Se la acusa de haber tomado el argumento de su última película, "Sparrows," de su libro intitulado. "El Lamento de los Niños", escrito por el dramaturgo Harry Hyde Flanigan, en colaboración con Phillip Eggerton Hubbard, quienes, por conducto de su abogado, James M. Sheridan, van a exigir quizá cuentas exactas de las ganancias realizadas con la mencionada película.

Según la acusación interpuesta, Flanagan, bajo el seudónimo de Harry Hyde, colaboró con Hubbard y adquirió en 1919 la propiedad literaria de "El Lamento de los Niños", obrita dramática que versa sobre las haciendas de bebés. La pieza fue presentada en forma de libreto, según se asegura, a Marion Jackson, directora del departamento de libretos de Mary Pickford, quien mantuvo la pieza en su poder por espacio de un mes antes de devolverla a los autores. Dice Hubbard que la única objeción que le hizo Mary Pickford a la obra fue la relacionada con uno de los personajes que en ella figuran, y agrega que las escenas y papeles de "Sparrow" son identicas a las de El Lamento de los Niños.

DYNAMITING OF WEIR DECLARED NECESSARY

SACRAMENTO, June 18. (AP)—G. F. Parks, Sutter county landowner, today laid the blame for the dynamiting of the McCrew weir to the overgrown condition of the ditch resulting from the inability of the reclamation board to clear it of weeds and other foul growth. Parks, whose lands lie just below the wrecked project, declared the shortage of finances would not permit the ditch being cleared, with the result that the water backed up and overflowed adjacent land. It is his belief that the dynamiting was resorted to to afford an outlet for the upper section of the rice fields.

NEWSPAPER REVENUE UP TO BILLION

Press of Nation This Year for First Time Will Pass That Stupendous Sum

WAYNESBORO (Pa.) June 18. (AP)—The newspapers of the United States, for the first time in their history, are doing $1,000,000,000 business this year, W. P. Beazell, assistant managing editor of the New York World, told members of the Pennsylvania Newspaper Publisher's Association tonight at their annual banquet, held at Buena Vista. Income from sales, he said, will be $260,000,000 and from advertising, $750,000,000, despite the setback reported from most sections of the country during the spring. The increase over 1926 will be about $20,000,000.

Daily newspaper circulation is growing at an unprecedented rate, Mr. Beazell said. Last year the numerical increase was 50 per cent greater than the growth in population. One newspaper is printed every day for every two persons more than 10 years of age able to read.

Every morning, one newspaper is printed for every other family in the United States; every evening, one newspaper is printed for every family. When weekly and semiweekly newspapers and periodicals less directly related to the news are taken into account the whole circulation reaches 225,000,000—nine publications for each of the 25,000,000 families of the land.

Annulment Won by ex-Angeleno Upset by Court

NEW YORK, June 18. (AP)—Annulment of his marriage to his first wife, Mrs. Marie T. Austin of Buffalo, N. Y., granted in December, 1926, to Caldin P. Austin, formerly of Los Angeles, was ordered vacated today by the Supreme Court.

Since the annulment Austin married Miss Annette M. Regring of Hoboken, N. J.

Counsel for the first wife charged that Austin had sworn he did not know where his wife was and had obtained service on her by publication. Today the attorney presented an affidavit contending that Austin knew that his first wife was in a Buffalo hospital at the time he instituted the annulment proceedings and knew she could not answer his charges.

O'CONNOR WILL TALK ON COAST

Shipping Board Chief Plans to Answer Attacks

Los Angeles Among Cities Listed for Speeches

Data Now Being Gathered for Western Tour

WASHINGTON, June 18. (Exclusive)—Chairman T. V. O'Connor of the Shipping Board will make a series of speeches in west coast cities soon to answer the severe criticism of the board now appearing in a New York financial newspaper, it was announced from his office tonight.

The board is being savagely attacked on the charge that it is conspiring to perpetuate itself and keep the government in the shipping business because of its announced policy to replace obsolete ships. The New York critics assert the government should get out of the shipping business and stay out.

The Shipping Board chairman's friends said tonight that he is gathering data to refute the New York charge, but that some of the statistics will not be available for use until later this summer and that his forthcoming trip to the west coast will give him an opportunity to answer these charges. No answer will be made before O'Connor's first appearance on the Pacific Coast, which will be at San Francisco. He will speak next in Los Angeles, and then San Diego, Portland, Tacoma and Seattle.

In the series of speeches he will deliver in these cities the chairman will answer completely the New York attacks. It is understood that he does not disagree so much with the contention of the New York writers, that the board should stay out of the shipping business, when American fleets are adequate, but that he will justify the board's present plans of replacing obsolete ships because of conditons now controlling the American merchant marine.

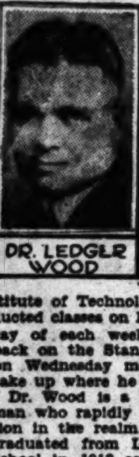
PROFESSOR OVERCOMES DISTANCES

Dr. Ledger Wood Speaks Weekly at Stanford and in Local Institute



DR. LEDGER WOOD

Space is being annihilated so rapidly that nowadays it is a small matter to commute 1000 miles a week in order to deliver lectures at a northern and a southern university. During the recently completed spring quarter this has been the practice of Dr. Ledger Wood, instructor in the department of philosophy at Stanford University, who has traveled between the northern university and the California Institute of Technology where he conducted classes on Monday and Tuesday of each week and then was back on the Stanford campus again on Wednesday morning in time to take up where he left off there.

Dr. Wood is a Los Angeles young man who rapidly is earning recognition in the realm of philosophy. He graduated from Los Angeles High School in 1918 and thereafter went to the University of California to take a general college course. In his fifth year he started to specialize in philosophy—more particularly the history of philosophy—and in 1923 was granted the degree of master of arts in that subject.

For three years following this Wood attended Cornel University, during which time he uncovered much new material on several philosophers such as Descartes and Spinoza, and at the end of this period he was given a degree of doctor of philosophy.

Then came the lectureship at Stanford and subsequently the one at the California Institute of Technology which grew out of a chance meeting with Dr. Robert A. Millikan when he was giving a three weeks' lecture course at Cornell last fall.

Dr. Wood recently has accepted a professorship in the department of philosophy at Princeton University into which he will enter this fall.

He is a member of Phi Beta Kappa and other national honor societies and tireless worker in the research field. He recently has uncovered material which has been sought by the Chronicum Spinozanum of Holland for publication.

Wood will return from Stanford sometime this week to spend the holidays with his mother Mrs. Elizabeth Wood Friedman of Sierra Madre.

PLANE USED IN DELIVERY OF LAUNDRY

Flyer Drops Contreras's Forgotten Linen Supply on Deck of Hawaii Liner

GEORGE CONTRERAS

Passengers en route to Honolulu aboard the liner City of Los Angeles thought they were being bombed yesterday, when a huge seaplane swooped to within a few feet of the deck, while the vessel was off Point Vincente, and dropped a dark object.

It was only the laundry of George A. Contreras, chief of prohibition enforcement in the United States District Attorney's office, who sailed on his vacation trip.

Contreras had forgotten his laundry and phoned his family to have it rushed to him before sailing. But the ship, with her 300 passengers, was out around Breakwater Light when the car with the laundry arrived.

Efforts to obtain a fast craft to overtake the liner were fruitless until the aid of Ellard A. Bacon, general manager of the Pacific Marine Airways, was enlisted. He dispatched a seaplane in charge of Franklin Young to deliver the laundry.

Miss Cecilia De Mille, daughter of Cecil De Mille, cinema producer, also was a departing passenger, accompanied by Mrs. Edna Thomas and Miss Josephine Thomas. Others were Mrs. Evelyn Gifford, Pasadena sportswoman, accompanied by her son, Brooks Gifford; Russell Ball, Pasadena banker, and Loren D. Sale, president of the Western Wholesale Drug Company.

SUICIDE WAVE GRIPS MEXICO

Self-Destruction Craze Hits Youth of Republic

Toll in Capital During May Without Parallel

Women Lead; Love Deception Given as Cause

MEXICO CITY, June 18. (Exclusive)—Like an echo to the wave of youth suicides that recently swept the United States, Mexico today appears to be in the grip of an epidemic of suicides among her youth.

Figures just compiled by the Inspection General of Police show that during the month of May forty suicides were registered in Mexico City alone—a situation that available records show is without any parallel in the history of the country. The greater number of these suicides appears to have been committed by persons of comparative youth.

The press of the national capital is expressing increased alarm over the situation, and pointing out that it is the duty of the community to determine what the causes are for this rapidly increasing self-destruction, in order that some steps might be taken to combat the grave situation. The problem, however, seems to be founded in causes as obscure as those that occasioned the suicide wave in the United States.

DAILY TOLL HEAVY

As many as three suicides a day were reported during May. On the last day of the month, two young men threw themselves under the wheels of a street car and both died some hours afterward in the hospital to which they were taken. One, before dying, declared that he had been motivated solely by the fact that he no longer cared to live. The other ascribed his act to the deception of a woman he loved.

The statistics of the Inspection-General of Police show that the majority of suicides registered during May were committed by women, and their suicides were, for the most part, apparently occasioned by deception in love affairs, although in few cases can this be absolutely determined. The women exhibited a preference for poisons as the instrument of self-destruction, having little recourse to revolvers or other weapons.

REVOLVER USE LEADS

Of the forty suicides for the month, only three were brought about by the use of knives, one of the suicides, a Chinese, using an open razor to effect his death. Several of the suicides are believed to have been caused by illness. One child is reported to have killed himself because of a scolding by his parents. Two school boys slew themselves because of difficulties with their studies. The majority of the cases of suicide among men and boys was reported to have been performed with revolvers.

It is pointed out that toward the end of the month of May the number of suicide cases recorded was heavier than at the beginning of the month. The present month is exhibiting a large number of suicides, and although no figures are as yet available, indications are that the number may rise above that for May.

VICTIMS OF PROWLING GHOST APPEAL TO LAW FOR HELP

GREAT BEND (Kan.) June 18. (AP) Prosecution of a ghost on complaint of some of the most substantial citizens of the county was the unusual situation that confronted Wayne Lameroux, County Attorney, today. Complainants swore that they had seen the restless spirit and been disturbed by it.

"Go bring in your ghost while I look up the law," Lameroux told Fred Koett, farmer, living near here, on whose place the ghost has been seen. "We'll throw him into jail. We might charge him with disturbing the peace."

Since the first of the year strange noises have been heard about the Koett house at night, and the following morning the family has found pictures turned to the wall, a statue of the Virgin Mary changed from one wall to another, doors unlocked and the keys in their usual place.

One night this week neighbors armed with shotguns and pistols lay in ambush for the spirit visitor and let go a salvo at a filmlike something that sailed over the fence, Koett told the prosecutor. So it was decided to get the law after the phantom visitor.

MISS RAMBO HEADS DELTA PHI UPSILON

Miss Elsie Rambo was elected president of the Delta Phi Upsilon at the fourth annual convention of that organization yesterday at the Ambassador. Other officers elected are: Miss Virginia Leslie, vice-president; Miss Simena Fundenburg, corresponding secretary; Miss Thelma Giebolt, recording secretary; Miss Nina Mason, treasurer. Features of the afternoon meeting were the initiation of Miss Elga Shearer supervisor of the kindergarten primary school at Long Beach, and an entertainment, which included harp selections by Miss Ruth Riggs, vocal numbers by Miss Carol Moyer and an address by Dr. F. P. Woellner.

Gibraltar was visited by more tourists in the last year than for some time.

TEACHERS PLAN TRIP TO MEXICO

Many Californians Will Go to Southern Capital for Summer Courses

For several years the University of Mexico City has arranged a special summer course for American teachers, including in the curriculum Spanish language, Mexican history, Spanish history and archaeology. The courses were attended by about 600 American students last year, of which about 100 were from California.

The World Travel Bureau of San Francisco this year is arranging a tour for California teachers to leave San Francisco on the 27th inst. to attend a six weeks' session at the Mexican university. They will go over the newly completed West Coast line of the Southern Pacific Railroad of Mexico. California residents at Cajeme in Sonora and Guadajara and Mexico City are arranging for receptions. In their tour they also will visit the pyramids located thirty miles south of Mexico City, as well as many places of interest in and near that city. They also will visit the palace at Chapultepec and plans are being arranged for them to be received by President Calles.

RIVER ROW SUIT URGED

Equity Step Held Only Solution

Baxter Advocates Move to Take Colorado Problems Into Supreme Court

Speedy Decision Predicted With Questions Submitted to Highest Tribunal

PHOENIX, June 18. (Exclusive)—Commenting upon an Associated Press dispatch from El Centro announcing that President Pound of the Imperial Irrigation District approves the idea of taking the Colorado River development question into the United States Supreme Court as a "sensible means of obtaining for the lower basin States' protection to which they are entitled," Harold Baxter, formerly special assistant to the United States Attorney-General, Public Lands Division, today said that for a long time he has maintained that this is the only method of reaching a solution of Colorado River difficulties.

"More than two years ago," said Mr. Baxter, "I advocated to the Attorney-General, to the Department of the Interior, to our then Representative, Carl Hayden, and to Gov. Scrugham of Nevada, the wisdom of such a course of procedure, and offered to draw a bill of complaint in equity on behalf of the Indian tribes residing on the banks of the Colorado River in California and Arizona, such bill of complaint to be brought directly into the United States Supreme Court with the United States as plaintiff on behalf of these Indians, wards of the government. Upon the filing of such a bill of complaint, in equity, the United States Supreme Court could then take jurisdiction of all matters involving the rights of Indians, citizens and the seven basin States, which States I proposed to make defendants to the action.

SPEEDY DETERMINATION

"This procedure to forever settle and determine the relative rights of all concerned to the water flow and power of the Colorado and its tributaries, if acted upon, would produce a speedy, final and adequate determination, along the same lines as followed in the now famous pioneer case of Hurley vs. Abbott, which settled the rights upon the Salt River and its tributaries in what is known as the Kent decree. In this connection it is noteworthy that the Roosevelt dam project, whose waters are distributed according to the Kent decree, is the only 100 per cent successful water project ever constructed.

"A similar procedure to adjudicate the rights to the waters of the Gila River and its tributaries was instituted by me," continued Mr. Baxter, "in October, 1925, in the United States District Court for Arizona, and a similar action to adjudicate the rights to waters of the Orland project in Glenn county, California, was brought under my direction to the point where a final decree might be entered.

OPPOSITION ASSERTIONS

"Opposition to the institution of such a water rights suit came from many quarters and invariably those opposed expressed themselves as fearful of long-drawn-out litigation, whereas the principal reason for such opposition was a wish to obtain some special privilege or right for some person, persons or State. This opposition was sufficient to discourage both the Department of the Interior and the Department of Justice from any attempt to smooth out the Colorado River problems by resort to the courts. The universal excuse that such an adjudication would take too much time is not justified by the results of other adjudication suits, and seems to be in error, judging by the time that is being wasted by the opponents to the Boulder Canyon development plans.

"There seems to me," continued Mr. Baxter, "to be no just reason why such a suit should not have been filed then, and all the arguments, pro and con, have brought out no additional reason why such an adjudication suit should not be filed now. In fact, the very people who have opposed the filing of such a suit have used, as a club, the threat that they would carry to the United States Supreme Court the question of the right of the Federal government to construct any dam at Boulder Canyon. In my opinion, until such a suit is filed and determined it will be impossible to get any agreement between either the seven States or the grouped basin States. This seems obvious, for the reason that politics and selfish interests are so well injected into the fight between the proponents and opponents of any project to impound the waters of the Colorado River for flood control, irrigation of water power.

FURTHER COMPLICATIONS

"The Colorado River problems are further complicated by the most recent decision of the California Supreme Court, adjudicating the owners of riparian rights in the famous case of Southern California Edison Company against Herminghaus and others. In this decision the California Supreme Court seems to have upheld riparian rights and overthrown rights by appropriations and made practically impossible the construction of any storage or diversion dam in California. Many years ago the California Supreme Court decided that the riparian rights doctrine, of the common law of England, was to be applied to the rivers and streams of California. Conditions in England permitted the production of crops watered by a generous annual rainfall, whereas conditions in California are totally different, and the rainfall in many localities is insufficient to produce the crops that might be produced by irrigation projects. But the California Supreme Court has effectually closed the door to the successful operation of any such project by declaring that the law which prevailed in wet England should be adhered to by dry California.

REVERSAL ASKED

"The Southern California Edison Company is now in the United States Supreme Court asking that court to reverse this decision of the California Supreme Court and the California legislators are burning midnight oil in an endeavor to find some way out of the difficulties presented by the California Supreme Court ruling. The situation appears to be a mess which only the United States Supreme Court can clear up. Therefore there is every reason why the lower basin States should use every effort to present their case to that court at the earliest possible moment.

"I am sure," concluded Mr. Baxter, "that only a United States Supreme Court decision will ever settle the Colorado River problem. Then, and then only, may Los Angeles finally know whether she may be allowed to drink out of the Colorado River or the Owens River, without buying every bit of California land riparian to its banks and all other California lands between Los Angeles and these river banks."

"KIN" OF CONQUEROR RUSH TO JOIN FETE

PARIS, June 18. (Exclusive)—So many self-styled descendants of William the Conqueror from half a dozen countries are clamoring to take part in the nine hundredth anniversary celebration in the ancient Norman city of Palaise, the conqueror's birthplace, on July 3, that heraldry experts are puzzled. Thousands of applications have come from England alone. A procession representing William proceeding in state through the streets of his native town is one of the features.

QUEER BIRD SCREAMING NEAR TOMBS STARTS SUPERSTITIONS

ELKHART (Kan.) June 11. (Exclusive)—A queer bird is screaming amid tombs on No Man's Land, just south of here, and superstition is rampant. No Man's Land, a barren, desolate country where outlaws roved, recently came into prominence when oil was discovered on it.

Ramsey, the new town named in honor of the brothers who brought in the first well, lies a mile south of an old cemetery. From these lonely tombs every evening comes a strange hybrid bird—resembling the eagle, the sage hen and the common domesticated hen. Before this bird was noticed, the community was both mystified and excited by cries from the cemetery, something like the cry of a mountain lion although some persons say the wails are the uncanny supplications of a woman in mortal pain.

Whether the bird is a harbinger of good or bad fortune is being debated. Those who trust in the bird for good luck argue that it is much the same as in Coleridge's "Rhyme of the Ancient Mariner," in which the albatross was a good omen. Also, they say, a similar bird appeared in California preceding the discovery of gold and later was seen in 1890 near Cripple Creek, Colo., before the town became famous as a gold-mining center.

Those who believe the bird forecasts evil point to the untimely weather of early summer. They emphasize that the screams come from the old cemetery where lie buried many pioneers who met violent deaths in the early struggles of No Man's Land.

Both sides are in accord on one point: like the mariner of old, they believe that ill luck would most certainly result if the bird were killed.

School Funded by Californians to Be Dedicated

SILOAM SPRINGS (Ark.) June 18. (Exclusive)—The "California" building on the John E. Brown campus will be dedicated July 1. Secretary Herbert Hoover and five Governors of near-by States plan to attend. The building was made possible by financial support of friends of the school in California.

Brown College is unique and comparatively new. Students man factories, operated by the schools, and pay their expenses. John E. Brown started the school seven years ago for students who had not the funds to attend other schools. The California Building has approximately 100 rooms and on the first floor will be a large student dining-room.

ACTRESS WILL WED AGAIN

NEW YORK, June 18. (Exclusive) Stately Adrienne Morrison, who divorced Richard Bennett, the actor, after a so-called six blocks divorce, will take another fling at matrimony today.

The former Mrs. Bennett is to wed her employer, Eric Seabrooke Pinker, London theatrical producer.

The fiancee is the mother of Constance and Barbara Bennett, two dancing girls who have been Broadway favorites in recent years.

The fortunes of the Bennetts in matrimony have been marked by many spectacular events. Adrienne Morrison had been married to Richard for twenty-two years at the time of their divorce. She also was of the stage.

The first dark cloud loomed in 1923, when they agreed to a "six blocks divorce."

Mrs. Bennett moved to Sixty-fifth street with Constance, while her husband remained at Fifty-ninth street with Barbara.

Finis was written to their married life two years later when Adrienne sued for divorce. Bennett was ordered to pay $50,000 to her in $10,000 installments for five years.

Adrienne withdrew from the public gaze while her performer-husband continued his stage career. In September, 1925, it was reported Richard would marry Mrs. Thelma Morgan Converse, sister of Reginald Vanderbilt, but the romance never bloomed.

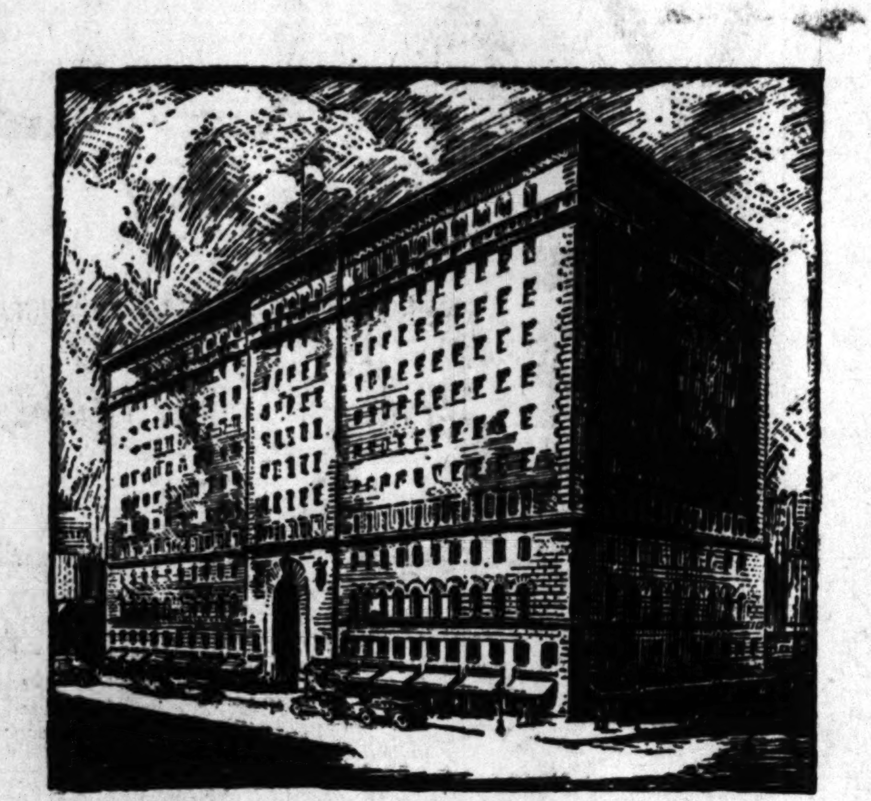
EMILY SARTAIN DIES

PHILADELPHIA, June 18. (AP)—Miss Emily Sartain, 86 years of age, former principal of the Philadelphia School of Design for Women and a member of a distinguished family of artists, widely known as a painter, designer and etcher, is dead here.

If a Hurricane Tore the Outer Walls from Every Home in Los Angeles What Would it Disclose?

IT WOULD REVEAL the interior furnishings of each home. Many would be beautiful—as fine as exist anywhere—but the majority, and it is unquestionably a vast majority, would show that thousands of home owners are living the life of today with the furniture of yesterday.

These people do not dress in the mode of 1900, 1910, or 1920. They drive motor cars—and the latest models at that. The women enjoy the latest cosmetics of today and the men use breech loading safety razors rather than the muzzle loading blades of grandfather's day. It is the fashion to be modern.



Barker Bros., Seventh Street, Flower and Figueroa

All that is different in the fashion of today. Yet thousands of Los Angeles homes whose owners follow other pronouncements of current fashion and good taste continue with "golden oak" or "fumed oak" furniture or three piece sets of ancient, yes, and honored vintage—but regrettably and incurably out of date.

Yet this outseasoned furniture has a a trade-in value, just as truly as an old model automobile. Through Barker Bros.' Exchange Department it can be used as part payment on new furniture, thus lessening the investment required on wanted new pieces.

But why overlook the home? It needs the same care to keep its furnishings modern that clothes and motor cars require. "Golden oak" was accepted as good in its day. "Mission" or "fumed oak" was fashionable not so long ago. "Three-piece sets" of bulbous overstuffed pieces had their vogue following a period of "cozy corners" and burnt wood and leather novelties.

Thousands of homes in Los Angeles would be better homes if they replaced the "fumed" or "golden" oak of years gone by with furniture of today. This is a favorable time of year to shop for new furniture and to secure the full appraisal value of the old furniture in your home. Barker Bros. invite you to shop and compare prices and let us give you the appraisal value of your old furniture.

Here Are Some Facts About Trade-in Allowances and Prices

Oftentimes appraisals on used furniture vary. Why is it that some furniture dealers offer a larger appraisal than others? Does the largest appraisal mean the best deal? These are the points to consider:

Appraisals on used furniture vary because competitive dealers are bidding to sell you new furniture.

The only fundamental basis of value for used furniture is what the dealer can get for it in the used furniture market.

An alluringly large allowance may mean that you are paying an excessive price for the new furniture that you are buying.

Compare prices on new furniture of the same value. Then consider any difference in allowance offered on your used furniture. Then you will discover that the largest trade-in allowance offered you on your used furniture is not necessarily the best deal for you. Sometimes it is; but sometimes it is not.

Remember, you are buying new furniture—your old pieces simply serve to lessen the investment required. When you are ready to trade in some of your out-of-date furniture for new pieces of today's mode, compare not only our allowance on your old furniture but likewise our prices on new. Only when you have both figures can you judge the true merits of the deal.

Remember again, that this store prices its merchandise for cash selling and that price stands whether you buy for cash or on credit. If you wish generous credit terms, you are welcome to them, and are simply charged a small additional fee for credit accommodation. The fee is so reasonable that we find no cause to camouflage it in the price of the merchandise through such claims as "no interest" or "no extras" or "free credit." We give you cash prices with credit terms, and true trade-in value for your old furniture.

Never pay more than cash prices even though you buy on credit, and use your old furniture as part payment. Be sure before you buy

TRIBUTES IN FAREWELL FOR ODELL

Masonic Education Club Also Fetes Other Retiring School Board Members

Tribute was paid to Robert A. Odell, president, and to other retiring members of the Board of Education last night when more than 500 members of the Masonic Education Club met at a dinner in the banquet room of the Chamber of Commerce.

After the preliminaries had been disposed of, Vierling Kersey, club president and assistant superintendent of schools, turned the gavel over to John B. Beman, member of the Board of Education.

The banquet was in the nature of a farewell to Mr. Odell, who has served the Los Angeles city school district as president of the Board of Education for the past six years. During the even he was presented with the Ling Foundation gold medal, class 1, in recognition of his efforts to aid the cause of better health among the Los Angeles school children. This foundation was created recently and the presentation last night was the first to be made.

Among those at the guest table were Mrs. Susan M. Dorsey, superintendent of schools; Robert L. Burns, member of the Board of Education; Mrs. Norman Macbeth, retiring member; Mrs. Carrie Parsons Bryant, recently elected to the board; Mrs. Vierling Kersey, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Gould and other men and women prominent in the educational field and in Masonic circles.

An election of officers of the Masonic Education Club was conducted and Will Tritt, principal of Belmont High School, was unanimously chosen as president, W. H. Emory as vice-president, and Will White as secretary-treasurer. A double quartet of boys from Fairfax High School sang. The Masonic Education Club's orchestra, drawn from the music department of the public schools, furnished the music.

PRINCE ASKS APOLOGIES FOR 'INSULT'

Pola Negri's Husband Up in Arms About Questioning of Right to Title

Prince Serge Mdivani, husband of Pola Negri, will demand an apology or reparation in the courts from Photoplay Magazine for an editorial written by James R. Quirk in the July issue questioning Mdivani's right to use the princely title, it was stated last night at the Santa Monica home of Prince Serge and Mrs. Negri.

The editorial states that a Slavonic genealogist who was asked to look up the lineage of the Mdivani family reported that the name does not appear in the list of princely families of Georgian derivation, sanctioned by the government in 1850.

Mdivani has written a letter to his attorneys instructing them to take immediate action in the matter. He also enclosed a document attested by the chancellor of the Georgian legation at Paris, from the collection of the Georgian Society of History and Ethonography, which states that in 17?? Solomon Mdivani received the title of Prince and the name from Tsar Irakly II, for services rendered, "for the same Solomon had been wounded in a battle near Erivan."

He also inclosed pictures of his father, Zakariah Mdivani, reviewing troops by the side of the Czar Nicholas.

Prince Serge Mdivani and Miss Negri were married in France a month ago.

"As this is a personal insult to myself and at the same time adverse publicity for my wife, I insist in justice to myself and to her that immediate steps be taken," the letter read.

"The whole statement is ridiculous," said Miss Negri.

"Anyway, if my husband were a truck driver, it would make no difference in my feelings toward him."

FILM PAIR SLIP AWAY AND MARRY

Irene Dalton Becomes Bride of Lloyd Hamilton in Quiet Wedding

Lloyd Hamilton, screen comedian, and Irene Dalton, motion picture actress and his former leading woman, slipped away to Santa Ana last night and were quietly married by Justice of the Peace Kenneth Morrison.

The marriage was a complete surprise to friends. The only persons who attended the ceremony were Ray Hanford and Mona Keith, motion picture people, who served as witnesses, and N. J. Kendall, a friend of Hamilton. Hamilton gave his age as 34 years and Miss Dalton hers as 27. Hamilton stated in his application that he had been divorced. Miss Dalton mentioned no former marriages.

The couple returned to Los Angeles for their honeymoon. Hamilton is at work on a picture just now and cannot leave.

Flyers Face Difficult and Dangerous Task

The above illustration by Charles H. Owens of The Times, gives an idea of the difficult navigational problem facing those who will attempt the first successful nonstop flight from the Pacific Coast to Hawaii. The diagram at the top shows how comparatively simple the flight from West to East would be. At the left is the Wright Whirlwind engine which carried Lindbergh to Paris and which will be used by practically all the entrants in the Honolulu attempt. The lower picture shows the Navy PN9 in which Commander Rodgers and crew attempted the flight in 1925.

MORE GUNS SENT NORTH TO BISHOP

Consignee Unknown But Water Officials Ridicule Threats of "Warfare"

Reports that orders for another 100 rifles to be shipped into the Owens Valley for possible use in the "water war" reached Los Angeles yesterday afternoon.

Who ordered the rifles could not be learned definitely, but the order is understood to have originated in Bishop. A week ago a hardware company in the northern city ordered fifty-four 30-30 rifles from a Los Angeles hardware concern.

Despite insinuations in the past officials of the Los Angeles Water Department have ridiculed veiled threats that unless the controversy over the acquisition of water rights by the city in Owens Valley were settled to the satisfaction "of all concerned" bloodshed would result. No information has been given out as to who exactly are the "all concerned." The city has an extensive guard system established to protect the Aqueduct from further dynamiting.

PARADE TO OPEN CITY HALL CEREMONY

Platform Seating 2000 Built For Corner-stone Laying Exercises Wednesday To Be Presided Over By State President of Native Sons

Plans have been completed for the City Hall corner-stone laying ceremonies to be held at 2 o'clock Wednesday afternoon, Public Works Commissioner Delorey, in charge of the exercises, announced yesterday. The $5,000,000 building will be completed late in October and the moving of the departments into the new building will begin then and will be completed February 1. The first rooms to be placed in use will be the twenty-one Superior Courts, which will be located on the fourteenth to twentieth floors, which have been leased by the city to the county government.

PLATFORM BUILT

The corner-stone of the new building will be laid by Charles A. Thompson of Santa Clara, Grand President of the State Native Sons of the Golden West, assisted by members of that organization. The corner-stone-laying ritual of that organization will be used. The corner-stone will be laid in a cement to be mixed at the exercises next Wednesday, and composed of water, sand and cement from every county of the State.

The exercises will begin with a parade from the present City Hall of Mayor Cryer and city officials, escorted by the firemen's band and police. The parade will proceed north on Broadway to the Hall of Records, where county officials will join the procession, which will then proceed down Temple street to Spring street and thence south on Spring street to the new City Hall. A platform seating 2000 people has been built in the forecourt, where the corner-stone is to be laid, on the north side of the Spring-street main entrance to the building. Loud speakers will be installed so that those unable to gain admittance to the building can hear the speeches. Public Works Commissioner Delorey, in charge of the building operations for the Board of Public Works, will introduce Gov. Young, Mayor Cryer, President McGarry of the Chamber of Commerce, who will speak briefly before the corner-stone is laid. The architects of the building, John Parkinson, John C. Austin and Albert C. Martin, will also be introduced.

STONE OF GRANITE

The corner-stone will be of granite and will measure four feet in length, two and one-half feet in the height and one and one-half feet in thickness. Inside the stone a space has been hollowed out for the sealed copper box which will be placed there. This box will contain Los Angeles newspapers of next Wednesday, copy of the city charter, roster of present city officials, photograph of Mayor Cryer, and coins minted from California gold.

The first city departments to be moved into the new City Hall will be the police and fire commissions, park, civil service and pension and other departments now occupying the Equitable building at First and Spring streets which will be torn down early in November. The razing of the Equitable and all other buildings now located on the City Hall site, bounded by Temple, Main First and Springs streets as well as buildings on the west side of Spring street between First and Temple

ROGERS WAILS LACK OF SCAR

Operation Otherwise Great Success, Doctors at Hospital Say

Will Rogers, galivanting Mayor of Beverly Hills, is resting easily, coming along fine and will be in the California Lutheran Hospital about three weeks, it was announced by Dr. E. C. Moore and Dr. P. G. White.

Rogers was operated on for gallstones after a consultation with physicians Friday. The operation was considered highly successful, with no complications likely except the possible fear of the patient that his scar may not be as large and luxuriant as other scars he has "heard tell of."

PLAGIARISM CHARGED IN FILM SUIT

Author Says Mary Pickford's "Sparrows" Stolen from His Scenario

Charging that Mary Pickford's last picture, "Sparrows," is an infringement of copyright upon "The Cry of the Children," suit was filed yesterday against the famous film star in United States District Court, seeking minimum damages of $100,000.

An accounting of the entire profits of the picture may be asked, according to James M. Sheridan, attorney and co-plaintiff representing the estate of Harry Hyde Flanagan, dramatist and co-author of the "Cry of the Children" with Phillip Egerton Hubbard.

According to the complaint of the plaintiffs, Flanagan using the pen name of Harry Hyde, collaborated with Hubbard and obtained a copyright on "The Cry of the Children," a story of the baby farms, in 1919. The story was submitted in scenario form, it is asserted, to Marion Jackson, Miss Pickford's scenario department head, who returned it after keeping it a month.

Miss Pickford's only objection to the story, according to Hubbard, was one of the characters. The complaint also states that the scenario was submitted at a later date to the Robinson Cole studio, where Hubbard and Winifred Dunn, who was later credited as co-author of "Sparrows," were employed in the reading department.

The plaintiffs contend that the duplication of characters and settings in "Sparrows" are identical with those of "The Cry of the Children," and "beyond the bounds of coincidence."

Besides Miss Pickford, the following are named co-defendants: Mary Pickford Company, Winifred Dunn and several "Does" and "Roes."

Both Mary Pickford and her husband Douglas Fairbanks, refused to comment on the suit because no papers have been served. John G. Mott, personal attorney for Miss Pickford, said he knew some of the details, although no papers had been served. He said the suit will be defended for the reason that the baby farm idea on which "Sparrows" was built had occured to Miss Pickford a number of years ago during a visit to London.

MAY TRY HOP WITHIN MONTH

Army Fokker Nearing Coast on Test Flight

Film Aviator Ships Monoplane to Honolulu

Neither Eligible for $35,000 Prize Offer

BY BILL HENRY

Forty-eight hours ago the Hawaii-America flight consisted of an offer of cash prizes totaling $35,000 by Jim Dole, Hawaiian pineapple magnate, and a vast amount of rumors, talk, statements and conversation.

Since that time at least two very interesting things have taken place, which indicate that there is going to be more action and less talk, viz:

A giant three-engined C-2 Fokker United States Army monoplane with Lieuts. Lester J. Maitland and Albert P. Hagenberger left for the Pacific Coast accompanied by an official announcement that the plane will attempt a San Francisco-Honolulu jump within thirty days.

A "mystery plane" carefully crated and guarded, was shipped from San Francisco on Friday en route to Honolulu by steamer. It was accompanied by two naval reserve aviators and a civilian pilot and, it is understood, will try the hop from Honolulu to the Pacific Coast within a month.

The above facts not only indicate that there is going to be some rather immediate action in the attempt to span the largest body of water thus far attempted by aviators, but also that Mr. Dole's $35,000 isn't the main incentive for the flight for neither the army plane nor the one now on its way, via steamer to Honolulu, will be eligible for the Dole prize money.

Air Service pilots in army equipment are not eligible for any prizes

The Lancer

by Harry Carr

THIS is my idea of dramatic fervor under a severe handicap:

The radio singer who announced last night, in a low tremulous, thrilling voice, that he had ceased to sing in behalf of a medical belt; and would hereafter warble in glorification of a facial shampoo.

ROBIN HOOD

I want to hear Robin Hood sung in the Hollywood Bowl; because I want to find out if any opera ever written was really as good as Robin Hood seemed to me when I was a little high-school boy, saving up for a week to buy a 25-cent ticket to the gallery.

MATINEE HEROES

At that, I imagine that it must have been pretty good—with Jessie Bartlett Davis, Eugene Cowles, Henry Clay Barnebee and Alice Nielsen.

In those days the Bostonians used to sing at the Old Childs Grand Operahouse at First and Main streets.

Henry Miller was then the matinee hero of the land.

KELLY MAY AID MISS MACKAYE

Actress's Attorneys Consider Calling Him for Defense

Action Likely if Prosecution Makes Change in Plans

Reports of Deal for Turning State's Evidence Denied

In the event Paul Kelly, young cinema actor, under conviction on a charge of manslaughter in the killing of Ray Raymond, musical comedy actor is not called as a State's witness at the trial of Dorothy Mackaye, stage actress, and his avowed sweetheart, as was announced when her trial opened last week in Superior Judge Burnell's court on two felony charges, he probably will be summoned as a witness in her behalf, it was indicated yesterday in the defense camp.

Defense Attorneys Jerry Geisler and Roger Marchetti are considering calling Kelly as a witness for Miss Mackaye if Dep. Dist.-Attys. Murray and Kemp change their original plans and fail to call him. Reports to the effect that negotiations were under way for Kelly to turn State's evidence if an application for probation is not opposed by the District Attorney's office were vehemently denied yesterday by all parties concerned.

W. I. Gilbert, attorney for Kelly, said yesterday that if Kelly is called by either side in the Mackaye trial, which is to be resumed tomorrow at 2 p.m., he will instruct him to take the stand and reiterate his story of his fight with Raymond, which resulted in his conviction and sentence of from one to ten years at San Quentin. His case is now on appeal.

GILBERT'S STATEMENT

"It is my intention to visit Mr. Kelly at the County Jail Monday to instruct him to take the stand in the event he is called upon to testify," Mr. Gilbert said. "He testified at his own trial and there is no reason why he cannot testify at this trial if he is wanted by either side as a witness."

The prosecutors said yesterday they had not definitely decided whether they will call the convicted man to testify against Miss Mackaye and that this question will not be decided until next week. If called Kelly will be questioned concerning his relations with Miss Mackaye which, the prosecution asserts, brought about the fatal fist fight. He will also be interrogated concerning $800 he said he loaned to Miss Mackaye to pay her hospital bills and to bury her husband. It is the theory of the prosecutors that this money was used to "cover up" the true facts of Raymond's death.

THREE WITNESSES

Three witnesses have been called to the stand since the opening of the trial on last Thursday. These were Charlotte Ethel Lee, negress, who was housekeeper for the Raymonds; County Autopsy Surgeon Wagner and Max Wagner, roommate of Kelly. Through the testimony of Dr. Wagner and Miss Lee the defense attorneys formed a basis for a new defense against the cause of death, indicating they will seek to prove Raymond suffered his fatal subdural hemorrhage, not from a blow from Kelly's fists, but as a result of falling out of bed and striking his head against a divan.

Wagner will be called back to the stand tomorrow afternoon for cross-examination by Mr. Geisler. He will be followed by Perry Askom, an actor and friend of Raymond, and "Jungles" Teno Yobu, Japanese houseboy for Kelly, who is to testify concerning Miss Mackaye's visits to Kelly's apartment at which, the Japanese asserts, she spent the night on several occasions.

Miss Mackaye is on trial on charges of being an accessory after the fact and with compounding a felony for asserted attempts to conceal the facts in her husband's death. Dr. W. J. Sullivan, who treated Raymond and was jointly indicted with the actress, was granted a separate trial. It is probable he will be a witness during the case.

GABLES CLUB DINNER

In celebration of the first anniversary of the Gables Beach Club, President J. Ward Cohen will give a complimentary dinner and entertainment to the members on the 22nd and 29th inst. Parents Unable to Identify Man in Dance Killing

An attempt to identify J. M. McFarland, 24 years of age as the lone bandit who, on April 8, last, shot and fatally wounded Earl M. Hatch while robbing Hatch and his mother, Mrs. Violette Hatch of the proceeds of a Lonesome Club dance, failed yesterday when he was confronted in the City Jail by Mr. and Mrs. Hatch, parents of the slain man.

While McFarland's arrest late Friday night at a Lonesome Club dance at Seventh and Francisco streets was the result of Mr. Hatch's action in recognition of him in the crowd as resembling the slayer of his son, he definitely stated when viewing the suspect by daylight that he had made a mistake.

McFarland, Detective Lieutenants Miller and Condaffer stated, probably will be released today.

The fatal shooting took place at the home of Mrs. Hatch at 2149 Echo Park avenue.

PATIENT ENDS LIFE

Barbara Voge, Pomona, a patient at the Porter Sanatorium, Culver City, committed suicide yesterday by climbing to the roof of the institution, slashing her wrists with a razor, then jumping to the ground below. No reason was given for her act.

garet Mather in "Lady of Lyons." When it came to the duel scene a fat old actor made a few perfunctory passes with a fencing foil that was covered with a rubber tip. In those "great old days" that you read about, that stuff passed for acting.

Even as a child, this made me so indignant that I still remember the name of the actor, Clarence Handyside. And if I thought he were still alive, I would write him a personal letter that would go blistering down his backbone.

Children—whatever they may tell you to the contrary—real acting came in with the movie.

WEAKER SEX

The "weaker sex"—the one to which belongs this New York woman who swam eight miles through a boiling sea to get help for her husband who was drifting out to sea in a yacht with a dead engine.

SAILS

This accident off the Florida coast and a similar one in the Catalina Channel last week show the folly of motor boaters.

No matter what kind of engine you have, there should also be a small sail—just enough to overcome the drift of the tide.

On the other hand, all sailboats should have a small kicker. The ideal boat for these waters is a yawl or a ketch with a small engine.

OVERALLS

The woman principal of a San Francisco school who sent a little boy home because he wore overalls was guilty of insufferable impertinence.

Were I the city editor of a San Francisco paper, I should send a fashion writer to that school and make a critical (and public) examination of the teacher's own clothes and publish the result.

No doubt she would be found to be quite as dowdy as the copper-riveted morning attire of the war veteran's little boy.

Rural Education Group Enlarges Scope of Work

Closer organization and the broadening of its scope marked the fourth annual conference of Better Rural Education which has been meeting at the University of California at Los Angeles for three days, according to F. E. Older, professor of agriculture at the local university.

San Diego State Teachers' College, Santa Barbara State Teachers' College and the University of California at Los Angeles have been named leaders in the new movement and will work for the permanency of the former conference and broaden its field through closer organization.

Because of recent legislation, according to Prof. Older, the rural education system in California will undergo a complete change and the Better Rural Education body carry on a constructive program to keep step with the State changes.

MAY TRY HOP WITHIN MONTH

offered by civilians, which eliminates Maitland and Hagenberger automatically, while the "mystery ship" and her pilots are barred from the competition because they will be attempting the flight in the other direction. Mr. Dole's offer at present is only good for a flight from the Pacific Coast to Honolulu and is not good the other way.

Meanwhile plans for the so-called "Jim Dole flight," which carries a prize of $25,000 for the first flyer to reach Honolulu from the mainland and $10,000 for the second flyer, are proceeding and the "Citizens' Trans-Pacific Flight Committee" of San Francisco with Frank A. Flynn, secretary of the National Aeronautical Association, as chairman, has been swamped with inquiries regarding the flight.

Briefly stated the rules for the Dole prize call for a nonstop flight from any point on the Pacific Coast to Honolulu at any time after August 12. Airplanes may start at any point on the North American continent and must finish either at the John Rodgers Airport, four miles from Honolulu, or, in the case of seaplanes, at Pearl Harbor, eight miles west of Honolulu. Entries must be registered with the nearest chapter of the National Aeronautical Association eleven days prior to the take-off.

ARMY ENTRY CAPABLE

To get to specific cases one plane that is capable of making the flight is the Army Fokker C-2 now on its way to the coast. This is a large three-engined monoplane which is almost an exact duplicate of the "America" in which Commander Richard E. Byrd is expecting to fly to Europe within the next forty-eight hours. It will carry two men and 1100 gallons of gasoline without any particular difficulty which will give a flying range of more than 3000 miles.

The "mystery plane" which was shipped from San Francisco on Friday will be flown by Richard Grace, who has done considerable flying for motion pictures. Grace was accompanied to Honolulu by Lieut. Esten B. Koger of Los Angeles, a widely known naval reserve flyer, and by C. C. Spangenberg, who is to be the mechanician in charge. Neither will accompany Grace on the actual flight, as his plane is very small and fast and will be heavily loaded with a single pilot. Maj. Grant Dolge of Los Angeles is said to be backing the flight.

There are several other planes in and around Los Angeles which either are being built for the flight or are being negotiated for. The International Aircraft Company of Long Beach is building two planes designed by E. M. Fisk, and both of which will be completed in the near future. One is a single-engine job and the other a multimotored creation, but great secrecy is being maintained regarding the plans. Both ships have been paid for by private parties, and both, according to company officials, while they are the company's stock models, are capable of making the Hawaiian flight and were ordered for that purpose.

MONOPLANE BUILT OF WOOD

Allan Lockheed, one of two brothers who built a number of navy planes during the war at Santa Barbara, is completing a beautiful monoplane in his Hollywood factory for which several flight candidates are angling. His plane will handle 3200 miles nicely at 110 miles' cruising speed or 135 miles an hour full speed. It was designed by John K. Northrup and has a unique two-piece plywood body, which would have great bouyancy in case of an emergency landing on the water.

Lee Schoenhair, a widely known local pilot, has purchased a newly designed and built biplane from Stearman & Hoyt of Venice, and has installed a 260-horsepower French Salmson radial engine. The plane is very fast but was not originally designed to carry a load sufficient for the Hawaiian flight and Schoenhair who has entered the competition, is now engaged in experimental flying to see whether or not he can do the work with this plane.

Earnest Smith, a pilot of the Pacific Air Transport Company which flies the mail from Los Angeles to Seattle, has purchased from the concern a Travellar monoplane and is now engaged in remodeling it at Crissey Field, San Francisco, for the flight. With a new Wright engine, it is said to be capable of carrying two men and fuel for a 3000-mile flight and Smith is planning to take Capt. C. H. Carter as navigator on the trip.

Art Goebel, another widely known Los Angeles flyer, recently left for Wichita, Kan., accompanied by H. C. Lipiatt with the avowed intention of purchasing a plane for the Hawaiian flight. Lipiatt is connected with the Travelair company and it is presumed that the ship Goebel will use will be similar to that purchased by Smith.

In addition to the entrants whose plans have to some extent been divulged as above, the San Francisco committee which has been receiving inquiries and entries for the flight has announced the following as probable entrants, Jess Windham and Ben Stern, Memphis, Tenn.; Lieut. Sheetz, San Francisco; Lieut. Zufall, Fresno: Walter Wilson, Atlanta, Ga.; Al Cellier, Jr., Berkeley, Cal.; Nicholas Miscovich, San Francisco; William N. Stewart, San Francisco; Virgil M. Cline, San Jose; Robert Hart, Jr., Altoona, Pa.; Anthony Burke, Hollywood, Cal.; Ernest Smith, San Francisco; Thomas Templeton, San Francisco; Lee Schoenhair, Los Angeles; Maj. Livingston Irving, San Francisco; Clare Vance, Concord, Cal.; Paul F. Redfern, Atlanta, Ga.; Capt. F. J. Franklin, Los Angeles; Everett Winings and Alfred Teall, Indianapolis; D. H. Griffin, Oklahoma City; Walter E. Swagerty, San Francisco; Lenar Elm, San Francisco; Arthur J. Mullen, St. Louis; C. W. Garrett, Tulsa, Okla.; L. H. Atkinson, Gary, Ind.; Gordon Campbell, Victoria, B.C.; Murray B. Dilley, Jr., and Roy Endsley, Kansas City; H. J. Lynch, E. Butte, Mont.; Jean Devillarg and Rex Smith, Los Angeles, and L. G. Schmidt, Fontana, Cal.

PARADE TO OPEN CITY HALL RITES

streets will be continued through November. The demolition of buildings on the west side of Spring street is to be done to make way for the straightening of Spring street from First street to Temple street.

G. L. Rodgers, city efficiency engineer, who has been assigned to the City Hall construction, since the work was started, said that the first city departments to be moved into the new building will be those occupying rented offices or those in city buildings to be torn down. The departments in the present City Hall will be the last to be moved, this moving to take place in December and January.

AHEAD OF SCHEDULE

Ground was broken for the new City Hall on March 4, 1926, and while the contractors have until January 1 to complete their work the construction will be completed two months ahead of time. The entire building will have been completed in one year and six months, or within the time estimated by the architects when they were awarded the contract and within the $5,000,000 bond issue provided for the building.

Efficiency Engineer Rodgers said that the speed was made possible by the co-operation which existed throughout the construction between the city government representatives including Public Works Commissioner Delorey, Engineer Rodgers, the architects and their engineer, G. H. Schulte, and the various contractors.

PUBLICITY BY STATE SUGGESTED

Real Estate Association Would Have Legislature Appropriate Large Sums

Appropriation by the State Legislature of a large sum annually to advertise California's exceptional assets so that a greater number of settlers will be attracted to the State is desirable, the board of directors of the California Real Estate Association decided yesterday at a meeting in the Biltmore. The suggestion came from Stephen Barnson, State Real Estate Commissioner, and was unanimously indorsed by the board. Representatives of real-estate boards from all sections of the State south of San Francisco attended the meeting.

The application of the Los Angeles Realty Board for membership in the association was approved. Harry Culver, president of the Los Angeles board, and W. D. Cochrane, vice-president of the association for this district, presented the application to Harry B. Allen, president of the association.

The State, cities, counties and railroads are to be asked by the board not to build highways or railroad lines paralleling each other closely but to divert their improvements into a greater number of districts so that more communities can be developed. Several other resolutions also were adopted.

RULING THE WAVES

Under the new dispensation the average broadcaster encourages the hope of obtaining a permanent wave.

HOMES

One of the funny things is that it is people who insist on uniquely architectured homes who spend most of their lives in auto camps.

ON THE CROSSING

The old days were safer. It was embarrassing to get the horse before the cart but not suicidal, as it is to get the flivver before the engine.

BEYOND QUACKERY

The Middle West's farm problem certainly is a tough one for all the politicians. There's simply no way to make farm incomes soar without making city consumers sore, too.

STILL HARD PRESSED

Flights across the Atlantic may fill him with hope for the future, but still they offer no immediate relief for the fellow who finds himself between the devil and the deep sea.

MARKED DIFFERENCE

Well, the girls may cut their hair the same way men do, smoke the same way and wear the same kind of knickers—but we've never yet seen one scratch her matches the same way.

CAN'T BLAME WALKING

The feet of the American people are getting bigger, shoe manufacturers tell us. This seems one more proof that we never did walk with the same force and energy with which we "step on it."

POLES MAY FALL

Russia may be a little behind other nations in the development of wireless, but it seems to think it can get along very well without any Poles. But when you knock down a pole there's always danger it may fall on you.

TO SAVE THE SPECIES

The very people who most love to hunt deer, quail and other wild game are the ones who established closed seasons to keep their eventual prey from being extinguished. The installment folks really ought to take a hint from that, and establish a closed season for the weekly payers.

MIXED FODDER

A Federal judge insists that spoiled figs must not be used in the production of plug tobacco. How does he know that it isn't the tobacco that spoils the figs? Why interfere anyhow? Perhaps the user of the weed wants his tobacco with a fig tang. Mayhap there are others who wish their figs to carry a tobacco flavor.

PLAYTIME IN CALIFORNIA

At the Chicago offices of the Santa Fe it was mentioned that in four days 8600 passengers had left for California. They filled 238 Pullmans and it was declared that no abatement of the rush was expected. So it may be seen that many dwellers in the Middle West have learned that the Pacific Coast is as sweet as anything that the earth offers as a setting for the summer vacation.

FAVORITE FILMS

British lawmakers wanted to fix it so that at least a quarter of the films shown in England should be made in that country. But it looks as if the exhibitors had induced them to accept a compromise by which the proportion for the next twelve years is placed at 20 per cent. The audiences much prefer the Hollywood article but will endure a mixed program with patience. Incidentally American producers and American actors make a good many fine pictures on British territory and these would naturally be acceptable in English theaters as the home-made article. The British audiences will continue to get about what they want.

HOME OR CAREER

A famous woman who not only paints canvases but carves in marble says that every woman may be entitled to a career, but it can never be complete without children. There are women who are married and who are thought to be filling careers, but without the children in the home they are as sounding brass and tinkling cymbals. There are women who have homes and children, but their lives are incomplete without a taste of the career to which they are adapted. The perfect life is open to the woman who has the home, the children, and the career. The career should not be an eternal barrier to the home and children. These contentions would need quite a bit of adjustment to fit some lives. How often can a woman achieve both a family and a career?

NEW DEAL FOR CHINA

In his determination to halt the Red menace in China Gen. Chang Tso-Lin now seeks to unite all the factions opposed to Communism in a strong fight against the Bolshevist element. Chang, who has been a powerful leader in North China for over a year, has assumed the dictatorship of that part of the republic and says he intends to remain indefinitely at Peking and carry on the war against the Red forces.

Until lately Chang Tso-Lin also has been warring against Gen. Chiang Kai-Shek, leader of the government having its seat at Nanking, the Communists having their headquarters at Hankow and also battling against Chang Tso-Lin's antagonist. With two rather formidable forces to fight, neither of these generals might reasonably expect to get anywhere in their war on the Bolsheviki. United, they might be able to sweep them off the map. It is, therefore, sincerely to be hoped that the proposed coalition will be effected and that the two wings of the Nationalists will present an invincible front to the Communists.

A new Nationalist party has been born out of the wreckage of the Manchurians. It is understood that Chang Tso-Lin, who is supporting this movement, is inclined to be quite liberal in the matter of the composition of its officers, and has invited his present enemy, Chiang Kai-Shek, to become one of its chieftains. The occidental mind hardly can grasp the Chinese idea of switching one's loyalty from one military force to another against which it has been making hot war, but this has been done so many times in Chinese history, and particularly of late years, that little is thought of it in China.

One reason why soviet Russia has been so active of late in Chinese territory and now virtually dominates the Hankow government is explained by a writer in the Saturday Evening Post who says in substance that the Moscow leaders, who are strongly opposed to the British, have a pet theory that it is in China that the British Empire will be overthrown and the world revolution initiated. The genesis of this idea is credited to Lenin, who, as the Post writer says, "happened, for the misery of the world, to be a genius."

It is not very clear just how Russia proposes to overthrow the British Empire in China and effect the great revolution. To be sure, Russia has all Mongolia in her grasp; but the Mongolians are the least advanced of all the Chinese peoples, with the possible exception of the Tibetans. The great mass of eastern and southern Chinese, who represent nearly all the civilization to be found in the country, cannot be led by the nose as easily as the other just named. It has shown a determination to fight Communism to the bitter end, and doubtless will do so.

There are thinkers in China, and these see that Russian dominance would sweep away the last vestige of Nationalist control. Among the Bolshevist element of the south—an element created by Russian intrigue and propaganda—there are some members of the literati and, here and there, scholars of no mean standing; but for the most part Communistic China is made up of the rabble, and for these the really patriotic Chinese have nothing but contempt.

The one great idea of the new Nationalist party just formed at Peking is to save China from the claws of the Russian bear. But while it opposes Communism it stands for great liberality in social and economic usage, declaring for co-operation of labor and capital and the development of culture and natural resources. If the unity of all the Nationalist forces dreamed of by Chang Tso-Lin can be made possible, China, with the moral and, perhaps, military support of the powers, will not become an easy prey to the Russian reds, and the British Empire will be tolerably safe, as will the rest of the world, from Moscow's ridiculous threat of revolution.

"THE FOOL HATH SAID—"

It is difficult to estimate properly the reason for the efforts made to spread the pernicious doctrines of atheism. The great mass of the people remain true to the essentials of faith that have in all ages cheered them in times of trouble, nerved them to deeds of heroic daring when danger threatened, and which shed round them the light of hope when their shadows fall eastward.

The historian observes that after every great upheaval in national life, a certain element seeks to extend the change in thought into the psychic field and views tending to cast doubt on religious verities are expressed more freely than usual and we have what might be termed an eclipse of faith. Like all eclipses they are brief as compared with national life and faith seems to shine with a clearer light when the shadow has passed. It was so in the case of the French Revolution. The boast was openly made by the radical element that they would remove all need of God from national thought, but the World War brought to the attention of the whole world the trusting, hoping soul of France. We read of the spread of atheism in Germany, but the eclipse, if such there be, will soon pass from the native land of Luther, Melanchthon and Erasmus. Even Russia, cursed by Bolshevism, the twin brother of atheism, will emerge to the light for, while the great mass of the Russian people are ignorant—superstitious, if you will—they do not forget the faith of their fathers.

We were told long ago that we could not by searching find God. The prophet was taught that while God was not in the earthquake, nor in the fire, nor yet in the storm, He was in the still small voice. Religious verities cannot be demonstrated as a theorem in geometry. They belong to the intuitive nature of man, where the finest flowers of the soul bloom. They are to be experienced, not proven by logic.

The civilized world is united against the menace of Bolshevism which tends to break down the institutions of government under which we have lived and made our great advance in science and national well-being. We regard further spread of Bolshevism as a menace and we guard against it. But in the spread of atheistic doctrines we are confronted with a subtler foe, one more dangerous to the welfare of society, for it would destroy the very foundations from which all advance starts. Civilization is the result of a continuous struggle for something higher, nobler, better than we have known. It consists in the gradual unfolding of our spiritual nature, enabling us to give concrete expression to thoughts that come to receptive souls from the spiritual world in which we live and move and have our being, summed up in the highest concept we can form of an infinite Father of all.

NO MORE AMAZONS

Mention is made in the Literary Digest of the efforts of an English scientist to discredit the ancient tales concerning the Amazons and their prowess in battle. There were no wild women warriors and they never had an armored queen. The poets, painters and sculptors who have immortalized these heroic dames in their several arts and crafts were but dreamers.

According to the professor these Amazons were really smooth-shaven Hittites who came to the battlefields in the days of a bearded world. This was nearly fifteen centuries before the Christian era. At that time most of the fighting men in any army were a hairy lot and there wasn't a barber shop west of Damascus. But some Hittite must have invented the safety razor, because when the battlers of this nation met the quarrelsome Assyrians it was noticed that their faces were as smooth as a lady's lip. That was how it was that the first editions of all the papers had it that King Bozo of Babylon had picked a fight with a flock of females. Anyhow, the Amazons became established in the annals of the day and they have hung on ever since. One of the daily dozen of Hercules was to capture the girdle of the queen of the Amazons and he didn't get it by playing the ukulele under her window, either.

According to other records, Alexander the Great also had his session with an Amazonian queen and there is story of these wild women mopping up the Scythian armies. They are as strongly intrenched as the Sirens—and heaven knows they have plenty of hang-overs.

It seems a shame that an iconoclastic professor should now come along and heave these warlike women out of the picture. Nothing is safe.

CHARACTER IS CAUGHT

A series of short plays has been prepared by the New York Child Welfare Society for character building in children. They are prepared progressively for different grades and each has a definite ethical topic.

In one called the "Bank Job" two boys are selected for running errands. One is especially commended for standing by his convictions of honesty—not in any preachy, goody-goody sort of way, but in a wholesome manner that appeals to red-blooded boys.

The world is gradually waking up to the fact that truth is largely propagated by personality. Even dull, dead facts of life may be personalized and become thrilling with human interest.

History as a series of biographies is compelling. Science when thrown on the screen where living things are seen to grow before the eyes will live forever in the mind.

Instead of starting with grammars as teachers did a generation ago, linguists now begin to talk to their pupils in the foreign tongue and before the class knows it, it is conversing freely. Grammar is introduced later as an after thought to polish up the speech once learned.

The Teacher of teachers taught by parables which were condensed short stories of rare merit. The movie is the greatest school along certain lines today because characters move swiftly through phases of life from prologue to finis.

A woman taken from the slums out into the sunshine by the Fresh Air Fund was missing after a day or so. Later she was found back in her old haunts. Upon being questioned why she had run away she replied, "Folks are more interesting than stumps." Possibly this same instinct prompts the farmer's boy to trek to the city.

"Character is caught, not taught." If some human being catches it, knowledge easily becomes a contagion. The Japanese are sturdy imitators. This may explain their meteoric rise.

When education becomes a game it is fun. When mental culture becomes a contest, then examinations are no longer a grind but a field meet.

The New York Welfare Society has hit upon an effective method of transmission of ideas and ideals. The drama is beginning to appear in both church and school. It is interesting to note that the drama originated in religious bodies in ancient days for devotional purposes. It should never have been surrendered.

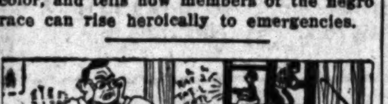
HUMBLE HEROISM

The Mississippi flood has brought forth many stories of heroism, but none is more outstanding than that of Samuel White, a New Orleans negro. It is a great thing to have been instrumental in saving one human life, but to White belongs the distinction of having saved twenty-five families by his own unaided efforts.

These twenty-five families were marooned in their houses in the flooded district, with the water steadily rising and endangering their lives. Observing their predicament, the negro constructed a crude raft, and started to their rescue. Braving the rushing waters in his tipsy craft, he made repeated trips until he had rescued the entire twenty-five families.

His solicitude did not end there. Some of the people were old and feeble, some young and tender, and all were drenched and cold. He ransacked box cars for straw to make beds for all his charges, and he and his wife made huge pots of coffee to warm and cheer the sufferers. One of the group was a family whose members were all sick with the measles, yet so successfully did the negro couple nurse them under the most adverse conditions that the unfortunates did not even develop pneumonia. The two colored people nursed and sheltered and fed as best they could this small army of people for three whole days until relief came to aid them.

This is a remarkable example of bravery and unselfishness, linked with intelligent care afterwards. It illustrates the truth that bravery is not a matter of race or color, and tells how members of the negro race can rise heroically to emergencies.



INTERRUPTED LABOR

By James J. Montague

Whenever I take up my pen
 In my obscure and tiny flat,
Across the street a gang of men
 Start up an echoing rat-tat-tat!
Such thoughts as I possess take wing,
 Back in my chair I have to lean—
And listen to that riveting Machine.

In time I came to like the noise,
 My ear drums ached and throbbed no more—
I toiled with easy equipoise
 Unconscious of the din and roar;
But as my hurrying pen I plied
 And speeded up my thoughts a bit—
Just as I got into my stride
 They quit.

Once more I searched a vacant mind
 With a distressed and troubled heart,
No more ideas could I find
 Than when I made my futile start.
Bereft was I of plot or plan,
 I sat and cursed those wretched men
Until the riveting began Again.

Through noise or silence I can ply
 My trade and keep a steady gait,
Across the sheets my pen will fly—
 Excepting when they alternate.
If only that grim visaged lot
 Would rear their rivet-welded wall
Eight hours at a stretch or not
 At all!

THE LOST THRI

BY CHARLES COKE WOODS

At the centennial exhibition in Philadelphia on the palm of his hand a diminutive engine. and tooted. In all respects save strength and the giant engine, but, as to strength and service difference between something and nothing. with its noise and splutter it was all through. almost every zone of activity, there is much just action, splutter and noise. It lifts nobody's cargo, gets nobody anywhere.

When beginning the most delicate operation to save a woman's life a great surgeon said to his assistant, "Don't hurry; we haven't any time to lose." In that philosophy of serene strength is the greatest sanity. In the hysterical haste of the hour lies the secret of an immense amount of misdirected strength. We like the thrill in the excitement of haste. We are enthralled by the thrill. To thrill is to pierce, to punch, to penetrate. This is the age of the thrill. We want the thrill in the news. We want the thrill in the opera. We want it in the movies. We want the thrill in our story books, above everything a large type of novel readers must have the thrill. If it can't be made out of truth it must be made out of falsehood. If the thrill cannot be made out of something decent it must be made out of something indecent. And, lo, and for shame, a thousand mercenary publishers cater to the thrill and the thrillers.

Exactly like the child mind that it is we are asking "Tell me another 'tory." Children-like tens of thousands of Americans do not think they are getting anything unless they are getting thrilling entertainment. It may be a thrill of joy or it may be a thrill of pain, but in any event it must be a thrill. It must be something that pierces, penetrates, punctures. Now, shooting stars are good, maybe, but it would hardly be desirable for all of the stars to shoot at the same time. We need some that are fixed and steady. The night traveler must keep his eye on the north star; it is never out of place. It can be depended upon, but one can never tell when one of these shooting stars is going to shoot or where it will shoot or what it will shoot. Besides, promiscuous shooting is a rather precarious business. One never can tell when to stand or run or dodge. That is the thrill. It is too meteoric to measure by. It is a flash in the pan. But when you really want to get somewhere you must fix your eye on the old, reliable north star. All the storms of the centuries have never been able to move that star from its place in the heavens. Customs have changed. Philosophies have changed. Theologies have fluctuated, women's skirts have varied in length and degrees of tightness, and even science has had to revise its findings from alchemy to chemistry, from astrology to astronomy, and last, but least, certain Congressmen have arisen and vanished to the limbo of oblivion, but that north star has remained through all of these perturbations unshaken and unshakable.

What life is after is some lasting satisfaction. "He hath set eternity in his heart." That is what the Hebrew prophet says the Creator has done with man—"set eternity in his heart." And the desires and longings that arise out of this eternity zone of man-soul cannot have the way sufficiently lighted by shooting stars or thrill stabs. Long and lasting Amazons of satisfaction must flow from somewhere into this eternal zone of man's inner life. The pin-prick or the dagger stab of the thrill is too temporary and too little. The mere thrill is lost on the situation before it begins. It is like the common honey bee trying to find the deep-set honey cup of the red clover—the honey spoon is not long enough to reach. Let us allow, however, that the thrill may have its place and its decent ministry in that it may start something worth while and permanent. It may give the keynote to a worth-while song. A thrill, a stab of joy or pain might start a moral conflagration that would burn out the vices of a city or a nation. Emerson tells us of "one shot" that was heard around the world. One decent thrill might be like that shot. But it is certain that no thrill nor art nor music nor writing that does not in some deft way head straight for the help of the human soul can be of permanent value. If the thrill can get itself swallowed up in the great flood of ministry to human life and its needs, well and good. Otherwise it is the lost thrill. It is the swift but uncertain arrow that missed the target. It is the cloudburst too swift and too sudden to sink into the thirsty soil. Therein lies the peril and the futility of the mere thrill.

Mere thrills can never satisfy
The souls of men that never die.

There is the lost pleasure thrill. The old Romans sought it in their gormandizing feasts. They exhausted their genius in efforts to renew the pleasure thrills of appetite. They took emetics to disgorge and start over again. They got too full to keep the thrill of pleasure from the mere animal act of eating. They would rather vomit it all up like dogs and start over than to lose the thrill. But they lost the thrill at last by losing their stomachs. The ashes of ancient Rome became the mute sign of the price those old Romans paid for their thrills. The bankruptcy of life is the price of excessive thrills. The poor fool pays all he has to get the thrill and then finds that he has lost the thrill for which he paid. A great Hebrew philosopher said, "The wages of sin is death." That is confirmed by the lost thrills of all gormandizers and sensualists. Nero tried all kinds of thrills and lost them all in the tragedies of lust. So did Cleopatra and her puppet kings. When given the place of tyranny the thrill asks all and gives nothing in return but

Record Cargo of Cocoanuts Arrives Here

The largest shipment of cocoanuts ever made to the Pacific Coast arrived at Terminal Island yesterday aboard the steamship Alaska from Colon, Panama, according to an announcement by Edward Dale, vice-president and general manager of Safeway Stores, buyer of the consignment of nuts

All of the recent shipment of nuts are over average size and were procured by two young Los Angeles traders who made the trip along the Panama coast in a tramp steamer and selected them by hand-grading from the natives. Antonia Gutzmer and William H. Campbell made the trip that resulted in the prize cocoanut shipment.

Mr. Dale stated that the average cocoanut measures from eight to eleven inches, but the selected stock which he has purchased will be at least fourteen inches in girth apiece. Some of the nuts will measure twenty inches, twice the average size, he pointed out.

Men Who Will Pick Champion Intercollegiate Orator

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE HENNING — MRS. JESSE H. SHREVE — JUDGE FREDERICK C. VALENTINE — CHARLES S. CRAIL — DR. GILBERT G BENJAMIN — DR. EDWARD MIMS.

ORATORY JUDGES CHOSEN

Seven Distinguished Men From All Parts of Nation to Pick Intercollegiate Contest

Seven distinguished judges from various parts of the United States will select the national winner in the final meeting of the Third National Intercollegiate Oratorical Contest, to be held next Thursday evening at 8 o'clock in Bovard Auditorium, University of Southern California.

The board of judges follows:

Dr. William Paxton Burris, professor of history, University of Cincinnati; Dr. Gilbert Giddings Benjamin, professor of history, State University of Iowa; Dr. Edwin Mims, professor of English, Vanderbilt University; Mrs. Jesse Shreve, State Regent, Daughters of the American Revolution; Judge Henning of the United States District Court; Judge Crail of the Superior Court, and Judge Valentine of the Superior Court.

The judges will attach equal importance to composition and delivery, each county 50 points. They will rate all seven of the speakers without consultation. The winner will be determined under the low-point-total system. Owing to the fact that there are seven cash awards, ranging from $1500 for first place to $350 for seventh place, the task of judging will be a more exacting one than if the judges merely had to select the winner and give no particular attention to the relative ratings of all of the participants.

The finalists, in their speaking order, follow:

Max N. Kroloff, Morningside College, Sioux City, Iowa.

W. A. Cusack, Dartmouth College, Hanover, N. H.

Clarke Beach, University of Maryland.

Hardy M. Ray, Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill.

H. J. Oberholser, North Carolina State College, Raleigh, N. C.

David Abner Moscovitz, Rutgers University, New Jersey.

Arthur L. Syvertson, University of Southern California.

Each speaker will be allowed ten minutes. The meeting will begin promptly at 8 o'clock.

BROADCAST OSCULATION PROVES DISGUISED KISS

'Strange Noise' Heard by Listeners Found to be Culmination of Affectionate Romance

BY DR. RALPH L. POWER

The keynote of today's radio discussion is osculation and I hope that no linotype operator will change the topic to oscillation. Anyway, it doesn't matter so very much. A handy dictionary tells me that osculation is the art of kissing, while a radio text gives forth the statement that oscillation is periodic surging first in one direction and then in the other.

I have given the radio kiss considerable study from the theoretical viewpoint and am about ready to launch on the practical study of the subject. But it is the theoretical side and not the practical that is up for discussion just now.

A fresh news dispatch direct from Europe tells us that Prof. Uyropot of Copenhagen University is quoted as saying that kissing is a science and will eventually be taught in universities. And the paragrapher took a dirty dig at the educator when he continued, "Probably by some near-sighted old fellow with long whiskers. That certainly would take the poetry out of it."

So if the kiss has such a staunch champion as this European teacher it looks as though the kiss—soul, love and other miscellaneous varieties—might perhaps come into its own.

ADVICE FROM CARR

But along comes Harry Carr who writes that some of these fine summer days he is going to dash off a zippy flapper yarn in which the first time a sheik tries to get the heroine into a necking party she is going to tell him sternly:

"Wait a minute. I read that 8,000,000,000 germs go romping into every kiss. If you want to kiss me you got to fumigate yourself."

In order to reconcile the statements of these two illustrious gentlemen perhaps it will be possible to [illegible] the gentle knack of kissing and, at the same time, keep it a germ-proof affair.

At first hand it might seem that radio would be the agency for such propaganda. Yet it has its pitfalls. A few weeks ago a broadcast station in the British Isles sent out some strange noises in order to test the fidelity of transmission and the reception of sound.

GUESS AT SOUNDS

Sounds that ought to be familiar to everyone were given out and fans held a guessing contest and wrote to the station with their idea of the sound.

Here's something along the line of illustrating the diversity of judgment in the responses with reference to the particular sound. One fellow wrote that it "was a slap on the cheek because it was a dull thud accompanied by static-like noise," while another wrote, "It sounded like pulling a cork out of a beer bottle. There was a hissing and then a sharp pop."

Still another claimed the sound was produced by the bursting of a balloon because it was a clean, sharp pop, and still one more insisted that "it was a sharp blow on the body as in a prize fight."

The real answer was that the sound was a kiss and but few people guessed the solution. Whether the radio equipment failed to impress the kiss on the ether waves or whether the receiving sets did not faithfully reproduce what had been whispered into the microphone is not known.

RESULTS OF RESEARCHES

Now up at KGO in Oakland they are giving out the result of vast researches into the ever-growing field and the line of waiting "subjects" up there includes several popular Los Angeles announcers who are on their vacation schedule.

The fact is that kissing is on the way of being taught as the Copenhagen professor wants it to be, but, contrary to Harry Carr's idea, the germs will probably go along with it.

The day of the hand-made kiss is on the wane. In fact it has already gone by the board. Hereafter osculations will be performed as nature intended them to be.

In the early days of radio broadcast the radio drama had to pioneer its way. There was no visible audience so there was no legitimate excuse to smack a loud kiss on the heroine's cheek. The hero casually kissed the back of his own hand and let it go at that.

AUDIENCE UNCONVINCED

For the time being all went well. But the real he-actor couldn't gather up much real enthusiasm just by smacking his own paw. So his pretended fervor didn't convince the audience of the air.

No longer does the actor kiss himself? Not a bit of it. That method of radio acting is as dead as last week's papers. The radio kiss of today is au naturel. The male lead takes the leading lady in his arms and plants the kiss where it rightfully belongs.

This does away with the too mechanical business of kissing that predominated when the kiss was by way of being artificial. As you already know, it isn't necessary to take my word for it, the regulation kiss makes for natural confusion, muffled tones as the lips meet, and finally the closing clinch. And a noticeable warmth of tone and expression usually follows the thrill of the real kiss.

The general climax of most broadcast plays, at least those of the more romantic variety, usually hinges on the kissing scene—or, to be meticulously exact, on the kiss itself. But in old-time radio kisses were mistaken for everything from a squeaky [illegible] horn to a leaky automobile radiator.

DOCTRINE OF KISSING

The modern radio playlets will help to spread the doctrine of correct kissing. It will fulfill the learned professor's prediction that kissing ought to be taught over a larger sphere of usefulness. But college halls and laboratories could never accomplish such a task in the way that radio can.

The younger generation isn't a bit interested in whether kissing is an art or a science. It doesn't have to be. But it can detect the difference between an artificial and a genuine kiss through the microphone.

Studio tests aptly demonstrate that there is a sighing confusion of voices, followed by slightly muffled tones, then somewhat muffled syllables, and finally a honeyed interval as the lips gradually meet in more or less gasping ecstasy.

SATURDAY'S BROADCAST

The program of KHJ last night presented the children's hour in the form of a broadcast in which the children gave poems by Edward Lynn, writer, who also read during the program.

Nona Clapp, gave "The Corn Tassel Fairies;" Dolly Wright, "Grandma's Specks;" Arthur Stevens, "My Mutt;" Marjorie Genevieve Lowe, "Brooms;" Elaine Joy, "Another Child;" Marguerita Joy, "Pussy Takes a Knitting Lesson." All of these poems were by Mr. Lynn.

Others on the juvenile hour were Clark Paschall, juvenile saxophonist, and Onolee Jones, 'cellist. The children's hour was followed by the concluding lecture of Ralph Braddock on interesting bits of history and romance of early California days.

The later evening broadcast, with Sam Glasse as guest announcer, again presented the Ray-o-Vac twins, Russ Wilday and Bill Sheehan, in song and patter; Mammy Lou with a monologue on city licenses; Fred M. Mitchell in a monologue, "Uncle Josh in the Newspaper Game," and Merle Spray in old-time heart songs.

Arthur Raymond Hill, tenor, tucked away the "Buckwheat Cakes" song in his bag of song hits, but brought out the "Fireman's Song" and "Ha, Ha, Ha," the two tunes which he popularized during the Los Angeles midnight programs over KHJ two years ago.

The instrumental portion of the musical menu was in the form of the Andalucia Serenaders, consisting of two mandolins, two guitars and two violins, playing tinkling dance tunes and dreamy waltz melodies.

IMPROVED SERVICE PROMISED ON RADIO

Radio Commissioner O. H. Caldwell says he can promise listeners and radio business men greatly improved radio conditions for the coming radio season, beginning with the fall of 1927. Just as thousands of appreciative listeners have already written in to the commission and explained that since May 1, last, they have again been able to use their radio sets with satisfaction and pleasure, so he assures of further improvement and good radio reception for the season ahead. In thus bringing good radio reception conditions to 6,000,000 families with radio sets, the commission is performing the task assigned by Congress, conscientiously, fairly and with all possible dispatch that concentrated energy and long hours can accomplish.

NEW GOOD FOR RADIO SHOW SEEN

More Than 200 Exhibitors Already Have Taken Space in Local Exposition

With more than 200 exhibits already subscribed for the fifth annual National Radio exposition, September 4 to 10, in the Ambassador Auditorium, radio trades association members yesterday professed themselves confident that a new goal in western radio exhibits is about to be attained.

A. G. Farquharson, secretary of the association, pointed out that last year's show numbered 257 exhibitors, as compared with thirty-five in the year 1922. He declared each year Los Angeles has led the list of Pacific Coast radio events, and that in all probability the number of displays will exceed 300.

Already the booths subscribed has exceeded the quota provided by Ambassador Auditorium, and Waldo T. Tupper, managing director, has found it necessary to increase the area of the auditorium by planning construction of a temporary pavilion alongside the permanent structure to house the overflow.

"This year, there will be no necessity to close the doors of the auditorium to prevent crowding in the aisles during the peak of the evening's attendance," Mr. Farquharson said, "the proposed temporary auditorium, which will provide 30,000 additional square feet of floor space will enable the exposition management to take care of all comers."

Elaborate entertainment and educational programs have been decided upon, it is said, all with a view to acquainting the Southland's population with the many strides made in radio during the last year.

DIFFICULT TO PLEASE

Studio Director's Hardest Problem is to Satisfy Most People

With studio directors of radio stations trying to please every one who has a radio receiver comes the problem of pleasing most of the people most of the time. Many of the complaints that were lodged with the Radio Commission gave some idea as to the problems faced by studio directors and announcers.

One man, from New York, objected to popular music or any entertainment except sacred music and sermons on Sunday. In most cities classic music, sermons and educational programs are broadcast on Sunday until an hour that is so late that churches have closed. Then dance music or popular programs are offered.

Another writer complained of religious programs. He wrote that anyone who wanted religion could go to church and get it—that the air should be for entertainment.

The average studio director senses his public. While letters are diminishing in numbers, nevertheless, the studio director, like a good fisherman, knows when he has a nibble. From these "nibbles" are built the programs that satisfy most people.

ORGAN CHIMES BROADCAST WELL

Unique Musical Creation for Radio

James Stuart Walker at KHJ

When James Stuart Walker presented his broadcast of organ chimes from the studio of KHJ a week ago on Sunday evening, radioland discovered a unique musical creation.

The organ chimes, for generations the pride of the Japanese people, were first introduced to the United States during the World's Fair in Chicago in the early '90's.

Since that time many sets of American manufacture have been used and, although sometimes used as an orchestral accessory, the solo numbers perhaps, give the best impression of the instrument.

The sweetly pealing music of the organ chimes will be heard through KHJ once a month with Mrs. Mary Whitworth playing the accompaniment. Their next program will be early in July on a Sunday evening concert.

RADIO FEASIBLE FOR OCEAN HOPS

Weight Factor Declared to be Negligible

Small Sending Sets Ample as to Range

Use Warranted in View of Safety Assurance

BY DON C. WALLACE

Now that both Lindbergh and Chamberlin have flown across the Atlantic without a radio set, we can look over the possibilities for radio which they could have had. Their main objection to carrying a radio probably, was its added weight, but on the basis that fifty pounds would have been permissible, we will outline a set with a range of 3000 miles.

Fifty pounds, roughly speaking, would have taken away but twelve gallons of gasoline. This would have lessened the length of the flight by approximately 125 miles in the case of Chamberlin and in Lindbergh's flight it would not have shortened it because he had well over fifty gallons of gasoline left at the completion of the flight.

Thus it is entirely feasible to carry a fifty-pound radio set when it is considered that safety would have been assured, provided the plane was not wrecked in a forced landing on the ocean. In no part of the Atlantic is the distance from either British or American amateurs more than 1500 miles, and 1500 miles is one of the easiest possible distances.

TYPE OF TRANSMITTER

The transmitter, in order to save weight, should be in a small wooden box and could be made from one UX-210 tube, with the filament run from dry cells, and the plate from B batteries. With six dry cells (twelve pounds) twenty-four small B batteries giving well in excess of 500 volts (twenty-four pounds,) there is still left fourteen pounds for the transmitter and receiver, including separate batteries for the receiver. Practically any amateur with such an equipment could guarantee to establish communication with the expenditure of about fifteen or twenty minutes' use of the batteries. Inasmuch as a rough estimate would allow four or five hours of intermittent use of such an emergency set, and inasmuch as it would work just as well on the water as in the air, in fact, better, there seems no reason why planes of the future should not be built with radio equipment.

Such equipment, for instance, would have saved the search for the Hawaiian flyers under the command of Commander Rodgers. That ship had a radio set aboard, but it was the type that only operates while the plane is in the air.

BYRD'S EQUIPMENT

Commander Byrd in his polar flight had a small crystal-control battery operated set aboard, and if he had been forced down in the Arctic the world would have known of his whereabouts and well-informed relief parties could have set out to get him. Byrd's set was several times stronger than the one just described and it weighed more.

The planes of the Wilkins expedition in Alaska carry radio sets of about one-third the power and size of the outfit described in the foregoing. They have no difficulty in communicating 1500 miles at will as well as with the amateurs back in the United States. Two good amateurs are taken along on each summer's expedition and they have never failed to establish reliable communication. The news of the Amundson dirigible flight over the pole last summer, for instance, came by way of the Wilkins's short-wave equipment and not by way of the heavy radio set aboard the dirigible.

At some time or other practically every aviation pilot in the service of the Army and Navy is required to learn the telegraphic code. His radio training generally ends there, but it would be a comparatively easy matter to brush up for emergency purposes.

AID TO RESCUE

Then by a suitable choice of wave (right now it would be thirty-three meters,) he would be assured of more stations than he could count answering his call. If the information were simply broadcast in code on thirty-three meters, once an hour, amateurs would report it to the commercial stations, who would in turn broadcast it to ships in the vicinity with resultant rescue.

It is all so simple, and so complete, with all the experimentation already done, that it seems a shame that Nungesser and Coli apparently went to their death, while thousands of radio amateurs on both sides of the Atlantic were pursuing their nightly hobby of combing the dial for new and strange signals.

With suitable radio equipment on each of the planes crossing expenses of water, the danger would be cut down to a mere fraction of its present form. The aviators could then fly with assurance of protection that ships of the sea have had for years.

SATURATION FAR OFF IN RADIO MARKETING

The United States is selling radio sets at the rate of only 1,750,000 a year, half of this number probably being replacements, so the net gain is actually only a million or less sets a year. At this rate, it will take more than fourteen years to saturate the present market, which is slow. Dealers must find new methods and new energies to apply to the distribution of radios, if the selling job is to be finished before the present generation becomes old.

FRESH PAINT CAUSES REMOVAL OF CANARIES

Radio fans missed the cheery voices of the three tiny canaries from the studio of KHJ several days last week. The refinishing of the reception room and one or two odd spots in the studio, with the odor of fresh paint, made it necessary to remove the songsters elsewhere the first part of the week.

BUILT-IN SPEAKERS LESS USED

Separate Reproducer Now Demanded for Convenience of Radio Listeners

Because of mechanical limitations, the speaker or horn and the reproducing mechanism of a phonograph had to be combined into one unit. The radio receiver, however, being an electrical instrument, does not necessarily have to have the loud speaker incorporated in the same cabinet with the receiver. Several manufacturers of late have changed over to the latter method.

Ray H. Manson, chief engineer of the Stromberg-Carlson Company, was one of the first to inaugurate this practice of utilizing a separate loud speaker. After more than a year's experience in the use of a separate loud speaker, Mr. Manson makes the following observations:

"It has been our experience that owners are much better pleased with the external type of speaker as employed in our later models than with the built-in type which was incorporated in our earlier receivers. They find better acoustical results may be obtained when the speaker can be placed in different locations.

"It also is an advantage to be able to place the speaker wherever a group desires to listen. By this means, also, a great deal of the trouble from microphonic tubes is eliminated. Lastly, we believe this type of installation gives greater beauty to the receiver itself by eliminating all the grill work in the cabinet and leaving space within the cabinet for accessory equipment."

'Music-Maker' of Red Hair Makes Songs Popular

The "Red-Headed Music-Maker," as they call him, or Wendell Hall, as they christened him, is following in the footsteps of Irving Berlin and has his own music publishing company now.

Hall has succeeded in making a great many of his songs popular by singing them before WJZ's microphone, and he grinds them out for the jazz maniacs in all sections of the country reached by the Blue Network, as WJZ's chain is known. The three latest are, "I Told You I'd Never Forget You," a splendid little harmony waltz; "Down Kentucky Way," a southern fox trot melody something like "Breezin' Along With the Breeze," and "Hot Feet," which needs no explanation. These are already well on their way, as is Hall himself. He's headed in the right direction and radio can work miracles.

SATURDAY'S PROGRAM

The program at KHJ next Saturday night will be in the nature of a home-coming program for the group of KHJ entertainers which has been to Honolulu. Besides the KHJ trio, Uncle John, Pal O' Mine and Ruth Pitts, who are returning to Los Angeles Saturday, the evening's broadcast will include many of the old-time favorite radio artists of the station.

"Box Seat" Reception

If you were to go to hear Marion Talley sing, or President Coolidge speak you would want seats where nothing could escape you—seats in a box or in the orchestra circle, not back in the gallery. So in listening to the splendid things of radio, you want a "box seat" too—and it is the Stromberg-Carlson Receiver which provides it.

Indeed the necessity of a Stromberg-Carlson grows as the importance and magnificence of the broadcast programs increase. A Stromberg-Carlson, with its totally shielded coils, enables you, first to select the program you wish and to exclude all others. Then it brings in a singer's notes or a speaker's words with every inflection as pure as rendered. Finally, it has remarkable ability to build up volume of sound, even from remote stations to adequate strength.

The owner of a Stromberg-Carlson may be pardoned a pride in his Receiver. When friends are invited to share the pleasure of some magnificent radio concert the Stromberg-Carlson provides "box seat" reception.

JEWELS STOLEN AS WOMAN PAYS VISIT

Absent from her apartment for only a short time, Mrs. Lottie Britt, 385 South Witmer street, returned to find that nearly $1000 in jewelry and clothing had disappeared from her rooms. While she was visiting in a neighboring apartment late yesterday afternoon, a burglar entered Mrs. Britt's rooms and made off with three diamond rings, valued in excess of $500, and other articles, according to a police report. Detective Lieutenant Ackely, who investigated, states that he has a clew to the identity of the thief.

HEALTH CENTERS PLANNED

Glendale Institution Would Serve Near-by Towns; National Authority Makes Survey

Health centers, taking into consideration emergency treatment of surgical and medical cases, health conditions and outdoor social service work, are being fostered by the county and Southern California cities, it developed yesterday following an informal meeting of the Glendale City Council on Friday and the formation yesterday of plans for the future.

It was learned that a plan is under way to establish an extensive health center in Glendale for the service of that city, Burbank, La Crescenta, Montrose and other contiguous districts. This developed following a meeting of the Glendale Council with Dr. J. L. Pomeroy, county health officer, and Dr. W. F. Walker, field director for the American Public Health Association, both of the latter having been asked to help reorganize the health department of Glendale.

Dr. Walker, who has made a survey of the health conditions in most of the larger cities in the United States, upon the request of Dr. Pomeroy was employed by Glendale to make a survey of that city under Dr. Pomeroy's direction and to report in about a week.

The county budget of 1927 provided for an appropriation of $100,000 for a health center at Belvedere, work on which will be started shortly. Dr. Walker will also make a report on a health center for Glendale, Burbank and adjacent districts. It was stated that Glendale unofficially offered to furnish a site for the health center, subject to the approval of the other districts affected. The Board of Supervisors will probably be asked to appropriate an adequate sum for the erection of buildings for the center.

It is planned to have the center include a complete health department, with laboratories, with nurses and facilities for taking of cultures and the examination of foodstuffs; an emergency hospital; medical and dental clinics for the indigent, and a social service department for outdoor relief, under the County Charities. A financial agreement will be arranged between the various cities and the county.

ARMY TO FIGHT FIRE PROPOSED

Southland Reserve Planned on Military Lines

Volunteers to be Organized in Many Towns

Conservationists and Business Sponsoring Move

Two important organizations, the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce and the Conservation Association of Southern California, will unite on Wednesday in an effort to form the Forest Fire Fighters' Reserve. D. F. McGarry, president of the chamber, will be the toastmaster and Harvey S. Bissell, president of the association, also will sit at the head of the table. Among those who will have an active part in the meeting will be A. G. Arnoll, secretary and general manager of the Chamber of Commerce; Harold S. Ryerson, executive vice-president of the Conservation Association; George P. Clements, manager of the agricultural department of the chamber; W. S. Rosecrans, State vice-president of the Conservation Association, and directors and officials of both organizations.

It is proposed to enlist two units of 250 volunteers each. These men are to be trained in a camp already selected. They will be supplied with the latest fire-fighting apparatus and be prepared for immediate active duty in case of a fire.

ONE UNIT FORMED

The first unit already has been formed by Pasadena and 150 men of the second unit are enlisted. Paul Gray and Allen Bixby are taking a leading part in the Crown City Fire Fighters' Reserve. These men will report at the chamber luncheon on just what has been accomplished there. President McGarry will outline what the Chamber of Commerce proposes to do in co-operation with the Conservation Association. He will also tell of the work that has been done to lessen fire hazard. Harold S. Ryerson of the Conservation Association will speak on what has been done in Washington and Sacramento and will tell of the appropriations already made by the government to carry on the conservation work. Secretary Arnoll also will speak.

Howard Miller of the Junior Chamber of Commerce will have an active part in the formation of the Los Angeles unit. George L. Eastman and Earl B. Gilmore will also be called into the ranks, as it is proposed to select the staff officers from among the younger men who have seen military service.

The Forest Fire Fighters' Reserve will be organized on a military basis. The ranking officer will have supervision over all of the units. There will be a brigade officer and while an army corps may not be mobilized, the brigades, regiments and companies will need the leadership of those who understand what forest-fire fighting means and who realize the importance of having an active force in the field prepared to combat the peril and ready to help stamp out a forest fire the moment the blaze starts.

ARMY OF FIGHTERS

The first plan is for units of 250 men each from the different towns of Southern California. Los Angeles will be apportioned five units, Pasadena two and Pomona, Redlands, San Bernardino, Riverside, Santa Ana, Anaheim and other outlying cities will be given their quota. San Diego has asked for a share in the working plan.

Officials of the larger corporations have already shown a desire to help work out the details of the Forest Fire Fighters' Reserve. Men from their organizations will be asked to volunteer for the work. Vacation camps in the hills are to be available at once for intensive training and it is proposed to work with Fire Chief Ralph Scott, who will be one of those at the luncheon Wednesday, in a plan to give these men the same kind of training that was accorded in the camps during the war.

WOODMEN COMPLETE SESSIONS

Question of Orphan Home Left in Directors' Hands as Delegates Adjourn

Secret business sessions occupied the time of both the men's and women's organizations affiliated with the Woodmen of the World, in session at the Alexandria yesterday. Further reports were heard and routine matter cleared away preparatory to adjournment of the 1927 convention.

The matter of the home for aged members and orphans, which had been one of the major topics of discussion during the week's gathering, was left in the hands of the board of directors. Sufficient funds and proffers of donations of individual rooms were reported to be on hand for a good start. The directors now will decide on a location. Almost every State in the Southwest is being considered, almost all having made attractive offers in order to obtain the institution.

Members of the clerical staff who have been confined to headquarters during the week's activity, are planning to remain over for several days next week in order to avail themselves of an opportunity of sightseeing in Southern California. Delegates and active members who have been in attendance commenced leaving for their homes following last night's session and others will leave during the day.

Man Found in Grove Believed Quarrel Victim

Believed to have been the victim of a midnight quarrel, Dario Perez, 27 years of age, 1414 Mateo street, was found yesterday in a grove of trees at Arizona avenue and Collingswood Drive near El Segundo, with life just ebbing.

The body, still showing signs of life, was found by N. L. Meads of El Segundo, who notified City Marshal Hutchison of El Segundo.

Deputy Sheriffs Bright, Hanby, Brown and Hutchison reported that neighbors heard three shots early yesterday morning and then the sound of an automobile leaving. It was believed that those responsible for the slaying departed in the car of Perez.

ALL-YEAR CLUB IN PICTURE HUNT

Contest Announced for New Southland Views

Photographs Will be Used to Draw Tourists

From $10 to $100 to be Paid; Exhibition Planned

Examples of photographic art worthy of Southern California are expected to result from a contest which has just been launched by the All-Year Club of Southern California in connection with the convention that is to be held in Los Angeles next September of the Pacific International Photographers' Association.

Awards of $100 each will be given for the two best pictures submitted in the contest. One of these will come from the All-Year Club and the other from the Ambassador, which has joined with the club in an endeavor to obtain photographs of outstanding merit that will help to stimulate travel to this region. There will be additional awards of $10 each for all other pictures that are selected as worthy of carrying the message of Southern California to the world through the magazine advertising of the All-Year Club.

In effect, the contest is a search for new pictures. Only pictures taken after the 10th inst. and before September 1, when the contest closes, will be considered. Also they must be thoroughly typical of Southern California. They can show only localities in Southern California or in Inyo county. While scenic beauty is the especial aim, it is also hoped that pictures will show some action.

TO BE EXHIBITED

An exhibit of all the better pictures submitted will be shown at the Ambassador in Los Angeles at the time of the Pacific International Photographers' convention in September, and it is expected this will result in the most notable collection of Southern California views ever assembled. The detailed rules follow:

(1.) The photograph submitted must be a new Southern California view, taken between the issuance of this offer on the 10th inst. and the close of the contest on September 1. It must be a scenic picture so descriptive of some part of Southern California, including Inyo county, as to lure visitors to Southern California, when the picture appears in advertisements of the All-Year Club. Typical subjects would be mountains, palms, eucalyptus, missions, desert, seashore, canyons, or any phase of outdoor life or scenery distinctively reflective of Southern California, and which in effect, could not be found anywhere else. As between an artistically beautiful picture and one typical of Southern California, the latter would have the preference. Action, such as hiking, motoring, bathing, golfing, etc., is desirable, but not essential.

(2.) Pictures submitted should not be less than ten inches or more than twenty-four inches in greatest width. They may be mounted flat and should be in black and white glossy finish. Retouching and art work may be done to negatives or prints provided this does not change the natural character of the scenery or picture, or make it in any way untruthful of the scene portrayed.

(3.) All pictures must be submitted flat with return address not later than September 1, to C. G. Milham, executive secretary and advertising manager of All-Year Club of Southern California, Chamber of Commerce Building, Los Angeles.

NO LIMIT SET

(4.) There is no limit on the number of pictures any contestant may submit.

(5.) The best pictures submitted will be combined in an exhibit to be held in the Ambassador Auditorium during the progress of the Pacific International Photographers' convention. Due credit will be given to the photographer of each picture, on cards of uniform size, during the exhibit.

(6.) The pictures will be judged during the exhibit by the members of the advertising committee of the All-Year Club of Southern California, comprising C. G. Milham, Don Francisco, Paul Armstrong, J. H. Stewart, and John B. Browne.

(7.) The prize of $100 is to be considered an outright purchase of the winning photograph. The All-Year Club will reserve the right to reproduce any photographs submitted on payment of $10 and the giving of due credit to the photographer. Photographers entering the contest must also agree that newspapers desiring to reproduce their pictures in their news columns may do so by giving due credit to the photographer and by paying the newspaper's regular rates.

PHONES ALIKE BUT SEPARATE

Pasadena Must Call Central to Get Numbers in Los Angeles

Although Pasadena's new dial telephone system, to be in use the 26th inst., will be similar to that used in Los Angeles, it will be impossible for Pasadena and Los Angeles telephone subscribers to dial numbers direct from one exchange to the other. Pasadena subscribers will obtain Los Angeles numbers by dialing the numeral "O" and then giving the desired number to the operator. Los Angeles subscribers will obtain Pasadena numbers in the same manner, just as they have in the past.

CLUB PLANS SAND DANCE AT OPENING

Ten-Day Festival to Mark Entry Into Business World of Sea Breeze at Beach

A ten-day festival, with the public invited to participate, will precede the formal opening of the new Sea Breeze Beach Club below the Palisades at Santa Monica. The festival will open on the night of the 24th inst.

A number of film luminaries and army and navy officers, it was stated by executives of the club, will act as an honorary reception committee.

Dancing on the hard beach sands fronting the clubhouse will be one of the nightly features of the festival. Beach and water sports will be conducted daily. These will include volleyball contests, water polo, surf tennis, diving and swimming competition and foot races.

At the close of the festival, the club will be closed to all but members. The formal opening is scheduled early in July.

NEW "CENTRAL" BUILT

Culver City Phone Exchange to Open In October

The Southern California Telephone Company has just finished the erection of a new telephone building at Culver City and is now starting the installation of dial central office equipment. According to present plans, the new exchange will be ready for service sometime in October.

The two-story Class A structure has been completed at a cost of approximately $125,000. The central office equipment will require an expenditure estimated at $350,000, making the total cost approximately $475,000, excluding the cost of rearranging and adding to the outside plant.

LOS ANGELES SONG WRITERS GET CAKE

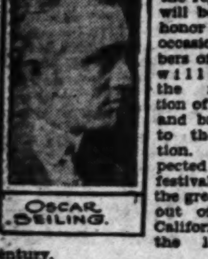
Two Los Angeles song writers, Alvin Kent and Jack Wendell, who have just published a number "Hello London," dedicated to trans-Atlantic telephone service, were recently presented a huge cake, three-stories high and measuring a yard across the bottom. The cake was made by the chef of the Los Angeles Ambassador Hotel and presented to the song writers on the hotel lawn by Ben Frank, manager of the hotel. Two radio towers were on top of the cake and between them was a globe representing the world, mounted on a golden platform. On the side, in large candy letters, were the words, "Hello London."

SIERRA MADRE REVIVES PAST

Dedication of San Gabriel Valley Arboretum Will Turn Back Pages of History

Pages from the past of the San Gabriel Valley and adjoining foothill region will be brought forth on July 10 when Southern California pioneers participate in the festivities that formally will launch the new Sierra Madre Arboretum on the slopes of Mt. Wilson.

Every town and city in this section has been asked to designate its surviving pioneers or descendants of conspicuous pioneers who were founders of the region. They will be guests of honor on this occasion. Chambers of commerce will determine the representation of old-timers and bring them to the celebration. It is expected that the festival will bring the greatest turnout of old-time Californians in the last half-century.



OSCAR SEILING.

Under the leadership of W. R. Humphries, secretary-treasurer of the Sierra Madre botanical organization, a program is being made up of unique surprises, full of romance and color of earlier California days. Among other features it is expected that Oscar Rasbach, composer of the popular ballad, "Trees," and a resident of Sierra Madre, will compose a song especially for the occasion.

Other features characteristic of the early history of the old San Gabriel Valley will be contributed by civic and social organizations of the several towns and cities. Distinguished guests from all over the State are expected to attend.

OLD DAYS TO LIVE

Arrangements being made provide special facilities for the reunion of old-timers who have not met for years, and who probably have lost all knowledge of each other's whereabouts. An effort will be made to revive for the day old customs, old songs, old dishes, old methods of transportation and even old fashions of dress. Throughout the San Gabriel Valley and elsewhere the old-time families are searching for ancient garments, ancient instruments, old saddles and vehicles.

"We aim to make this celebration carry both the old and the new," said Prof. Oscar Seiling, chairman of the Sierra Madre Planning Commission and a member of the arboretum executive committee. "The arboretum in a sense will revive the ancient natural glory of the foothills and Sierra Madre more nearly is representative of earlier California than any other community of the region. It has been protected by its isolation from some of the spoiling effect of swift modern life. Old California will find itself more naturally at home here for the same reason that the botanical garden naturally belongs here. Sierra Madre is an unconscious example of lush and gay colored California as it was in the riotous days of the Dons."

NATURAL BOTANICAL SITE

The Sierra Madre Arboretum will be installed in Bailey Canyon, a spot of extraordinary natural beauty on the lowest slopes of Mt. Wilson. The canyon belongs to the city of Sierra Madre and starts at an elevation of 700 feet and rises to an elevation of 2000 feet, crowned by a waterfall. Superintendent Frank Shearer of the Los Angeles Park system considers Bailey Canyon the most beautiful botanical park site in Southern California. Its protection from frosts and winds, its soil varieties, its gradual elevation of 1300 feet, its climatic differences, afford facilities for the culture of an extraordinary variety of vegetation.

The arboretum will be installed by the people of Sierra Madre under the supervision of the Sierra Madre Botanical Society, the technical committee of which is headed by Frank Shearer.

CATHOLICS' DRY VIEWS TO BE AIRED

Prohibition to be Leading Subject of Discussion at Charities Conference

Prohibition and its effect on family life, and the part played by motion pictures in influencing the conduct of boys and girls, promise to furnish some of the discussion in the forthcoming national conference of Catholic charities, according to D. Joseph Coyne, general chairman. The conference will be held in Los Angeles September 4 to 8.

"These two subjects will be taken up at greater length than at any previous gathering of social workers," said Mr. Coyne yesterday. "In accordance with the custom of the conference the pros and cons will be discussed frankly, and I have no doubt but that many interesting facts will develop.

"On the subject of prohibition there will be, of course, a wide difference of opinion. For instance, Dr. John A. Lapp, head of the national conference of social workers, as well as director of the social action department of the national Catholic welfare conference, at a recent gathering of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, declared that the thirst of the nation is unquestionably waning, and that workingmen not only are finding themselves able to get along without strong liquor, but find they can dispense also with wine and beer.

"The subject of motion pictures and their effects on young men and women, is another topic upon which social service workers are of divided opinion. A section of the conference will be devoted to 'What Price Movies?'"

Mr. Coyne said the program is rapidly taking shape and elaborate plans are being made for the opening meeting in Hollywood Bowl the evening of Sunday, September 4. Several thousand delegates from the East are expected, and it is being arranged to give them opportunity to tour the Southland by auto during their stay.

LYMAN QUARTET WILL GIVE RECITAL TONIGHT

SINGERS TO OPEN TOUR OF STATE WITH PROGRAM AT WILSHIRE CHURCH

The Lyman Singers of New York, a quartet of Southern California men, will appear in recital at the Wilshire Boulevard Congregational Church this evening at 7:30 o'clock. The singers gained a wide reputation last winter in their impersonation of the troubadours pictured on the Christmas seal. All are graduates of Pomona College and the quartet is named in honor of Prof. Ralph H. Lyman, head of the music department at the Claremont institution.

The singers are John Mangold, first tenor; Raymond Moremen, second tenor; Gentry McCorkle, baritone, and Blackwell Smith, bass. Moremen is director of the organization.

During the summer the Lyman Singers are to fill forty engagements on their tour of California. Dr. Frank Dyer, pastor of the Wilshire Boulevard Congregational Church, invited them to open their tour here.

FREE VACATION FOR SEVEN BOYS

Youths Will Have Expenses Paid by "The Times"

More Than 500 Working to Win Summer Trips

Winners May Have Choice of Southland Resorts

Seven husky, wide-awake Southern California boys solved the problem of their summer vacation yesterday when they appeared at The Times office and qualified as full-fledged members of the Times' Vacation Club.

RICHARD WILCOX.

As members of this juvenile organization each boy will have all his expenses taken care of for a two-weeks' summer vacation or encampment and, in addition, his pockets will jingle with $2 in spending money.

500 AT WORK

The first members of the club are Glenn Coffman, 204 North Fishburn street, Bell; Howard Adams, 2211 Overland street, Westwood; C. C. Crowell, 721 West Magnolia street, Inglewood; Delano Hubbard, 355 South Santa Fe street, Huntington Park; Louis Miller, Whittier; Earl Provin, 939 South Eucalyptus street, Inglewood, and Richard Wilcox, 2132 Beverly Boulevard, Montebello.

DELANO HUBBARD.

While competition was keen among various boys' groups and neighborhoods in Los Angeles and surrounding towns for first place in the trophy race which honored the first boy to obtain his quota, the seven boys who qualified yesterday form only the advance guard of more than 500 youngsters who are working to earn their vacation expenses.

HOWARD ADAMS.

In practically every neighborhood in Southern California there are boys taking advantage of The Times' offer of a summer vacation.

The plan not only proved a lucrative one for the youngster but aids in stimulating self-attainment and a desire to win his own way. Many of the boys are relieving parents of an expense by solving their own vacation problem.

EARL PROVIN.

The only qualification necessary for a boy to earn his summer money is to obtain ten three-months' subscriptions to the daily and Sunday Los Angeles Times and this small amount of work gives him ample funds with which to have the time of his life during the enticing warm summer days.

LOUIS MILLER.

"Why this is the easiest way I know of getting a fine vacation," said Glen Coffman in telling a group of youngsters how he obtained his ten subscriptions. "There are lots of people who want to take the Times and who are glad to give their subscriptions to one of us boys. I had three people in my neighborhood who were just waiting for one of us boys to come around so that they could order The Times from a vacation club boy."

CHOOSES OWN RESORTS

The boys who qualified chose their own camps and the organizations they will go with on their outings. Camps have been planned for Catalina, Big Pine, Bear Lake, Camp Baldy, the mountain regions near Riverside, in fact, almost every popular resort in the Southland will have a delegation of The Times' vacation youngsters this summer.

According to the junior department of The Times, nearly 80 per cent of the 500 boys working for their vacations are nearing the required quota of subscriptions, and it is estimated that more than 400 boys will obtain their summer vacations by taking advantage of The Times' offer.

Officials in charge of boys' work in Southern California heartily commend The Times' plan.

NEWS OF SOUTHERN COUNTIES

FORD BUILDING PLANS KNOWN

Detail of Long Beach Plant Made Public

Construction Bids Must be in by July 15

Magnitude of Structure on Coast Revealed

LONG BEACH, June 18.—Complete details of the big Pacific Coast assembling plant of the Ford Motor Company, to be located in Long Beach Harbor, were available for the first time, following receipt of a complete set of architect's plans and specifications by a local contracting firm today. All bidding contractors have been directed to submit their bids on or before July 15, the date on which bids will be opened at the Detroit office of the Ford Motor Company.

Contracts for the construction work on the huge plant will be let before August 1 and completion of the big job must be reached within ten months of date of contract, it was said. The cost of the completed plant will run close to $5,000,000, it was indicated. A total of 100 sets of plans and specifications have been prepared for the guidance of prospective bidding contractors in all parts of the country.

The plans, drawn by Albert Kahn, Inc., of Detroit, bear the inscription, "Ford Motor Company assembly plant, Long Beach, Cal." Originally completed on January 7 of this year, the plans were revised when the Ford Company determined upon the manufacture of a gear-shift type of automobile.

The plans call for a main building 926 feet long by 390 feet wide, paralleling Badger avenue on the western side of the Ford Company's forty-acre tract. This structure is to be of steel, concrete and brick, one story high, with saw-tooth roof construction, where tops, windshields and other fittings will be turned out.

In the central part of the building will be located the assebly plant where the new style gear-shift Ford is to be assembled from parts shipped in from Detroit by boat, direct to the Ford Company's docks adjoining the plant on Cerritos Channel. The service department will occupy the southern portion of the main building. Offices will be situated in the northwest portion of the tract, along Badger avenue and the plans call for a structure 104 by 40 feet, two stories in height.

A warehouse 88 feet wide by 440 feet long, 80 feet high, also of concrete and steel, and opening on the west end of the triangular-shaped slip recently dredged, is provided for in the plans. It will be located immediately to the east of the main building. Provisions also are made for an additional warehouse to be built at a later date on the east side of the Ford acreage, and for an additional slip to accommodate ships. Dockage requirements already provided for in the existing plans call for a wharf 440 feet long and 80 feet wide.

It will be possible to develop more than 1300 feet of dockage later with the amount of water frontage available along the Ford property. The dock is to be of concrete with depressed deck and inclosed on three sides. The piling is to be of reinforced concrete treated with asphalt.

A powerhouse 98x80 feet: An oil house, 114x62 feet; oil storage tanks and a water tank are to be grouped at the north end of the existing slip, according to the plans. All these will be connected with the main plant by underground tunnels.

An idea of the magnitude of the task confronting the contractor who is awarded the main contract is given in the fact that 3500 piles must be sunk for the foundations of the main building and dock. Some are to be of concrete treated with asphalt and the remainder of wood treated with creosote.

A parking space large enough to accommodate 300 automobiles is also provided for in the plans. This will be located north of the main structure. Significant of the climate is the specification calling for rolling steel curtains on the east side of the main building, to permit of comparatively open-air operations.

The plans throughout call for utmost speed on the part of the contractors. There are subcontracts for electrical equipment, plumbing and heating and painting. The Union Pacific Railroad is now completing the laying of special tracks to the Ford plant site over which much of the construction material will be hauled.

PASADENA CHAMBER SETS COAST RECORD

PASADENA, June 18.—Gain of 200 new members within three months, increasing the number of names on the Pasadena Chamber of Commerce membership roll to 1286 without one delinquent member, establishes a new record for Pacific Coast members, in the judgment of Charles I. Craig, chairman of the membership committee, questioned today.

Eight hundred members of the organization were interviewed one year ago to determine what they expected from the local chamber. Suggestions made were adopted as the chamber program and membership growth resulted, he stated.

Redondo Bars Uptown Bathing Suit Paraders

REDONDO BEACH, June 18.—Hereafter bathing beauties in Redondo Beach must confine their bathing suit parades to the strand walk and El Paseo following the enforcement of Redondo's new bathing-suit ordinance which requires a robe or covering to the knees if the bather leaves the beach proper.

The ordinance is a big departure from former years when persons were permitted to go to and from their cars and homes clad only in their bathing suits or with a light sweater sometimes shorter than the suit. The ordinance was passed for the first time last October and a search of the records fails to show any ordinance enacted heretofore in regard to the appearance of bathers on the beach or streets.

Chief of Police John V. Henry has detailed Sergt. Gardner, a veteran in the local department, to make the surveys and bring the too-slightly clad ones before the judge.

TRIAL OF SUIT FOR BEING JAILED SET

VISALIA, June 18.—Date of trial in the suit of Harold Oliver, young resident of the Dinuba district north of here, vs. Stanley Fullard, city marshal of Dinuba, alleging imprisonment without cause or reason has been set by Judge Frank Lamberson of the Tulare county Superior Court for September 21, next. Fullard, according to his original answer to the complaint, denies that he arrested young Oliver other than for just cause, and states that he detained him only for a period of about one hour, during which time bond was obtained. The case, together with the squabble between City Recorder W. J. Minville of Dinuba and M. C. Chase, an attorney of that city, which resulted in two fist fights between the two a few days ago, is arousing much interest in city official circles in Dinuba.

FATHER GIVES LIFE IN SAVING HIS CHILD

FRESNO, June 18.—Mike Lopez, 32 years of age, a laborer at Pinedale, near here, gave his life about midnight in saving his small son from electrocution. Fire which destroyed the Lopez garage also burned a high-tension power line pole, causing the wires to fall to the ground. The small boy started toward the wires and was almost upon them when the father discovered him. Dashing to the boy's side just as he reached the wires, Lopez hurled the child to safety, but himself came into contact with them and was instantly killed. Aside from burns from the heavily charged wires, the child escaped injury. He will recover. Lopez is survived by a widow and five small children other than the son he gave his life to save.

LYCEUM COURSE AT ANAHEIM PROPOSED

ANAHEIM, June 18.—Tentative plans for an ambitious lyceum course to be given in Anaheim this fall were formulated at a meeting of representatives of civic organizations held in the auditorium of the Fremont intermediate school. The meeting was called by the parent-teacher associations of the city under whose auspices a similar artists' course was sponsored here last fall and Mrs. G. E. Holmes, chairman of the executive committee, presided. Mme. Schumann-Heink, noted soprano, who is to make a farewell appearance on the Pacific Coast during the coming winter, is to be secured to give the opening number on the course, according to the plans made at the meeting.

SANTA ANA HAS TWO FLYING CARPENTERS

SANTA ANA, June 18.—Aviation means something more than just a joyride now and then to two Santa Ana carpenters, S. L. Shoemaker and C. Nelson, who fly to and from their work at San Clemente every day. The plane is piloted by Shoemaker, who has a pilot's certificate issued by the National Aeronautic Association. He had his first flying experience at March Field, near Riverside, when he was a member of the Aviation Corps. "The ride makes both of us feel more like doing a day's work than if we made the trip by automobile," Shoemaker said. "After we quit work in the evening, we soar through the clouds and are home again in just a few minutes."

TWIN BOYS BURIED BY CAVE-IN, ONE DIES

SAN DIEGO, June 18. (AP)—Twin sons of O. I. Bodie, a minister, today were buried by a cave-in while at play in a canyon here, and one of the children is dead as a result. The other escaped with a broken arm. The boys, David and Delbert, were playing in Young's Cave with several other children on the bank above. The cave top collapsed, burying the two children. David was in a serious condition when rescued and died shortly after. Delbert escaped with a broken arm. The children were 7 years of age.

PASADENAN GIVEN HONOR

George Watson Cole Made Honorary Bibliographical Society Member Because of Work in Letters

PASADENA, June 18.—Dr. George Watson Cole, librarian emeritus of the Henry E. Huntington library and art gallery, has been allocated an honorary membership in the Bibliographical Society of London, it was learned here today. The announcement of the honor is signed by Dr. A. W. Pollard, one of the most distinguished of England's literary and bibliographical scholars, who was formerly keeper of printed books at the British Museum.

Dr. Cole is included in the ranks of this noted group of English scholars because of his work in connection with the recent publication of a short title catalogue of books, printed in English, in England, Scotland, Ireland and European countries between the dates 1475 and 1640. His share in the London publication is one of the principal contributions to the volume.

Dr. Cole already holds a membership in the Oxford (Eng.) Bibliographical Society. He has been president of the Bibliographical Society of America and is associated with other similar organizations in this country. He has published many works and monographs on specific aspects of bibliography, his Huntington Library studies being considered the most notable and valuable.

CUT MENACES SCHOOL FUNDS

Glendale Suggests Reduction in Next Budget

Move Made to Meet Increase in Valuation

Other City Departments Also May be Held Down

GLENDALE, June 18.—Curtailment of the budgets of the Glendale Union High School and the city schools to offset the increase in taxes that is expected to follow the advance in assessed valuations on Glendale residential and business property is advocated in the report of the special committee that was appointed to confer with County Assessor Ed Hopkins to bring about a readjustment of the assessments for the coming year.

The committee consists of L. H. Myers, chairman, secretary-manager of the Chamber of Commerce; William McMillan, president of the Glendale Realty Board; James W. Pearson, chairman of the realty board's appraisal committee; Congressman W. E. Evans and Charles H. Rudel, tax expert of the Pacific-Southwest Trust and Savings Bank.

The efforts of the committe brought about a recheck of the Glendale valuations and it is declared that a saving of many thousands of dollars will be effected in the Glendale tax roll for the coming fiscal year, but in spite of the readjustment it is admitted that the city is facing the certainty of a material increase in its assessed valuation and that rigid economy is necessary to offset this increase.

The committee held the opinion that the increased valuations will result in a lower tax rate for the city than was imposed last year and that the city can secure sufficient funds to cover its budget needs, but the recommendation that the outlay of both the city and the school system be held to the lowest notch, consistent with efficient administration, is nevertheless emphasized by the committee.

The various organizations represented on the original citizens' committee that met with County Assessor Hopkins are advised to attend the open hearing on the city budget on the 23rd inst., and to use their influence to have the budget kept as low as possible. The assessor's books, it is stated, closed today and the valuations will be presented to the Board of Supervisors sitting as a board of equalization, early in July, and after the board has considered the figures for the entire county the tax rate for the coming year will be determined.

Cherry Grower Turns Tables on Inspector

REDLANDS, June 18.—L. G. Cobb of this city, who has a cherry orchard in Yucaica, received a check for eight lugs of cherries from C. M. Shields, inspector of weights and measures in Riverside county. Thereby hangs a tale regarding the working of the fruit standard law.

Mr. Cobb had taken his cherries to Riverside to sell and was disposing of them to a merchant when they were confiscated because the lug did not have marked on it the amount of fruit.

Mr. Cobb contended the confiscation was illegal because he was not selling the fruit by the lug, but by the pound. He took the matter up with other State officials and after a conference it was agreed that his position was correct, so he received the money for the cherries that had been confiscated.

HARVEST SEASON IN KINGS COUNTY ON

CORCORAN, June 18.—The harvest season is on in earnest in Kings county now, with a large number of combined harvesters working on the big 100,000-acre wheat crop on the Tulare Lake bed and the hot weather of this week bringing on apricot picking in a hurry. A large number of workers in the fruit, most of them American families from all parts of the State have been gathering in this county for a week waiting for the apricot season to open, which was very late this year. Five carloads of apricots are going east daily by express and rail, cutting of apricots for drying is now on and the canneries will open next week. This town is a busy place, with trucks of all kinds and sizes laden with grain for the warehouses, which are all working their crews overtime, taking care of the Tulare Lake crop. Other crops are being harvested or planted. The second crop of alfalfa is now being cut and large plantings of corn are now being made.

SAN FERNANDO CHIEF TO TRY FOR RECORD

SAN FERNANDO, June 18.—Chief of Police E. B. Rice will pilot the "White Streak," his newly acquired car, on a record-breaking drive to Portland when the official takes his summer vacation in the near future, according to plans being made. The Chief has christened his car "The City of San Fernando." It is painted wholly in white. In it he expects to reduce the standard running time between San Fernando and Portland.

COACH NOW PRINCIPAL

SAN JUAN CAPISTRANO, June 18. Announcement was made today that David McMillan, for the last year coach at the local high school, had been elected principal of the San Juan Capistrano grammar school. Miss Mabelle Dickerton of San Diego has been chosen as grade teacher, it is announced. Mr. McMillan takes the position held for the past five years by Mrs. May, while Miss Dickerton succeeds Miss Nelson. The resignations of Mrs. May and Miss Nelson were announced last week Mr. McMillan will attend the University of California at Los Angeles during the summer.

LIFE OF FATHER WHO KILLED WIFE THREATENED BY HIS SON

SANTA BARBARA, June 18.—Elmer J. Loftis, who during the rush of the noon hour yesterday, shot down and killed his wife, Mrs. Rebecca Loftis, today is under double guard in the County Hospital to protect him from the vengeance of his 18-year-old son, Grant Loftis, who has twice threatened to kill his father.

The youth telephoned to police twice last night that he would shoot his father at the first opportunity, but they have been unable to locate him. When informed by police that they had shot his father in the leg when he fled from the scene of the killing, the youth is reported to have retorted: "Why in hell didn't you shoot him in the head?" Examination revealed that the bone in one leg of the slayer was shattered in his running gun battle with police after the killing.

An inquest was held this morning, but the Coroner's jury returned a verdict that Mrs. Loftis had died from the effects of a gun-shot wound, without naming her assailant. Witnesses testified, however, that Loftis approached his wife at the corner of Anacapa and Carrillo streets and engaged in conversation, that he pulled his gun and shot her through the left breast and that when she fell over into the gutter he took deliberate aim after she had fallen and fired two shots into her neck.

Although Loftis was heard before the sanity commission on the 2nd inst. and there has been some question as to his mental responsibility, Chief Deputy District Attorney Alfred Haines declared today that the county would not tolerate reopening of the insanity hearing, and that murder charges will be filed immediately against the man.

Loftis fought the insanity charges two weeks ago and several prominent physicians, in addition to the examining board, declared him to be rational.

The slayer has not yet been told that his wife is dead.

"It is a good thing I ran out of bullets, or I would have hit one of you boys," Loftis declared when taken in custody, then as an after thought: "Why in hell didn't you kill me."

COMMUNITIES COMBINE

Co-operation Committee to Discuss and Recommend Needs of Various Orange County Localities

NEWPORT BEACH, June 18.—A "community co-operation committee" to discuss and make recommendations to the proper authorities regarding public affairs in Santa Ana, Newport Beach and Costa Mesa was ready to function today, following a luncheon given by the Santa Ana Chamber of Commerce to the directors of the Newport Harbor chamber and the Costa Mesa chamber at the Southern Seas Club here.

This move is regarded as significant in many quarters, owing to the fact that more money will soon be needed for the development of Newport Harbor and for other projects in Orange county. The city of Newport Beach, which is expending $500,000 for extensions and improvements to the jetties at the entrance to the harbor, will no doubt seek aid for further development which must follow to make Newport Harbor a great commercial port.

Heretofore, although Newport has borne the financial burden, the project has had the greatest moral support from Costa Mesa and Santa Ana.

There is also the problem of future water supply, which does not interest Newport Harbor so much as inland sections of Orange county.

Newport Harbor is also trying to break away from the Santa Ana high school district and to build its own high school.

At Friday's luncheon President Clyde Downing of the Santa Ana chamber spoke on "Community Co-operation," and his stand in favor of that general subject was supported in sort speeches by President Frank L. Smith of the Newport Harbor chamber and by President Don Dodge of the Costa Mesa chamber.

Harry Welch, former secretary of the Orange County Harbor Chamber of Commece, advanced the idea, and three members representing each community were named by the various presidents.

Alex Brownridge, Clyde Hoston and J. A. Cranston were named as the Santa Ana members of this committee; J. P. Greeley, Charles H. Way and Harry Welch represent Newport Harbor, and G. J. Gardner, N. O. Pellott and R. G. Chambers are the Costa members.

The inclusion of the Costa Mesa members is probably the most interesting feature of the committee, as that community will not, in the natural course of events, remain unincorporated. It may incorporate as a separate city, join with Newport Beach or even join Santa Ana and it is within the realm of possibility that both Costa Mesa and Newport Harbor may join with Santa Ana, although sentiment against that move is said to be very strong in the harbor city.

CHURCH TO AWAIT ZONING DECISION

VAN NUYS, June 18.—Members of the Christian Science Church here today state that the building of the new church will not begin until the new zoning maps of San Fernando Valley are adopted. For some time members have made efforts to erect a handsome church building on Hamlin street and Cedros avenue. Until the new zoning lines are established all plans will be delayed.

BOY STRUCK BY CAR

MONROVIA, June 18.—Arthur Ellefson, Duarte, received a two-inch scalp wound yesterday afternoon when he was struck by an automobile driven by Fred M. Armburst, 410 East Ninth street, Pomona. According to police reports, Ellefson ran in front of Armburst's automobile, which was going east on Huntington Drive near the city limits. Armburst swerved the machine to the right, but the left fender caught the boy. Armburst took him to the Monrovia Clinic for treatment, after which he was removed to his home.

Class Society Something New at Inglewood

INGLEWOOD, June 18.—A scholarship society, which is believed to be unique and a new departure in departmental schools of the Southland, was organized at the Queen-street school last night, the charter members being the sixteen honor pupils of the eight-grade classes of the school, with an average of 92 or better. The society was formed following a banquet, prepared and served by the domestic science department of the school. Mrs. Gertrude Howard, principal of the school, presided, and Mrs. Vena Seabrook, another member of the departmental staff, conducted the charter and initiation ceremonies.

Each member was presented by a teacher or member of the Inglewood Board of Education, and W. W. Hodgkins, clerk of the board, had the happiness of presenting his own daughter, Jean Hodgkins, who, with Ella Coates, tied for the highest average in the graduating classes, totaling 144 in number. The other honor student charter members of the Scholarship Society, who signed the roll of honor are: Marie Valerio, Louise Mosher, John Williams, Joseph Ramsey, Douglas Worboys, Herbert Baus, Virginia Erickson, Margaret Bernhard, Helen Bingham, Alta Ross, Margaret Musselwhite, Alberta Britton, Enola Cambell and Lois Saxer.

MANHATTAN PETTERS MUST KEEP DRIVING

Every street and ally in the section is affected.

LANKERSHIM, June 18.—Mrs. Lawrence W. Crenshaw, formerly Miss Alice Lorenz, a bride of a few weeks, is dead as the result of an attack of double pneumonia, at her home on Bloomfield avenue. She was only 20 years of age. Mrs. Crenshaw was well known in the younger social set here and at Van Nuys. The young couple had just moved into their new home when Mrs. Crenshaw was stricken.

DEATH TO BE PROBED

STRATFORD, June 18.—Dorothy G. Syobo, aged 55 and wife of a Rumanian homesteader on the West Side Plains, thirty miles south of here, died very suddenly at 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon and Coroner Strong will conduct an investigation next Monday. Mrs. Syobo was at the ranch with her brother and after both had lunched, the brother went out to feed the dogs. Returning to the house a few minutes later he found his sister dead. The husband and a son were away from the ranch at the time. The former says his wife was despondent and he thinks perhaps she took poison but the Coroner says there is no indication of poison. The dead woman was treated some time ago by Dr. Cuneo of Bakersfield for varicose ulcers, but she had had no medical treatment for four months.

CELEBRATION AT NEWPORT BEACH

Ceremonies Mark Dumping of First Jetty Rock

Famous Bathing Beauty Will Take Active Part

All Towns of District Plan Participation

NEWPORT BEACH, June 18.—The aspirations of Newport Harbor particularly and of Orange county and parts of several other Southern California counties in general toward having in the years to come a great world port will find vent tomorrow in a big celebration to be staged under the auspices of the Newport Harbor Chamber of Commerce, aided by the Costa Mesa chamber and the Santa Ana Junior chamber.

This celebration is to mark the beginning of work on the extension and improvement of two jetties, one at either side of the harbor entrance, for which work the city of Newport Beach has bonded itself to the extent of $500,000. This is designed as the first important stage of developing Newport Harbor into a commercial harbor ranking with the best on the Pacific Coast, which has, in this part, few good natural harbor sites.

The chief feature of the celebration will be a double "Big Parade." While a great line of floats and decorated automobiles will start from Costa Mesa, which overlooks Newport, Balboa and the harbor, at 1:30 p.m., another line will start in the harbor—a line of yachts owned by members of the Newport Harbor and other yacht clubs.

The automobile parade will be headed by the American Legion band of Anaheim and Miss Fay Lanphier, "Miss America" of 1925, will be in one of the leading cars. She will fly from Hollywood for the event and will be the guest of the Santa Ana Junior Chamber of Commerce.

Among the cities which have written the Newport Harbor chamber stating that they will be represented are Laguna Beach, Huntington Beach, Long Beach, Orange, Riverside and Fullerton.

Long Beach representatives stated that they would have cars in the parade, and Culver City will probably have an auto, with Miss Evelyn Hunt, another beauty prize winner.

Owing to tidal conditions at present, the exact nature of the "rock-dumping" ceremony planned after the parade was uncertain tonight.

Visitors From Many Points at Class Play

GLENDORA, June 18.—Guests from all parts of Southern California, and many from distant eastern and northern points, witnessed the presentation of "Monsieur Beaucaire," Booth Tarkington's charming play of the days of the Louises of France, by the seniors at the Girls' Collegiate School here.

The play was presented with an open-air setting, being staged on the beautiful natural gardens of the institution, while the guests were seated on the spacious tennis courts which had been arranged as an auditorium. The natural setting and excellent lighting arrangements were exceptionally effective and attractive.

The music, that of the stately golden harp, played by Miss Mary Jane Mayhew, fitted splendidly with the period of the play and the costumes of satins and velvets, enhanced with laces and jewels, transformed the American girls into gallant French courtiers.

Virginia Mauser took the part of Monsieur Beaucaire charmingly and scored a hit with her irrisistible French accent, while Isabel Schiffmann splendidly portrayed the character of Mr. Molyneaux. Twenty-nine of the seniors were in the cast.

COUNTRY HOME NEAR TUSTIN DESTROYED

TUSTIN, June 18.—Fire of mysterious origin early this morning destroyed the country home of Mrs. Tena O'Connell. No one was in the house when the fire broke out and before the alarm was turned in to the local fire department the house was beyond saving. Mrs. O'Connell is the owner of the Mode Millinery Store in Santa Ana. She purchased the residence from William B. Moore, district manager of the Northwestern Mutual Insurance Company, in January. The home was situated on Newport Road, near Lemon Heights. It was an eleven-room residence built on the colonial style. Damage was estimated at more than $25,000 as several thousand dollars' worth of furniture, including a new baby grand piano, was destroyed by the fire. The alarm was turned in at 12:50 this morning.

BLAME FOR DEATH IN POMONA NOT FIXED

POMONA, June 18.—Making no recommendation, but finding that Mrs. Nancy A. Moore, 72 years of age, of 451 Millard Court, Pasadena, died as the result of "hypostatic pneumonia" following concussion of the brain, fractures of ribs and of the pelvis, caused by a collision between an automobile driven by Clause L. Beckett and one driven by Gretchen Staub, in which the deceased was riding at a street intersection and caused by the excessive speed of Beckett's car, a Coroner's jury meeting at the inquest conducted at the Todd & Reeves mortuary this morning, left further disposition of the case in the hands of the authorities. The fatal crash occurred last Sunday.

Widow Founds Scholarship in Journalism

VENTURA, June 18.—To assist students of Ventura Union High School in securing a college education to fit themselves for journalism Mrs. Cora Davis, widow of Alfred Howe Davis, late editor and publisher of the Ventura Post, has created the "Alfred Howe Davis memorial scholarship," it was announced at the high-school graduation exercises by H. F. Orr, member of the high-school board and close friend of the Davis family.

The Alfred Howe Davis memorial scholarship consists of $15,000, which has been placed in trust with the Bank of Italy, the income from which shall be used perpetually to provide funds to maintain two scholarships.

According to the terms of the gift each two years a four-year scholarship will be awarded that will pay approximately $50 a month for nine months of each college year. The student may select any university, but scholarships will be awarded only to graduates of Ventura Union High School.

The gift provides that any scholarship awarded may be terminated if the scholar does not maintain a reasonably high standard of work in college and show a sincere desire to be fitted for the field of journalism.

Gross, principal. The sermon, entitled "The Land of Promise," will be given by the Rev. W. H. Evans of Newhall. Ministers from the various churches of San Fernando will also participate in the program. Seventy-nine pupils, a record number, will graduate from the high school next Thursday evening. The three elementary schools will graduate ninety pupils into the junior high school next Friday, according to a survey made by the principals. Mornside grammar school leads the list with forty-two pupils, O'Welveny, second with thirty, and San Fernando grammar, third with eighteen pupils.

BUYS COUNTERFEITING OUTFIT WITH HOUSE

OXNARD, June 18.—In looking over the Oxnard Rooms, a rooming-house, which he recently purchased, W. H. Marvin opened a bureau drawer and found a complete machine for making counterfeit silver dollars. From the appearance of the machine and mold it looked as though it had not been used for some time. Evidently some one living in the rooming-house went away and forgot the machine. Unfortunately for him it was one of those things he could not call for later. The machine was said to have been the work of an artist. It will be turned over to the Federal authorities, it was said.

NEWPORT BEACH TO HAVE NEW THEATER

NEWPORT BEACH, June 18.—Mrs. Elizabeth Osgood has awarded a contract to Solomon Carr, Long Beach contractor for the construction of a $15,000 theater and dance hall in a Class B building with a double store front it was reported today. The structure will be erected on the two lots adjoining the $15,000 garage and sales room building built by Lew H. Wallace for the Theodore Robbins Sales Company. These two buildings together with the Ben Cope boat shop show an investment of approximately $70,000 in improvements in this one block. Announcement will be made in thirty days of details for another building to be constructed in this block for the Newport Harbor Publishing Company.

Ten or eleven thousand visitors are expected for the coming fourth, fishing at Hamilton Lakes, eighteen miles above Hospital Rock is reported good, the ice having melted.

ARTERY SEVERED

TULARE, June 18.—An artery in his army severed by flying glass and considerably weakened by loss of blood, Joe Louis, dairyman of the district northeast of Tulare, is reported recovering today in a local hospital, the injuries resulting from an automobile collision near Pixley. Louis probably owes his life to a passing motorist, who made a tourniquet with his handkerchief before taking him to a local physician for emergency aid and later removing him to the hospital.

CALIFORNIA RICE GROWN IN 1926 SOLD

Grower Association Head Reports Crop Marketed at Satisfactory Prices

SACRAMENTO, June 18. (AP)—E. L. Adams, president of the Rice Growers' Association of California, today announced that practically all of the 1926 crop of California rice has been disposed of at prices satisfactory to the growers.

The 1926 crop was the largest ever produced in California, Adams said the 1927 acreage will be greater than last year's.

Japan became a large consumer of California rice last year, the exports to that country eating up the surplus crop of 1,000,000 bags. Adams said the exporting program carried on by the association was a protection to the California growers and to the entire domestic rice industry.

Approximately 97 per cent of the crop has now been sold, 85 per cent of the State's crop being handled by the association.

Sacramento Valley directors of the association will be elected next week at a series of meetings in Butte, Yolo, Colusa, Glenn, Sutter and Yuba counties. The Butte county meeting will be held at Richvale Tuesday, with the others as follows:

Yolo county, Woodland on Wednesday; Colusa county at Williamson, Thursday; Glenn county at Willows on Friday, and Sutter and Yuba county at Marysville on Saturday.

RUBBER MARKET

NEW YORK, June 18. (Exclusive)—An easy tone prevailed on the outside crude rubber market and prices receded more than ½c from the previous closings.

New York spot changed hands at 35¼c, a decline of ⅝c. London spot also displayed weakness, reacting ⅛d to 17d, although the British government affirmed yesterday its intention of keeping restrictions in force.

It is believed in the New York rubber trade that a reduction will be made in the pivotal price, as a result of the wide breaks that have been experienced in the world markets. The pivotal price is fixed by the British government as the basis for regulating exports. The exportable allowance of rubber is raised or lowered as the market price deviates from the pivotal price.

WARFIELD OPTIMISTIC

OILS COMING INTO FAVOR

Accumulation Under Way on Belief That Worst is Behind; Seasonal Gain in Gasoline Awaited

BY EARLE E. CROWE

Lately a more cheerful sentiment has tinctured the public comment on the oil shares. Possibly these expressions have emanated from professional quarters to test the responsiveness of the public, or else there is a general tendency to believe that all of the bad news is out. Some further dividend omissions or reductions are probably yet to come, but it is a fair assumption that existing prices largely discount these possibilities.

The new buying creeping into the oil shares is undoubtedly motivated by the theory that the time to take the aggressive is when the situation is the darkest. Certainly there is nothing favorable in the statistics, at least anything pointing to a decided change for the better, and the only hopeful spot is the probability that the worst is behind. Yet a mildly bullish attitude is taken by many responsible people.

WALKER SANGUINE

Elisha Walker, president of Blair & Co., Inc., the house of bankers that is associated with several large oil properties, was quoted yesterday in New York on his departure for Europe in this statement:

"I am not as pessimistic on the oils as many others in Wall street are. With increased gasoline consumption and more conservatism in drilling of new wells the oil industry will become much more stabilized. I think by fall the oil industry should be in a very healthy state."

Gasoline consumption is the only positive influence that should work for higher stock-market prices. The seasonal increase in consumption begins to curve up in the fall months and runs up to a high in the spring. Stock-market traders usually begin to accumulate in the summer months in anticipation of the swing, but the trouble frequently in the past has been an overbought market for the account of too many people of the same mind.

As possible positive influences, the hope of an advance in crude within the next few weeks, and the chance that some agreement on new drilling and the regulation of production will be reached, are reasons put forth. There is some ground for a revision of the crude price structures in some fields, and it is true that new drilling has proceeded at a slower pace since the low prices followed on the heels of unhealthy surplus production.

STOCKS LOWER

Latest figures from the American Petroleum Institute show that crude-oil stocks fell more than 1,000,000 barrels in May, even though production was still on the increase. New wells completed, however, dropped from 105 in April to eighty in May, and the initial flow declined from 81,432 barrels to 62,575 barrels.

Aside from the accumulation in the standard group of oil stocks, there is some active speculation in the Texas land stocks wholly apart from the statistical position of the industry. Companies operating or controlling acreage in the sections where the new pools are reported are the favorites of the speculators, particularly Transcontinental Oil, Texas Pacific Coal and Oil and Texas Land Trust.

MARYLAND SAFEWAY UNITS SHOWS INCREASE

NEW YORK, June 18. (AP)—Safeway Stores, Inc., of Maryland reports sales of $6,109,775 for May an increase of 22.30 per cent over May last year, and for the five months this year $25,293,095, compared with $21,048,544 in the same period of 1926.

COTTON CROP VIEW BEARISH

Private Survey Optimistic on Prices Holding Up for Some Time, But Strikes Note of Doubt

MEMPHIS (Tenn.) June 18. (Exclusive)—At current prices of cotton, the southern trade of this section has receded somewhat from its violently bullish attitude of late, and while still optimistic as to prices holding well for some time, are not inclined to expect much higher prices until the crop is more mature and the effects of the early infestation of weevil, drop in fertilizer volume and reduction in acreage are more certain.

So many things can happen either way during the next ninety days as to make any guess as to production entirely haphazard. It is freely admitted that prospects this year so far are almost as good per acre as last year, except in spots, and with very favorable weather it will be possible to produce 15,000,000 bales as a maximum, which, added to the existing surplus, will exert rather a bearish influence. At the present moment the local trade is not in position to know accurately what effect the late and scattered rains have had in West Texas, and are awiting reports from that section with great interest.

FLOOD WATERS LINGER

Outside the flooded area of the central belt and possibly West Texas the crop generally is good. In at least three counties, Washington, Sharkey and Issaquena, in Mississippi, will not be clear of flood until far into July, which is too late to turn a furrow for anything except Irish potatoes. Sections of neighboring counties and sections of counties in Louisiana and Eastern Arkansas are in similar plight, with recently planted crops flooded beyond redemption and little chance of planting cotton, corn or hay this year.

At Amory, Miss., in the heart of the long-staple belt, farmers have banded together to prevent labor leaving. Reports have been circulated all throughout that area that farmers are releasing labor unconditionally, but at Amory this is denied and protective measures are assumed. Levee boards of five delta counties in the Yazoo basin this week consolidated permanently to abandon the local control of levees and floods and will ask Congress to assume charge on a uniform scale. The Mississippi State board has just issued warnings against cut worms, red spiders and boll weevil in North Mississippi. Cut worms are serious around the edge of the flood and fear is felt for any cotton that will be planted in that section when the water begins receding in another week or so. Upward of 500,000 acres have been reflooded all over the delta by the new flood and the crest at present is about at Greenville, Miss.

MOISTURE ADEQUATE

Weather in the Memphis area continues too wet and fields all over Eastern Arkansas, North Mississippi and West Tennessee continue grassy, but not yet beyond control. Rainfall seems to be well distributed and all of the central and midwestern belts can do very well without further moisture for two weeks or more.

Acreage reduction seems to run from zero to 20 per cent at various places, but prominent members of the trade are expecting around 10 or 12 per cent decrease in the government report, depending largely on weather during the next two weeks.

First cotton blooms from the delta south of Memphis have been found in several places the last week and correspondents report these blooms about on a seasonal par with last year, which seems to refute the cry of the rabid bulls about such a late start. The presence of weevil and the probability of a great increase because of the recurrent rainfall are causing some worry. Squares of cotton are not mature enough as yet to provide sustenance for the insects, but a combination of spiders and weevil in two weeks can possibly play havoc, and trade here is hesitant awaiting developments of the next fortnight. The trade recalls very vividly the hue and cry of early last season about poor crop reports and the holocaust that developed out of very favorable weather during the last half of the season.

Spot demand here is spasmodic, following closely on the fluctuations of the future market during this particular season. Inquiry generally has been seasonally fair with greatest business done in long staples.

REACTION FEATURES SECURITIES

Sharp Break on Tuesday Unexpected; Bond Prices Slightly Easier

NEW YORK, June 18. (AP)—Few general price changes of consequence took place in this week's financial and securities market.

Stock prices underwent one of the sharpest reactions of the year last Tuesday as a result of an unexpectedly large increase in brokers' loans the week before, but made irregular recovery during the rest of the week, with the result that both rail and industrial averages showed little net change.

Bond prices eased slightly, with new offerings of around $105,000,000, or only about half of the previous week's total. The bond market was forced to contend with a large volume of undigested new securities, but with record-breaking dividends and interest payments to be distributed next month, dealers are looking forward to an investment demand which will clear their shelves.

The shifting of funds incidental to Federal income tax and other mid-month payments, and government financing, failed to disturb the money market, which continued relatively easy. The renewal rate on call money dropped to 4 per cent on Friday, the lowest opening rate in about three weeks, with funds available in the "outside market" that day as low as 3 3-4.

Commodity markets were mixed. Wheat and cotton futures drifted slightly lower, while coffee and sugar quotations improved. The principal foreign exchanges held fairly steady.

LIGHT INDUSTRY TO GET BILLION

New York House Estimates New Capital Investment Will Reach This Total

NEW YORK, June 18. (AP)—New capital investment in the electric light and power industry in 1927 promises to exceed $1,000,000,000, says a review of Pynchon & Co. This industry spent $900,000,000 last year, compared with $885,000,000 by the railroads, exceeding the latter for the first time.

New financing for the industry was more than $722,000,000 in the first five months this year.

CALIFORNIA HAS LEAD IN ELECTRICITY

Continues in First Place for Last Quarter; State of New York Second

California is continuing during 1927 in first position among all the States of the Union in the production of hydroelectric power, a position which it held during 1926, according to the report of the United States Geological Survey of the Department of the Interior for the months of February, March and April.

Production of hydroelectric power in California during February was 437,821,000 kilowatt hours; during March it was 514,702,000; and during April it was 525,674,000 kilowatt hours, as against a production of 396,755,000 kilowatt hours during February by the State of New York, 467,829,000 kilowatt hours during March, and 471,968,000 kilowatt hours in April. New York had the second highest production of hydroelectric power.

In the matter of steam generated power New York State still holds a commanding lead over California, with more than 500,000,000 kilowatt hours per month during all three months.

Electric power generated by the use of fuels in California was 59,906,000 kilowatt hours in February; 41,252,000 in March, and 39,716,000 kilowatt hours in April.

California produced more hydroelectric power during this period than all the New England States produced either by the use of hydroelectric plants or fuel plants. The same is true also in regard to the West North-Central group of States, the East South-Central group of States, the West South-Central group of States, while but three groups of States outside the Pacific Coast group, of which California is a member, produced more power, both hydroelectric and steam combined, than was produced in California.

Market Chief to Meet Here With Commission Men

SACRAMENTO, June 18. (AP)—Meetings of California's commission merchants in Los Angeles and San Francisco to discuss proposed rules and regulations that will be issued by the State Department of Agriculture in governing the commission merchant business, was announced today by G. H. Hecke, director. The Los Angeles meeting will be held the 28th inst., at the Wholesale Terminal Building, and that at San Francisco on the same day at the Ferry Building.

Supervision of the commission merchants who are to be bonded and licensed is placed in the hands of the agricultural director by an Assembly measure passed by the last Legislature and approved by Gov. C. C. Young. Wells A. Sherman, chief of the new division of markets in the department, will have charge of the supervisorial work.

Under the law it is made mandatory for the director to formulate rules and regulations and to distribute them to the merchants. Tentative regulations have been drawn by Hecke and Sherman, and the meetings have been called so that those who must follow them may have an opportunity to discuss them. At the meetings the department's policy in enforcing the law also will be discussed.

SAFETY ZONES FOR DOLLARS

Practical Ways of Investing in Home Ownership, Savings Accounts, Life Insurance, and Dependable Investment Securities

LXXIII.—MARKETABILITY AND LISTED SECURITIES

Many inexperienced investors, seeking a high degree of marketability, refuse to buy anything but listed securities. Their error is that they confuse listing with marketability, believing one to be the effect of the other.

It is unquestionably true that the average listed bond can generally be sold more readily than the average unlisted. Listed securities enjoy an advantage in the fact that listing a security on a stock exchange does facilitate transactions, thereby encouraging marketability. But in very few cases is listing a true index of marketability. There are many bonds listed on the various stock exchanges throughout the country which have remained inactive as long as a year, and in some cases several years. While it is true that a number of these issues are inactive because few are willing to sell them, it is equally true that many are inactive because no one is eager to buy them.

To list a security is merely to call it to the attention of a greater number of prospective buyers. Thus, listed securities have an "advertising" advantage over the unlisted. But by creating a wider market listing does not necessarily create a market in which a given bond can be sold on short notice at a price in line with its replacement value, as marketability demands. The only thing that can create a ready market for a security is demand, which is usually regulated by the size and distribution of the issue and the reputation of the borrower.

As a matter of fact, the largest volume of transactions in investment securities takes place not on the stock exchanges, but directly through the bond houses. Even in the case of listed bonds, the volume of "street" sales is much larger generally than the sales on the exchanges. This is only further proof that listing does not always improve marketability.

Generally, if an issue of bonds has sound values behind it, if it has been widely and carefully distributed with the purpose of creating and maintaining a genuine demand, if its worth remains stable, then a ready market for it is assured whether it is listed or unlisted.

TONE ON LOCAL MART QUIET

Trading Lacks Outstanding Feature With Utilities Strong, Oils Dull and Banks Reactionary

BY FRANK L. GARDNER
Banks, Huntley & Co.

Abbreviated by a holiday last Monday in celebration of the arrival of Col. Lindbergh in New York, the market during the past week on the Los Angeles Stock Exchange was largely featureless. A continuance of strength among the investment utilities was manifest, and the oils were again marked by an absence of public interest. The late leaders in the banking group were inclined to be reactionary, and in most cases closed the week at lower prices.

Bancitaly Corporation, with the matter of a possible stock dividend still unannounced, sold off under the influence of heavy profit-taking to 120, more than 5 points from its peak, and closed yesterday at 120 1-8. Bank of Italy, announcing an increase in the annual dividend rate to $5.24 sold off to a low on Friday at 175 1-4 and closed at 175½. Security Trust and Savings Bank showed an improved demand to advance to 465, and Merchants' National Trust and Savings Bank maintained its previous peak levels to sell between 398 and 400. Union Bank and Trust was considerably improved in price, the bid moving up to 197½, though no stock changed hands.

Los Angeles Gas and Electric preferred continued its upward march with sales from 100 7-8 to 101 3-8. Pacific Gas and Electric first preferred moved in considerable volume at its recent peak of 26 1-4, and Southern California Gas preferred was actively wanted at 25 1-8. The San Joaquin issues were strong, the 7 per cent prior preferred moving between 106 3-4 and 107 1-4, while the 6 per cent prior sold between 98¼ and 99 and advanced to a later bid at 99½. Pacific Lighting 6 per cent preferred sold at par but was later wanted at higher prices with no stock available. The Edison preferred issues were active without material price change, the original preferred at 38, the 7 per cent at 28 1-4 and the 6 per cent at 25 1-8. Southern California Edison common showed evidence of profit-taking, ranging from 35 to low sales at 34 5-8 and a close at 34 7-8.

The oils almost without exception closed the week with moderate recessions. There appeared to be very little inclination to liquidate holdings, but new buying power was very limited. California Petroleum sold off from 24 5-8 to 24, Standard of California from 54 3-8 to 53 1-4, Union of California from 43 to 42 1-8 and Union Oil Associates from 41 to 40½. Richfield Oil ranged from 20 to 20½ and closed at 20 3-8. Holly Development was in good demand at 1.50, Bolsa Chica sold off from 5½ to 4 3-4, and Rio Grande Oil sold at 17.

Los Angeles Investment ranged from 2.62 to 2.58 and closed at 2.59. Broadway Department Stores preferred advanced half a point to 100½, and Globe Grain common gained a point to sales at 54. Goodyear Tire and Rubber preferred sold at 99 1-4 and Goodyear Textile preferred at 97½. Mortgage Guarantee moved at 145 and Pacific Mutual Life at 800.

The mining issues were all inclined to lower levels.

San Francisco Store Proposes New Stock Plan

Proposals to reclassify the capital structure of the City of Paris Dry Goods Company of San Francisco have been submitted to stockholders, it was announced yesterday, involving the exchange of common stock for second preferred, share for share. The plan of reclassification will become effective if stockholders exchange 5000 shares of common for a like number of second preferred.

Upon approval of this proposal, the articles of the company will be amended to reclassify the $3,500,000 capital stock as follows:

(1.) $500,000, divided into 5000 shares of first preferred capital stock, which said stock shall have and be entitled to the same rights, privileges and preferences now granted and assigned to the present preferred capital stock.

(2.) At least $500,000, divided into 5000 shares, but not to exceed $1,000,000 divided into 10,000 shares of second preferred capital stock. Subject to the prior rights of the first preferred stock, the second preferred stock shall be entitled to cumulative dividends at the rate of 7 per cent per annum. The second preferred stock shall be nonassessable and shall be callable at 102 per share and shall have priority in the distribution of assets over the common capital stock.

(3.) No more than $2,500,000, divided into 25,000 shares of common stock.

CHILEAN NITRATE UP

TONE ON STOCK MART BUOYANT

Prices Rule Strong Despite Usual Profit-Taking

Optimistic Sentiment Aided by Ease in Call Rate

Bidding Up of Shares in Rail Merger Group Features

NEW YORK, June 18. (AP)—An undercurrent of strength ran through today's stock market despite rather heavy week-end profit-taking and the uncovering of a few weak spots by bear traders. Operators for the advance, encouraged by the belief that the stock market will draw a substantial part of the $550,000,000 to be distributed in dividend and interest payments next month, staged bullish demonstrations in a selected assortment of rails and specialties, nearly a score of which were elevated to record high levels. Trading was fairly heavy for a half holiday session, the day's sales aggregating 1,071,000 shares.

With call money available in the "outside market" as low as 3 3-4 per cent, speculators for the advance believe that they have nothing to fear from any immediate change in the credit situation. The weekly Federal Reserve report of brokers' loans to be issued after the close Monday will be awaited with interest, as last week's total was exceeded only by the record-breaking volume in the early part of 1926. In view of last Tuesday's sharp reaction, and the fact that the figures cover the week ended last Wednesday, a decline is generally expected although it is conceded that the financing of new security flotations, the total of which is hard to approximate, may upset calculations.

OPTIMISTIC VIEW

Recent reduction and omission of several dividends, particularly on preferred stocks, has caused some uneasiness. Quoted opinions of business men and bankers on the business outlook, however, may be characterized as conservatively optimistic. It is pointed out that the seasonal recession in some of the basic industries has been less marked than usual, and that the price structure remains fairly stable.

Railroad shares were the centers of speculative interest in today's market. The announcement that a tentative draft of the revised southwestern merger had been prepared brought fresh buying into the shares of the roads involved, although some of the previous purchasers showed a disposition to take profits on the rally. Lehigh Valley ran up 6 points to 133 on the publication of the optimistic statement by President Loomis, but it later sold down to 127½. Western Pacific was run up 3 3-8 points to 37 3-4, but failed to maintain all of its gain.

Simultaneous strength of Pittsburgh and West Virginia, Pittsburgh Coal and Pittsburgh Terminal Coal, all of which scored extreme gains of

NEW YORK BOND PRICES

NEW YORK, June 18. (AP)—Price changes in the bond market today were narrow, and no definite trend was established. A better inquiry was noted, however, for high-grade investment issues, many of which have declined to a point at which they are again attractive to buyers. Last week's new offerings fell to less than half the volume of the week before, giving the market an opportunity to assimilate some of the recent new issues.

Trading in listed bonds gave an impression that supply and demand are fairly well matched. There was some early buying of such bonds as United States Steel 5s, Chesapeake 5s and Canadian National Railway 4½s, but profit-taking later wiped out the gains.

Convertible issues were subject to realizing. International Telephone 5½s, Erie "D" 4s and Delaware and Hudson 5s all sustained losses ranging from fractions to more than a point.

Government issues were active, especially Treasury 4s, more than $500,000 of which changed hands at slightly easing prices. A quarter of a million in Liberty Fourth 4 1-4s were dealt in around yesterday's final figure.

Foreign bonds were relatively quiet and irregular. There was some liquidation of French and Belgian obligations, and city of Berlin 6½s were freely offered.

The quotations represent sales of bonds (in thousands of dollars) and the high, low and closing prices in the order given. To expedite transmission, close is omitted when same as low, and both low and close when same as high.

NEW YORK CURB STOCKS

NEW YORK, June 18. (AP)—The movement toward recovery proceeded with greater vigor in today's dealings on the Curb Exchange. Sharp advances in the more prominent issues lifted quotations to the high level for the year. Equitable Office Building and White Sewing Machine rights scored early gains of about 2 points to new peak prices. Others to top previous levels were Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, Richmond Radiator common and convertible preferred, Celluloid Company and Gobel, Inc.

Deere & Co., which was in supply yesterday, rallied 2 points, and Curtis Publishing also moved upward. Hood Rubber dropped 3 points to the year's low quotation. Celanese Corporation old shares sold at 281, a decline of 18 points from last sale.

Yellow Taxicab Corporation of New York and Thatcher Manufacturing became strong features later in the trading with sharp upturns of about 5 points registered in each.

Westinghouse Air Brake, new issue, approximating 3,172,110 shares to be exchanged on the basis of four shares of new for one present stock, was admitted to unlisted trading privileges. No transactions were reported.

Oil shares were in better demand at rising prices. Prairie Pipe opened up a point at a new high at 185 and then reacted 3 points.

Tidal Osage continued active and upward and Transcontinental preferred improved 2 points on small sales.

Public utility issues were neglected with some recessions occurring on light offerings.

The closing price is omitted when same as the low, and both low and close when same as the high.

The Oil Stocks
Will They Go Lower?

WHAT is the present oil production situation? Is any improvement in sight? Are crude oil prices too low? Do conditions warrant buying these stocks now?

In the past six months, overproduction and price cuts have caused sharp decreases in oil company earnings. Drastic price declines have resulted. Is accumulation taking place at these levels?

Investors holding or thinking of buying oil securities should have a recent bulletin—"The Oil Situation"—prepared by our Investment Counsel Department.

CATTLE—Supplies during the past week were fairly liberal. About 25 per cent of the run came from Arizona, with the balance from California, excepting a load each from Utah and Nevada. The majority of the Arizona supply was stockers and feeders, while a burdensome supply of plain half fat steers arrived from California. An active demand existed for the comparatively small supply of good grade she stock and steers and these kinds were cleaned up readily at fully steady prices, while the plain kinds of steers and she stock, mostly steers, were slow sellers at uneven prices, mostly steady to easy. All cutters and bulls met a fair trade at generally steady prices. Utah offerings consisted of a load of 832-pound baby beef steers at 11.50.

The best matured steers realized 9.95, this price taking five cars of 1112-pound weights on Monday, while a seven-car string of 1050-pound weights made 9.85. Medium steers were fairly numerous from 8.40@8.85, while common and low medium kinds went over largely from 7.00@8.25, mostly 7.65@8.25. Several cars of common steers, including light Arizonas, went out for a short time to near-by feed lots from 7.25@7.80. Very thin steers cashed in a small way from 6.00@6.75.

Carloads of good heifers went over the scales from 7.25@7.80, while good cows were fairly numerous from 6.75@7.00. Most of the better finished kinds of cows, top medium and low good, cashed from 6.25@6.75. Common and low medium cows and heifers moved freely from 5.00@6.00, including light Arizona cows from 5.00@5.75. Cutters cleared largely from 3.75@4.50, with low cutters most numerous from 3.75@3.50. Bulls were scarce, selling mostly from 6.00@6.25, while medium kinds were fairly numerous down to 5.50, with common kinds around 5.00.

CALVES—The week's light supply met a rather uneven trade, with prices on the good and choice kinds of calves and vealers closing generally 25@50c higher, while the common and medium grades, including heavies, were comparatively slow sellers at steady to 25 cents higher prices. A load of choice 196-pound California vealers topped at 13.00, while other lots of choice vealers turned from 12.50@13.00. The bulk of vealers, medium to good kinds, turned from 10.50@12.00, while the calf supply, mostly plain kinds and heavies, some weighing up to 475 pounds, sold from 7.00@8.25, mostly southwesterns, with a few up to 9.00, while a few good and choice calves sold from 10.50@11.50.

HOGS—A liberal supply the forepart of the week resulted in sharp price declines from last week's high levels, however, receipts the balance of the week were only moderate and with active demand, some of the loss was regained, closing values being generally 15@25c lower than a week ago. The week's top, paid at the close, was 11.25, with the bulk of butchers averaging from 160 to 190 pounds on the closing days turning from 11.00@11.25. Several lots of 120 to 130-pound weights cashed around 10.75, with a few medium weight and weighty butchers, including local feds, down to 10.00. Packing sows at the close went over largely from 8.50@9.00, with a few smooth lightweight kinds up to 9.50.

SHEEP—Supplies the forepart of the week were cleaned up readily at fully steady prices while a deck of lambs arriving Thursday had not sold at a late hour today (Friday.) These, however, were only in feeder flesh. A deck of medium to good 71-pound lambs Monday brought 12.50, with a 10 per cent sort at 11.00. Strictly choice handy weight lambs were quoted up to 14.00. Ewe offerings consisted of a string of cull 101-pound shorn kinds at 3.50 to go back to the country for feeding purposes. Good and choice shorn ewes were quoted from 5.50@6.50.

Rice Experiment Seen Important Crop in Mexico

MONTEREY (Mex.) June 18. (Exclusive)—An extensive experiment in growing rice is being carried on near Xicotencatl, State of Vera Cruz, by Gen. Juan Zuanzua, who has planted 500 acres of the grain. Prospects are favorable for a large production per acre.

The crop will be harvested in October. A rice mill for polishing the grain will be constructed, it is stated. An enormous area of coastal lands of Mexico is splendidly adapted to rice growing, it is believed, and it may become one of the staple products of this country.

BRITISH CHEMIST IN QUEST OF RICH MINES

WINNIPEG (Man.) June 18. (Exclusive)—Sir George Filmer, noted British research chemist, stopped off here en route to James Bay to search for a fabulously rich diamond field. While in hospital in England in 1918 a dying Canadian soldier told him of the area in the Canadian north rich in diamonds, rubies, sapphires, platinum, gold, copper and coal.

[Mexico . . . the most highly mineralized country on the face of the Globe . . . ranks first among the nations in the production of silver, second in lead, third in gold and one of the leaders in zinc, copper and other metals . . . 13 of the 17 mines of the American Smelting and Refining Company . . . the world's largest operator . . . are located in Mexico.]

LATIN-AMERICAN
Is Not Looking for Ore
It Has It!

400,000 tons of dump ores and tailings above the ground, estimated by competent engineers to contain 2,000,000 ounces silver, 28,000,000 pounds lead and 56,000,000 pounds zinc.

To recover these known profits, with an estimated net worth of more than $1,000,000, the Latin-American Milling Company is now completing the expenditure of approximately $250,000.00 to insure the reduction of 250 tons of tailings daily.

New equipment installed, on the ground, or being installed, includes a 400-horsepower Worthington Diesel plant, Marcy Ball and Allis-Chalmers Tube Mills, 40 Kraut Flotation Cells, 30 Westinghouse Motors, Oliver Filter, Dorr Classifier, a 3½-mile high tension power line, Redwood Conditioning Tanks, 18,000 feet of six-inch pipe line, and other necessary equipment to insure economical and constant milling operations on a large scale.

The Latin-American Milling Company's 250 ton daily capacity mill will be operating on or about July 1st. Less than thirty days from now daily production of concentrates should average 20 tons of lead-silver and 35 tons of zinc, all of which will be shipped to the American Smelting and Refining Company smelters. Profits from daily operations, based on actual smelter returns, should average, after all charges, $1000.00 per day, $25,000.00 per month, or $300,000.00 per year, based on 300 days. These indicated profits from the treatment of tailings alone, would represent more than 100% return on the total outstanding capitalization of the Latin-American Milling Company—275,000 shares.

With 400,000 tons of known values above the ground, insuring four years' capacity mill operations, and an indicated reserve of 700,000 tons of good grade lead-silver and zinc ores, blocked out and in sight in the mines, we sincerely believe Latin-American shares, because of the Company's exceptional properties and unusually low capitalization, represent one of the most attractive mining investment opportunities ever offered Los Angeles investors.

Latin-American should not be confused with the average mining speculation, as not one single penny is being spent at this time for development work. Latin-American is not looking for the ore—it has it!

BY HOWARD C. KEGLEY

The San Martinez Oil Company, which has been testing the extreme eastern end of the town lot field at Huntington Beach for the past eight months, is preparing to make a test of its Hanke wildcat at about 4400 feet, according to reports from the field. The well was drilled to somewhere around 5500 feet, and has been plugging back for the past three or four weeks. The well is located at Ninth street and Ocean avenue and is about three blocks west of the nearest good producing well.

The crew has been having some difficulty in getting casing out of the hole, and it is understood has had to resort to dynamite to loosen up the casing. If this work is accomplished without junking the hole, a production test will be made to determine the value of the showings, which were reported to have been found all the way from 3400 to 4400 feet. The San Martinez has never put out much information concerning the well, but it strategic location caused it to be the center of much interest during the early stages of its development, and many and various reports were put out concerning it.

Miley Spuds Well

The Miley Petroleum Exploration Company has spudded in its Goleta No. 7 well in the Goleta district, twelve miles west of Santa Barbara, according to official reports. The derrick for the Goleta No 6 well is completed, but the well has not yet started drilling.

Gets New Well

The Painted Hills Oil Syndicate, which has operated in most of the town lot fields of the Los Angeles basin during the past four years, has brought in a new well in the town lot area at Huntington Beach, with an initial production of about 150 barrels a day, according to field reports. The well is in the shallow zone at about 2100 feet, which was passed up by most operators in the early development of the field.

Plan New Test

Prospects for another test well in the Sunset Beach district appear to be good, with the reported location of a site for a derrick about one and one-half miles east of the Lomita test of the General Petroleum Corporation well. It is understood that the new well is to be drilled on a part of the property of the Bolsa Chica Gun Club, which extends southeast to the Huntington Beach field. The General Petroleum test was abandoned about a month ago after drilling to about 3200 feet without encountering indications.

Near 3000 Feet

The Holly Development is down nearly 3000 feet in its outpost well east of the Coyote Hills field, according to field reports. The Holly company acquired a considerable block of acreage in this area two or three months ago and since it began drilling the well a number of other operators have been getting acreage, it is said.

COTTON MARKET

NEW YORK, June 18. (Exclusive) The cotton market made a rather poor response today to the bullish boll-weevil report, announced from Washington by the Agricultural Department. So many complaints had been made in private wires in the last several days that it was expected the official statement would have influenced a large amount of Wall-street and southern buying.

Prices went up only 6 and 8 points from yesterday's closing decline with July selling at 16.60 cents; October, 16.95 cents; December, 17.17 cents; January, 17.23 cents, and March, 17.42 cents.

When little new buying developed from the report, considerable reselling by local traders and New Orleans came on the market. The pressure sent prices off 11 to 16 points from their early high level in the second hour of trading and to a decline of about 5 to 8 points from yesterday, prices closing before new support from bulls checked the decline. Trading continued on a narrow scale after that up to the close, with much favorable comment developing about the good weather over 75 per cent of the belt.

Further beneficial rains fell in the Atlantic and East Gulf States and some good showers in parts of Texas. With the drought of a fortnight ago thoroughly broken over Texas and the eastern part of the belt clear weather would accelerate rapid growth of the plant.

Liverpool closed quiet at a net decline of 4 to 5 points against about 9 to 12 due. Spot cotton there was unchanged at 9 1-8 for middling.

NEW STAFF ELECTED AT CONVENTION

College Women's Branch Names Miss Stangland as State President

Miss Edna Stangland, private secretary to State Superintendent of Education Cooper, was elected president of the California branch of the American Association of College Women yesterday afternoon at the fiftieth annual convention in Johnson Hall, Occidental College. She succeeds Mrs. C. M. Vanderburg. Other officers chosen were: Dr. Mary A. Hill, Whittier, vice-president; Miss Julie Johnson, Fresno, recording secretary; Miss Edith Lawson, Sacramento, corresponding secretary, and Miss Alice Anderson, Chico, treasurer.

Jane Bancroft Robinson, former dean of women at Northwestern University and founder of the Western Association of Collegiate Alumnae, which was later formed into the present organization, told the members that the association has accomplished more to establish an educational standard in the United States than any other agency.

"Prior to 1882 every school, college and university had its own standards and made its own laws," Mrs. Robinson said. "No one knew with any certainty what a college degree meant. Degrees of ten were granted for very poor work and there was much question as to the intellectual value involved in the bestowal of an honorary degree. That this doubt has not yet been eliminated is evidenced by the many questions that were asked recently as to why Gov. Smith of New York was honored with the doctor of laws degree by Nicholas Murray Butler of Columbia University."

The improvement of community arts was introduced as one of the principal subjects in the association's 1927 program following the address of Gilmor Brown, director of the Pasadena Community Theater.

Presentation of annual reports, round-table discussions and other business occupied the delegates throughout the closing day of the two-day convention. Mrs. Harry Kluegel of San Francisco presided over the luncheon program at the college.

Dr. Aurelia Henry Reinhardt, president of Mills College and past-president of the national association, was the chief speaker at the morning program, giving an outline of the proceedings at the recent Washington convention.

San Francisco won the straw vote for the site of the next convention, defeating a number of cities, but the final decision will rest in the hands of the executive committee.

Though the convention was formally closed last night with a banquet meeting at the University Club, presided over by Dr. Reinhardt, many of the delegates remained over today to visit the new campus for the men's college and for luncheon as guests of President and Mrs. Bird and members of the State board.

NEW FIND IN PSYCHOLOGY ANNOUNCED

Method of Determining Guilt of Criminals Cited at Meeting Here

That the proper use of psychological association may serve as a better device for determining the guilt of criminals than the "third degree" and that respiration as a basis for the correction of stuttering has been found effective were brought out in research papers presented before the Western Psychological Association at its annual meeting in Los Angeles yesterday.

By carefully selected and well-plied associated questions, according to a report given by H. R. Crosland, psychology department, University of Oregon, it is possible to determine the guilt of a suspect. He has experimented on college students with satisfying results.

Similar to the psychological tone and rhythm tests now in use to determine the musical ability of an individual, Alfred Leverenz, department of psychology, Los Angeles city schools, presented a graphic test that may determine the degree of artistic ability of the student.

"The Nursery School" was the subject of a paper by Prof. Katherine McLaughlin, University of California at Los Angeles, and brought out the need for co-operation between psychologists, medical men and educators in dealing with children between two and four years of age.

Dr. Shepherd I. Franz, professor of psychology, University of California at Los Angeles, was elected president of the association. The next meeting will probably be conducted at Stanford University.

asserted contrary whims of Mrs. Quattrociocchi, according to the complaint. It stated that on evenings when the husband wished to go out seeking diversions his wife would droop, saying that she was too tired to go and insisted upon remaining at home. But, it was added, when Mr. Quattrociocchi was fatigued and wished to remain at home for the evening his wife always was eager to go out.

The climax to their disagreement, the complaint said, came when Mrs. Quattrociocchi in a fit of anger and in the presence of friends said to her husband:

"You liar. You Dago—I will not live with you any longer. You are not fit to be my husband. I am going to leave you."

The complaint, filed by Quattrociocchi's attorney, F. M. Andreani, stated that the couple married in Los Angeles November 26, 1926, and separated on Thursday, last.

MARINE AIRWAY BRANCHING OUT

New and Larger Terminal to be Constructed

Lease on Water-front Tract Already Granted

Project is Part of $100,000 Expansion Plan

New and larger flying terminals at Los Angeles Harbor to accommodate his enlarged fleet of flying boats, was announced yesterday by E. A. Bacon, manager for the Pacific Marine Airways.

The company has been given a lease on 262 feet of city frontage at Berth 179, Wilmington, and will let contracts tomorrow for construction of hangars, waiting rooms, marine railways and other items as part of a $100,000 improvement program.

Tomorrow also will mark the fleet's doubling of its daily service between Wilmington and Catalina Island, planes leaving for the island hereafter both at 10:30 a.m. and at 4:45 p.m. Bacon recently returned from Washington where he purchased four former naval planes to add to the flying boats already here, and expects to introduce a regular scheduled trip between Los Angeles Harbor and San Diego by the middle of July.

The company boasts the unparalleled record of never having suffered a casualty to a passenger in the five years its planes have operated to and from the islands.

Incidentally the Harbor Department has allocated additional space to McCormick Steamship Company which will touch the air terminals. The McCormick addition will extend north 300 feet, giving the line two full berths. It is expected the Harbor Department later will cover this frontage with sheds.

RECORD RAIL AND SEA TRAVEL FORECAST

Passenger movement from the East by train and thence to Pacific Coast ports by water is beyond all previous years' figures for this early period in the season, according to E. Grant McMicken, passenger traffic manager for the Admiral Line, on his return from surveying potential business in the East and Middle West.

"As Barnum used to say of his circus, so will the tourist army to the Pacific Coast this year be 'bigger and better than ever,'" declared McMicken.

"The coming week, which marks the opening of school vacations, will see a big exodus of travelers. Alaska then will receive a veritable army of tourists for bookings to the 'land of the midnight sun' this year are far beyond figures heretofore encountered."

Another stimulant to travel, he said, is the recent agreement between the Southern Pacific rail lines and the Admiral Line, whereby tickets of the two companies are interchangeable. It permits a passenger to journey one way by water and return by rail. Interchange of tickets also is permissible allowing ticket holders on either Admiral Line or Los Angeles Steamship Company ships to ride vessels of the other line.

The Admiral Benson will arrive from Portland and San Francisco at 11 p.m. today on its maiden passenger run since it and the Admiral Peoples were bought and brought from the east coast. The latter will follow the Benson into the service in about a week. The Benson will leave at 10 a.m. tomorrow for San Diego, returning and sailing north the following day.

The forty-foot launch Southerner went out on the deck of the Daisy Gray yesterday for Alaska, where Pasadena instructors and students will board her for a two month's cruise of Alaska in the furtherance of biological studies. Carl Case, student, accompanied the craft. The rest, who will motor up and join him in Seattle, are the owner, Charles E. Sydnor, professor in the school of commerce, Pasadena Junior College and son Thurston; Malcomb H. Finley, professor of biology, and Erick Kennway and Charles Hutchinson, students.

Fish brought to Los Angeles Harbor totaled 4,288,373 pounds during April, a typical off-season month, according to figures by H. L. Williamson of the California Fish and Game Commission. Sardines dropped to 2,130,210 pounds, which will be surpassed by May's freak catch. Yellowfin tuna from Mexican waters was second in April with 1,073,280 pounds, and barracuda third with 328,541 pounds. Sandabs made the smallest showing of thirty varieties, only 22 pounds being reported.

Bringing both passengers and freight, the Dollar trans-Pacific liner President Cleveland is due here at noon today, exactly nineteen days after sailing from Yokohama, including a stop at San Francisco. Aboard are several returning missionaries, and the liner also will embark thirty passengers before sailing tomorrow. She will drop 980 tons of oriental cargo, and pick up 1800 here, including cotton, sardines, oil-well machinery, filter earth and 5000 boxes of oranges. A five-ton ice-making machine is destined for Manila.

Fifteen Monterey fishing boats arrived on the Wallingford yesterday to enter the tuna season here.

News of Ships and Sailings at Pacific Ports

SAN FRANCISCO, June 18. (AP)—Increased general freight offerings westbound together with the heavy demand for lumber eastbound has resulted in an increase of service by the California and Eastern Steamship Company, operating in the intercoastal trade. This was announced today by the local manager of the company, who stated that beginning July 1, next, the company will have a sailing from Coast ports every two weeks. Word of the increased service came following the arrival here of the president of the California and Eastern company from Los Angeles. Six vessels will be used in the run after July 1, whereas only four are operated now.

Making her first voyage since she was sold to the General Steamship Corporation the lumber schooner Tillamook, formerly the schooner Point Arena, sailed from here today for Tillamook, Or. The vessel was formerly owned by the Hartwood Lumber Company. She left today in the service of the Hammond Lumber Company to load a cargo of lumber at the Oregon port.

Paul Nolze, special representative of the Roland Line, who has just returned to his local office after a trip to Germany, announced today that his company is to open its own freight offices in San Francisco and is to augment its present service to Europe out of Pacific Coast ports. At present the two Roland Line steamers operating out of Pacific ports, the Wittell and the Witram, are handled by Sudden & Christenson.

SEATTLE, June 18.—With 4700 tons of cargo, including 3000 cases of 1927 Alaska salmon, the steamship Iowan of the American-Hawaiian Line left here tonight for the Atlantic Coast by way of San Francisco. The cargo was loaded in three days at Seattle and Tacoma.

Three Stores Victimized by Bandit Gangs

Three stores were victimized by bandits during a Saturday night epidemic of hold-ups, police reported last night.

A drug store at Cypress avenue and Arvia street was entered by three gunmen early in the evening. The bandits forced an employee into a rear room and scooped $98 from a cash register, the police report stated.

Two men later in the evening held up the Temple Apartment Grocery at Loomis street and Wilshire Boulevard and escaped with $88 after holding employees at bay with revolvers.

The third depredation of bandits was a tire shop at 2900 Los Feliz Boulevard. Two gunmen held up Ed Miller, proprietor of the shop, a police report stated, and obtained a small sum from the cash register.

No Joshing---It Rained Some in City Yesterday

Yes, it did; it rained yesterday.

The weather man said so in his official bulletin issued last night. But just a trace, he admitted; one would hardly notice it.

Today, he predicted, will be generally fair with fog or clouds in the morning. The highest temperature yesterday was 69 deg. and the lowest 59 deg. A steady barometer last night did not indicate a sudden change of weather.

VERY soon we shall announce the opening of the first of two retail department stores which we are now building.

The first one will be at Vermont and Slauson Avenues. The second one will be at Ninth Street and Boyle Avenue.

Each location is, as you know, easy of access. It centers in a large residential area. It can be reached on convenient thoroughfares and transportation lines.

Escaping the congested traffic sections, each location appeals to the motorist. Appreciating this, we are creating ample free parking space beside each store. You can drive in, park your car as long as you wish, and do your shopping free from worry.

Each of these new stores enjoys the full advantage of our distinctive merchandising policy.

They will stand out in your mind because they will give you merchandise of dependable quality at lowest prices. This means every day in the business year. We go on record now, before the doors of either store are opened. On every article you purchase you will actually see a definite, worth while saving.

On top of that, every transaction with these stores will be covered by our unrestricted guaranty of absolute satisfaction or your money back.

When you are near either location, we invite you to watch their progress and see how we are preparing to make everything most convenient for you.

Knowing that you will appreciate the business policy which has earned for us more than eleven million families as customers, and an annual volume of three hundred million dollars, we feel that our entry into Los Angeles will be welcomed in the spirit of one of the fastest growing cities in the world.

UTHLAND SCENIC GRANDEUR BECKONS TO VACATIONISTS

[illegible] Paradise Offers Rest and Pleasure for Tired [illegible] Man and Family; Variety of Beauty Spots Lure Out City Folk

BY WALTER FINNEGAN

[illegible] time in Southern California! Another year is half tucked away, summer is in [illegible] again, and now is the psychological moment to get that well-earned vacation with [illegible] square miles of playground straight ahead.

[illegible] a taste of vacation land [illegible] Mr. Average Citizen [illegible]. Thousands of tourists [illegible] annually for the [illegible] of spending a few days [illegible] paradise which is right [illegible] own front door 365 days [illegible] year—not counting leap [illegible] at the ocean's edge any [illegible] you can enjoy the gran- [illegible] scenery equaling, [illegible] surpassing, that of [illegible] by nightfall. Throughout Southern California are a number of art galleries devoted to the showing of local canvases, yet no artist's brush yet invented can reproduce half the beauty of the original. There are types of beauty to please and satisfy each individual taste. First, there is the subtle mystery of the desert country with its

ROCKETS TO SOAR FROM GREAT PEAK

Fireworks Display to Be Staged on Mt. Whitney on Eve of July Fourth

Fireworks from the highest point in the United States. This will be done from Mt. Whitney at 8:30 on the night of July 3 and at the same time July 4. Ted Cook and Frank Chrysler, famous Sierra guides, have volunteered their services to take this material to the summit, and have donated the use of their sure-footed mountain animals for this occasion. They will be assisted by Ray Spear of the Lone Pine pack train.

This fireworks display will be one of the most unique of its kind, and will be plainly visible from Lone Pine, the nearest point to Mt. Whitney.

Due to the heavy snows covering Army Pass, great difficulties are expected to be encountered in breaking the snows to the summit. Five days will be required to make the round trip to pack the fireworks to the summit. It will be necessary to go by way of Chicken Spring Pass and Siberian Outposts to Crabtree, from which ponit it is possible to ride to within a mile and a half of the summit.

The annual two-day rodeo will be held in Lone Pine July 3 and 4, in conjunction with a free barbecue and other events, all of which are under the auspices of the Mt. Whitney Gun and Anglers' Club, a sportsmen's organization of Lone Pine.

Due to the unusual attractions, coupled with the opening of golden trout season, June 30, it is expected that large crowds will be at hand to witness the events.

Yellowstone Beckoning to Vacationists

T. J. De Lasaux, district manager for the Peck-Judah Travel Bureau, now in its new quarters at 749 South Hill street, announces a Yellowstone National Park tour, with all expenses paid, that offers the vacationist the utmost in comfort, convenience and sightseeing.

The rates, which are well within the reach of the tourist of average means, cover all transportation, rail and motor, hotel and bungalow accommodation, meals, etc.

The Peck-Judah tours take in such delightful spots as Salt Lake City, Mammoth Hot Springs, Old Faithful Geyser and the many other attractions of the famed Yellowstone and includes Idaho and Oregon with visits to the Marble Caves, Crater Lake and Klamath Falls. The Peck-Judah tours are famous throughout the West for their thoroughness and recreational features.

SOUTH TO COLLECT HEAVILY

Recreationists Will Drop Thousands of Shekels in Enjoying Themselves This Summer

Southern California is due to collect many millions of dollars in vacation money if the figures of an eastern economist are correct. These are that the American people will spend $6,000,000,000 on their vacations during 1927, or about 5 per cent of their entire income.

This announcement may well be cheering to the resort towns according to the estimates of the Automobile Club of Southern California. The big motoring organization has figured what this stupendous total of vacation money means to recreation centers of the State.

Indications are that at least one-half of the vacations will be enjoyed in motor vehicles. This means that $1,500,000,000 will be spent the country over by motorists. California contains nearly 8 per cent of the motor vehicles of the country, so that it is estimated that the people of this State alone will spend $120,000,000 on their vacation tours this year.

While this total is compelling, it is not all of the story by any means. California is one of the States that is a favorite recreation center for motorists from all over the country, so that there will be many millions of dollars pouring into the State, in addition to what its own population will scatter along the highways, by-ways, restaurants, hotels, auto camps, supply stations and resorts.

MILLIONS EXPECTED

An estimate of just how many millions the motoring visitors will spend is difficult to make, but it seems reasonably certain according to the Auto Club, that more than 200,000 cars will come into California during the present year. These will average between three and four persons to the car, and the minimum expenditure of such a party each day is $10. Hence, if the 200,000 cars remained only one day each it would mean a distribution of $2,000,000 in cash for their upkeep during that twenty-four hours. It is an established fact, however, that most of the motor visitors will be touring not only for days, but for weeks and months, so that the daily expenditure will be multiplied many times bringing the total vacation money from outside the State to a staggering sum in addition to the $120,000,000 that will be spent by residents.

There never has been a time when California called more alluringly to the rest of the world. Late and bounteous rains have bedecked the State in galest colors and insured especially delightful conditions for motor vacations. The forests, hills and streams have never been more appealing and the highways, and other comforts for the motorists have never been more attractive. The suggestion is made by the Automobile Club of Southern California that with so great an invasion of vacationists in sight, the recreation centers prepare to put their best foot forward and present the best possible impression to the tens of thousands of visitors who will be seeing the point of interest for the first time.

SOUTHLAND WILL DRAW HOME FOLKS

"See California First" Will Be Slogan of Man Vacationists Here

Where are Southern Californians spending their vacations this summer?

Everywhere, generally speaking, but to mention places an elliptic curve inclosing the Pacific Coast from Lower California to British Columbia is the Southlanders' playground.

Because the recreational opportunities in this choice slice of the rugged West are superior to any others anywhere, practically all of the attractions of this region will score new records in the numbers of vacationists, according to the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California. The seekers after rest and outdoor pleasures are motoring to every conceivable vacation attraction in this western territory, it is claimed. Early season reports from vacation grounds show record attendance, and new thousands of inquiries regarding roads to vacation places are being answered by the Auto Club touring bureau.

They are driving to Grand Canyon and Zion National Parks, Bryce Canyon, the Kaibab Forest and the national monuments in that region east of Southern California. Thousands who can make the extended tours are

AUTOMOBILE VACATIONS POPULAR WITH PUBLIC

Expect 30,000,000 Pleasure Seekers to Throng Highways of Nation During Summer Months

BY MORRIS M. RATHBUN
Automobile Club of Southern California

Thirty millions of persons in the old U.S.A. will take vacations in automobiles this year, according to the wise men who live in quiet places but make loud noises with statistics.

Unofficial estimates indicate that 29,000,000 of these will get on the wrong roads, will be rained upon, bitten by bugs, eat sand-flecked food and suffer other things that ordinarily are remote from their lives. But talk to one of them a few months after a trip was made and you will be led to believe that Paradise was found in the old bus and the joy ride of all time was experienced.

NEW OUTLOOK ON VACATIONS

Vacations are no longer looked upon as the lazy man's "out" or the loafer's delight. Hard-headed big business men have finally figured out that they are a good bet for business, and when such a conclusion is reached, the vacation can stand on its own feet and look scoffers in the face. Governments, corporations and larger institutions generally now em-

NATURE LOVERS ARE BECKONED

"God's Candelabra" to Lure Out Vacationists

Song of Streams Offers Rest to Busy Eardrums

Trout Eagerly Await Bait of City Fisher-Folk

Paved highway for eighty-three miles—excellent dirt road for another six miles—brings you to one of the prettiest trout streams in Southern California. If the old bus can't make the entire trip in high, throw it away—even the junk man won't buy it. If you don't catch fish it'll be because you don't known how.

If you're a nature lover come up and behold the fairest canyon that ever lay between two high mountains. Never have the hills been more heavily festooned with yucca—that plant so appropriately termed "God's Candelabra." Plenty of rain this past winter and spring has imparted to the country surrounding Wheelers Hot Springs a riot of green hues. Can't you just hear the music of that stream as it tumbles and falls on its way to the sea through giant boulders, forming pools here and riffles there, as you sit in the shade of some giant sycamore or oak with which the stream's banks are dotted?

IDEAL HIKING TRAILS

Perhaps you would prefer to hike around, or ride horseback, through the largest stretch of uninhabited mountains anywhere in Southern California. Do you know of any mountain resort in Southern California where you can see bear, mountain lion, deer, eagles, the giant condor and other forms of animal life in their wild native haunts?

Perhaps your yen for amusement takes expression in other forms. Would a plunge in a large open-air pool of warm mineral water constantly flowing day in and day out at the rate of about 100,000 gallons every twenty-four hours intrigue you? Waters whose beneficial medicinal properties have been pronounced by authorities to be the equal, if not the superior, of many world-famed European resorts?

Do you enjoy dancing on a large hard maple wood floor to the tunes of a six-piece jazz orchestra, in a building heavily shaded by giant trees, and ventilated on all four sides with fly-proof screens?

Do you enjoy the very best of food, the equal of that obtainable in the very finest hotels in Los Angeles, at moderate prices? Do you wish to live in a neat clean tent cottage at a very moderate rental, or would you prefer a six-room stone and stucco bungalow?

Bring your croquet mallets, tennis rackets or golf clubs if you prefer these amusements.

HEALTH IN STORE

Maybe it is health you are seeking. If your system is run down and you're "out of sorts," come on up and take the original Battle Creek treatments, administered by Battle Creek trained experts.

All of these amusements and advantages are centered in over 200 acres in the Ventura Mountains back of Ventura and Ojai. Most folks make the trip from Los Angeles in their own car in three and one-half hours. A large, new, comfortable bus is making the round trip daily, departing from the Motor Transit Depot in Los Angeles at 8:30 a.m. and arriving at Wheelers Hot Springs just in time for lunch. Wheeler's—that's the place! A sojourn there will unquestionably be a memorable and enjoyable one.

Lengthy Tour of the World by Angelenos

The third world tour party for this year, arranged by the D. F. Robertson Travel Bureau will sail the 28th inst. on the palatial Dollar liner S. S. President Polk.

This group of Angelenos will visit Hawaii, Japan, China, the Philippines, Straits Settlements, Ceylon, Egypt, Palestine and all European countries while away. The entire trip will take about five months' time, according to Mrs. Gladys M. Eaton, globe trotter in charge of the party.

The President Polk, upon which they embark the 28th inst., is commanded by Capt. A. Ahlin, commodore of the Dollar line fleet. Capt. Ahlin since taking command has traveled "round the world" covering over 300,000 nautical miles.

These prominent in the June party are Mr. and Mrs. F. S. Wheeler of Hollywood, together with their daughter, Miss Virginia Wheeler, Mrs. Robert L. Moore and Mr. Robert L. Moore, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Allan Hayer and many others.

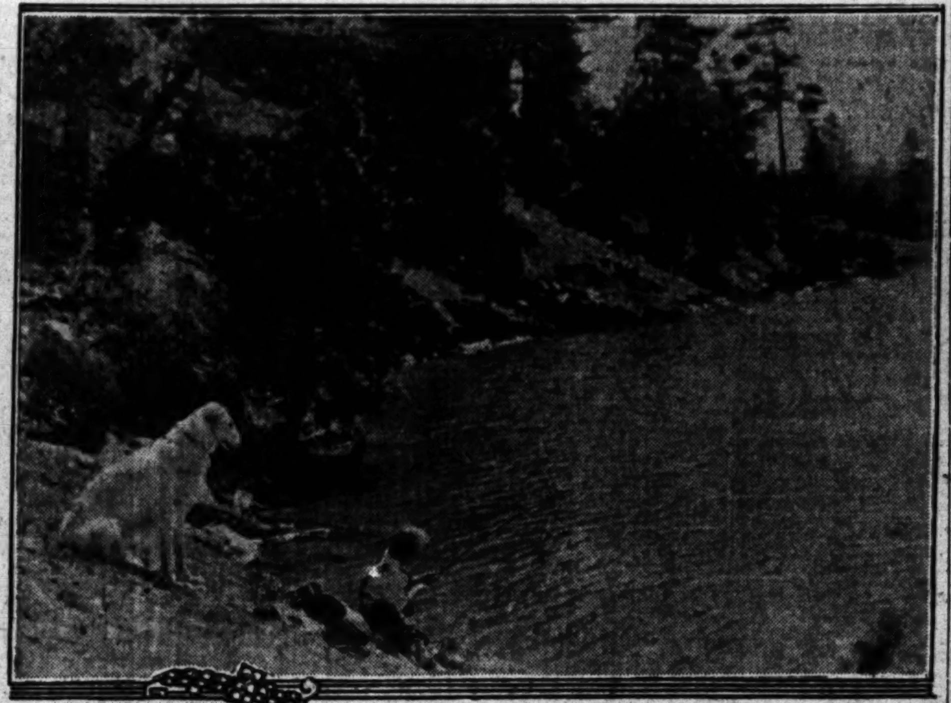
TEAMING UP ON THE WILY TROUT

Both the youthful Izaak Walton and his wolfhound companion appear confident that it won't be long now until they have enough of the speckled beauties to provide a regular vacation feed. This scene was taken on the shores of Lake Arrowhead, one of the most popular of Southern California resorts for vacationists.



AUTO VACATIONS LEAD THE LIST

courage the vacation idea. Perhaps they have learned that the employee taking one usually is glad to get his sun-burned nose back on the grindstone for another long run. Anyhow, the vacation has become a highly motorized institution.

Southern Californians are in a unique position when vacation time rolls around. They find themselves in the heart of the most famous recreation center of the universe. They already are in the place where hundreds of thousands trek annually from all parts of the country to see and enjoy. If they already are in vacation land, what's to do about it?

SEE CALIFORNIA FIRST

The answer is in adapting the slogan "See America First" to See California First.

A recent question box review indicated that few residents of Southern California had much knowledge of their home State's vacation possibilities. Only a small percentage knew that within its borders are four of the national parks of the nation Neither did the vast majority know that there are five national monuments or nineteen national forests containing nearly 20,000,000 acres of scenery. And they didn't know that the highest mountain peak in the United States is right in their own back yard, as is the lowest point on the continent. Also there is the dryest point in the country as well as the wettest spot. Most of them did know, however, that their State could boast of the finest system of highways in the world, the best summer season for adventuring in the open and that resorts of all sorts were to be found in the mountains and at the seashore in variety enough to please all tastes.

Briefly summed up, the vacationist in Southern California has to go a lesser distance to see more attractive country than any of his sisters or his cousins or his aunts in any other State. Within a few hours he may battle the ocean waves in his B V X's or wish that his fur-lined sleeping bag was thicker as he sinks into slumber on the side of a lofty mountain peak. He can get to the desert or stop among the most intensively cultivated land in the world. He can find any sort of temperature he wants, from cracking the ice for his morning bath to the dry hot air of the rainless belts. He may strut his tuxedo for dinner and dance the night away at numerous resorts of fashion, or he may lose himself and party in the fastnesses of the primeval forest. He may fish for fingerling trout or 200-pound "tigers of the sea." Almost everything to be found anywhere for recreation is within reach of the old family bus, even though it may be of ancient vintage and a bit creaky in the joints.

TRIPS SHOULD BE PLANNED

While it is true that the vacation possibilities are practically without limit and are varied enough to meet every desire, it is also true that amateur vacationists often fail to get 100 per cent fun out of the trip they have anticipated so gleefully. Although it may sound brutal to say so, that is their own fault, because they let enthusiasm and optimism set aside good judgment. The one thing they should do first of all, they fail to do, with results that not only are discomforting but frequently disastrous. This particular things is to plan carefully the trip before the start is made.

With the vast field of readily available information regarding roads, resorts, camping grounds, fishing, riding, hiking, golf and the many other features entering into an outing, the recreating motorist is foolish not to avail himself of the latest information on highway conditions, including distances, detours, character of roads, etc. before beginning the trip This is one preparatory move that is constantly urged on the members of the Automobile Club of Southern California, which in its touring bureau has on hand the latest information needed by the motorist. The bureau is open day and night, Sundays and holidays, because this information is considered of such great value to the motor traveler. Experiences of the past all tend to show that proper preparation means half the pleasure of the trip.

The novice in touring also should guard against overloading the car by taking unnecessary equipment which probably will be needed seldom if at all. While following advice is about the last thing the average citizen will do, it is certainly good business to accept suggestions from experienced campers, as this will save a lot of unnecessary annoyance.

There is little chance of inconvenience or discomfort for the recreation-seeking motorist in this section because of the business-like preparations that have been made in every corner of the State for serving motoring parties. Even the classiest hotels today advertise that motoring parties will be welcomed as they are—dust, sport clothes and all. In addition to the regular hotels, wayside inns, auto camps, resorts with cabins, and camping grounds are to be found in every direction. The motorist has but to make a choice to suit his taste. One reason for planning the trip ahead is to select the stopping places that meet the requirements of the individual.

Enthusiasm may urge that the whole show be seen in one trip. To cover all the roads in Southern California it is necessary to travel 300 miles a day for 100 days, so it becomes obvious that trying to do the job in a single vacation trip is out of the question. In recreation seeking, the tendency always is to attempt more than can be accomplished, so this is another point on which the advice of the experienced in touring should be accepted.

Everything considered, motorists of Southern California have superlative motor vacation possibilities within their easy reach. Ocean, mountain, desert, canyon or forest—all are there and for the next few months some 200,000 cars from this section will be scurrying in all directions with half a million residents pleasure bent, to return poorer by a few dollars but infinitely richer in health and knowledge of the "greatest State of all."

WATCH THE PINK SECTION

The Times this year has inaugurated a contest designed to do two things—reveal new and attractive vacation trips and offer the opportunity for some of its readers to pay or partially pay for the vacation by winning a cash prize. This is the Vacation-Tour Contest which closed last night. The prize winners in the contest are to be announced in next Sunday's automobile section.

Judges this week are going over the submitted plans and choosing those plans which will win The Times cash prize of $100, $50 and $25 as first, second and third prizes. In addition they will award the merchandise prizes which are as follows: One India cord tire, offered by Nelson & Price, Inc.; set Hexdees shock absorbers, offered by Hexdees Sales and Service and Joe Neville; S. & M. Oval-Lite, offered by the S. & M. Lamp Company; retread tire offered by Jones & Keil Service Stations of Pasadena; $10 gasoline scrip book, offered by the Union Oil Company; Autopulse Magnetic Fuel Pump, offered by J. F. Dixon, and a Snuggle Buggy and Lazy Back chair, offered by the Western Auto Supply Company.

Ocean Fishing Draws Anglers to Deep Water

Deep-sea anglers are reporting the Southern California coast as never better in the variety and quantity of its fish. Bass, halibut, barracuda and yellowtail are daily falling victims to the fisherman's hook off the coasts of Long Beach and Santa Monica.

Fast deep-sea fishing boats, splendidly equipped, and barges, anchored at favorable off-shore spots, are available every day in the year for those who relish this sport. Experienced deep-sea fishermen man the boats, which offer live bait and equipment at moderate rates. Most of them are also equipped with lunch counters to satisfy the appetite of anglers who develop that feeling after pulling in a few heavy ones.

Three Wells Flowing Hot Water Lighten Burden of Brockway Hotel Janitor

Three large wells flowing hot water throughout the year are to be found at the Brockway Hotel on the shore of Lake Tahoe.

One of the wells flows 450 gallons of hot water per minute, which is utilized in a large outdoor swimming pool at that popular resort.

The hot water from another is fed into a pool which has been built into the lake, so constructed that the lake water can seep through into the pool, offering a tempered water, excellent for swimming.

The Brockway Resort comprises a main hotel building, containing a lobby and bedrooms; a casino building, included in which are the dining room, ballroom, buffet and kitchen; twenty-five hotel cottages of from two to twelve rooms each, all with private baths, and a group of hotel tent houses.

Brockway is operated on the American plan and is open from May 28 to September 15 of each year.

H. O. Comstock, manager of Brockway, was born in Carson City, Nev., and has spent every summer of his life to date at Lake Tahoe, and is exceptionally familiar with that vacation country.

motoring over the Pacific Highway, the longest paved stretch in the world, tasting the surf pleasures of the shore from San Diego to Vancouver, Can. Yellowstone National Park will be visited by many. The Redwood Highway through the forests of giant trees is a popular route to northern vacation grounds. Recreationists are again finding the call of Yosemite irresistible. Lake Tahoe, Mono Lake and surrounding territory, Monterrey and the bays of Central California are drawing thousands.

The great majority of Southern Californians, however, will vacation in their own home playgrounds. They have here the finest of bathing beaches, alpine lakes for boating, fishing and outdoor recreation, many fine resorts on the mountain tops and in marvelously cool canyons, in picturesque settings of waterfalls and rushing streams, with trout in the brooks, hiking, swimming, tennis, golf and horseback riding among the available pleasures. Pleasant beach resorts line the Pacific shore, and a dozen great mountain regions in Southern California from the San Diego ranges to the High Sierras offer surpassing opportunities to enjoy a summer vacation.

NEW EQUIPMENT FOR CATALINA COTTAGES

The Sunset Apartments, situated in Avalon on the ocean front, opposite the band stand, has just been recently repapered and repainted, as announced by J. Mathewson, owner and manager, who also owns and conducts Mathewson Cottages at Catalina.

Mr. Mathewson will shortly replace all beds and springs in the Mathewson cottages with new equipment of that kind. The cottages are located on Whitley avenue, one block from the ocean front.

ARROWHEAD HAS FINE LOCATION

Mile-High Resort Reached by Three Roads

Mountains and Lake Furnish Unlimited Sport

Many New Improvements Made for Vacationists

Lake Arrowhead lies at an altitude of 5125 feet in the National Forest Reserve in the San Bernardino Mountains, twenty-two and one-half miles from San Bernardino and eighty-four miles from Los Angeles. Three broad safe roads give easy access through different sections of the mountains and the route through Hesperia is open every day of the year.

Lake Arrowhead has an area of 775 acres and is two and one-half miles long with a total shore line of fourteen miles. It is an artificial body of water formed by the construction of a dam 660 feet long and considered by engineering experts as one of the most technically perfect earth-filled dams in the world. Domestic water is obtained from the lake at depths of more than 100 feet, is absolutely pure, healthful, cool and passes a very high test of purity. Rates on water, power and other public conveniences are on a par with those in effect in metropolitan districts and mainly under the jurisdiction of the Railroad Commission of the State of California.

Play at Lake Arrowhead. It is the outstanding mountain and recreation spot in Southern California today. Sports include golfing, boating, fishing, swimming, hunting, tennis, dancing, horseback riding, hand ball, hiking, up-to-date motion-picture theater furnishing the latest in screen productions and in the winter has its winter sports.

Lake Arrowhead has its Norman English village with complete and up-to-date shops, including art shop, sport shop, beauty shop, delicatessen, grocery and meat shop, tea room, cafeteria, Arrowhead Lake Company office, garage and auto accessory store, gas and service station, telephone and telegraph and postoffice. A new $40,000 complete grammar school. Also a new fish hatchery which has a capacity of over 1,000,000 trout annually.

During the last five years there has been spent at Lake Arrowhead approximately $3,500,000 on improvements, including its Norman English village, which was patterned after a village in Northern France, the Lake Arrowhead Lodge, the country club, a nine-hole golf course, with grass greens and fairways and its lake edge road which encircles the lake—a drive of about fourteen and one-half miles. Over 200 private houses have been erected, costing approximately $1,250,000.

During the summer the population of Lake Arrowhead reaches as high as 5000 people, and it is estimated that approximately 125,000 people visit the lake each year.

Among the organizations at Lake Arrowhead are the Women's Club, the Lake Arrowhead Chamber of Commerce, Bridge Club, Gun Club, Lake Arrowhead Golf Club, a very elaborate auto park with a capacity of 1000 cars, an outdoor grill and three complete auto camps.

Lake Arrowhead is playing a very important part in the life, pleasure and social history of Southern California. The beauty of the mountains, the lake and the pines make a peculiar appeal to something within you when you visit Lake Arrowhead.

NATIONAL CAMP IN SHAPE FOR SEASON

National Camp comprises fourteen cottages and eight tents, some completely furnished for housekeeping, and others for sleeping only.

Mrs. T. W. Winkleby is the manager of that resort.

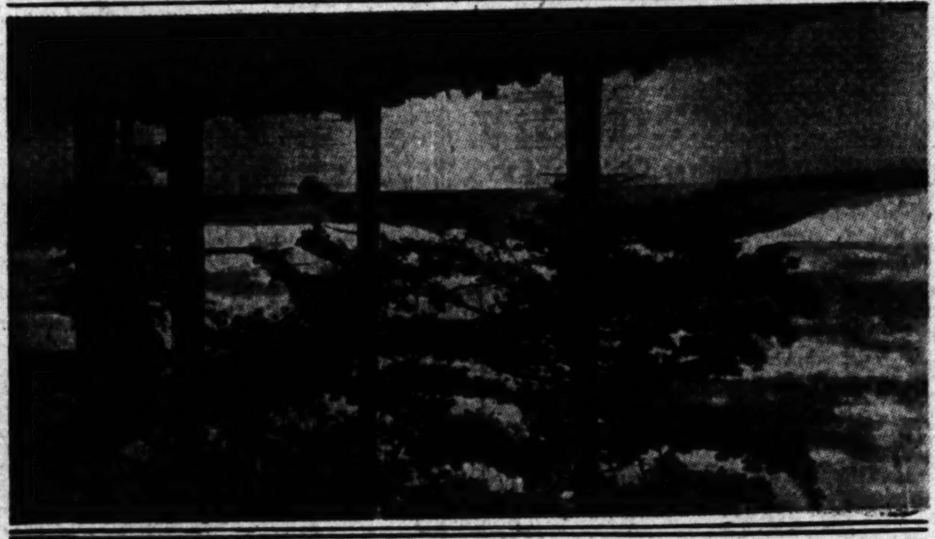
MOTHER NATURE AT HER BEST

Surrounded by a fringe of Pines, Big Bear Lake is one of the prettiest bodies of water in Southern California. The lake lies nestled in a valley deep in the San Bernardino Mountains and has a history that dates back to the early settlement of California. The Big Bear Valley was first visited in the early gold rush days, when prospectors made the valley a center of their operations.



BIG BEAR HAS LONG HISTORY

Famous Valley First Opened by Prospectors

Influx Developed Lake Into Vacation Paradise

All-Year Sports Bring More People Annually

Poised high in the San Bernardino Mountains in Southern California, between the fertile orange and lemon groves of the San Bernardino Valley and the blazing sands of the Mojave Desert, Big Bear Valley looks out of its windows of dreamland across the world below. It has neither an equal nor a superior. It stands alone, supreme—a valley of the clouds, a cloistered and emerald-girdled sanctuary of nature, first carved in prehistoric days when the universe was being shifted and rearranged by the stupendous forces of creation.

The great problem facing Big Bear Valley in all of its early days was how to reach it. Nine months of the year it was a paradise. In the spring, summer and fall the ground was bright with green tints, shrubbery and underbrush, and the plumed foliage of the pines reflected back these colors below. Three months in most years snow can be counted upon, and then the ground was hidden under wide drifts of snow of purest white. Some months, of course, were comparatively open in exceptionally mild winters, but there was no dependence to be placed on open weather during December, January and February.

The crest road, which had been built during the influx of miners into Holcomb Valley, was finally completed to Big Bear Valley in the early eighties. It made, with the Victorville route, two ways available for entering and leaving the valley. But the roads at best were often rough. Four and six-horse teams were necessarily pressed into service to fetch in the freight, and the heaviest loads, especially machinery, were sometimes transported by means of ox teams. More and more interest was being taken in the locality and in the commencement of 1898 and 1899 a number of the more public-spirited progressive citizens of San Bernardino county began to discuss the feasibility of still another highway into the county. The movement they started grew rapidly, and engineers were called to determine whether it was possible to construct a road over the mountains into Big Bear Valley by the way of Mill Creek. Money was subscribed to meet the preliminary needs, and a survey was finally completed on a tentative plan.

Another road to Big Bear Lake is via San Bernardino over the City Creek Road, and the Deep Creek cut-off across the dam, a road of easy grades on which cars can pass at any place. The average driving time from San Bernardino to Big Bear Lake is two hours and one-half. The Victorville road, via Cajon Pass and across the Mojave Desert, is now a wonderland of flowers. It leads over the Cushingbury and Johnson grades which were rebuilt last winter. The aim of the future will be to improve these roads, and to keep them in first-class condition for the tide of travel into the valley, which is steadily and constantly increasing. No recreation center in the State has shown such phenomenal advancement in a short time as has Big Bear Valley. Today there are eighty-seven camps and over 4800 private summer homes.

The incoming of summer residents into this happy valley grows in volume every year, and it will not be long before every acre available for building in Big Bear Valley will be occupied. No more restful or advantageous place for a summer home could be imagined. From June to August there is an average of from 12,000 to 15,000 people in Big Bear Valley, and each year finds their numbers increased. Five years from now it is confidently predicted there will be 25,000 people in the valley during that same period, and the number of private homes is sure to increase, until practically all the available space is occupied.

Big Bear Valley has found itself suddenly placed in the limelight as the playground of Southern California almost before it was quite ready to accommodate the crowds which came pouring in to enjoy its attractions. Work had to be done to entertain and take care of these visitors. Electric lights, paved streets, ice plants and other modern conveniences are now available.

A large motor launch capable of holding 100 passengers, and smaller launches, rowboats, canoes and motor boats are to be had at various boat landings. An artistically built moving-picture theater has been erected and a commodious and up-to-date dancing pavillion is open for the young people in the evenings. Garages and supply stations, stores with all sorts of supplies for those who rent housekeeping cabins, ice cream and refreshment shops, swings, croquet and tennis grounds, saddle horses for riding trips, fishing tackle and guns and ammunition for hire or sale, kodak developing, automobile repairs, all show the pains and care taken to meet all possible necessities and requirements. There are taverns and hotels operated on the American and European plans, and numerous resorts and camps where cabins are rented to those who wish to do their own cooking. Some of these cabins are neatly but plainly furnished, and others are fitted out with about all the luxuries to be found in a well-appointed apartment.

In time to come there will be considerable flying done in Big Bear Valley. A landing place has already been leased and set aside. A nine-hole golf course is still another attraction.

Winter sports at Big Bear Lake offer great fun each year. Ice skating, hockey, ice boat, tobogganing, snowshoeing, ski-jumping and many others are some of the winter sports experienced at the lake. A big inclosed rink will be built some day for the skaters, and hockey players, and ski-jumpers, speed races, and figure skating contests are among some of the allurements which the winter months will hold. Winter in the mountains, only a few hours away from the orange groves and rose-embowered homes of Southern California, is a novelty which appeals to even the most blase.

To those who are best acquainted with the delights and allurements of life in the mountains, no months in the year hold such a keen fascination as September and October. For instance, a most enjoyable trip is to go past Baldwin Lake and through the Cactus Flat to the Rose Mine, or to drive down Hippolyte Canyon, or through Fawn Skin Cieneja. Other trips include horseback rides through Van Duzen Canyon and Green Lead up to Bluff Lake and Cieneja Seco. Gold Mountain is also a picturesque and interesting spot, and is reached either by motor or horseback, while Arastra Siberia and many other creeks are well worth visiting.

Sixty-eight hundred feet above sea level, often termed the valley in the clouds, Big Bear is the mecca whither the feet of many city pilgrims turn, the source of those who have wearied of the dust and din of the crowded thoroughfares. The three peaks, San Gorgonio or "Grayback," 11,485 feet in height, and San Bernardino Mountain and Sugar Loaf Peak, each over 10,000 feet high, loom above the ranges surrounding Big Bear Valley, grim sentinels of the uncounted centuries. Over these giants the clouds float and hover, changing forms from ships full rigged with snowy sails to turreted castles, sculptured by winds, with moat and bridge and dungeon keep, the medieval fortresses of fancy, soon to fade into mist and nothingness.

In 1909 the first two automobiles, a Packard and a Thomas, were brought into Big Bear Valley, and a little later two Ford cars. These four years were the beginning of an influx of motors cars which now pour into the valley continuously for at least nine months in the year by the thousands.

High Sierras Popular With Vacationists

The travel into the High Sierras from Cowan Station on the south to Mono Lake on north and on to Lake Tahoe, and the Yosemite unquestionably is increasing very materially each year.

With the better roads of today a few hundred miles means practically nothing to the average vacationist, which brings the previously called distant resorts and camps almost to one's back door.

Speeding acros sthe Mojave Desert and through Red Rock Canyon, the first point to be reached, from where it is possible to pack in to the higher elevations and to fishermen's paradise, is Cowan Station. The road leads northward from there to Olancha, Lone Pine, Independence, Big Pine, Bishop, Mono Lake and to Lake Tahoe or the Yosemite. At all of these points it is possible to trek into the High Sierras, securing the services of any of the many reliable fishing and hunting guides to be found in the Owens Valley. These mountain men maintain stables of their own of horses accustomed and trained to the mountain trails and meadows.

One of the chief lures of the High Sierras country is the golden trout, the season for which opens on the 30th inst.

That member of the finny tribe is exceptionally elusive, which adds zest to the trip of the High Sierra fisherman.

Some of the excellent resorts to be found in that country are Boulder Lodge at June Lake, Andrews Camp, Lake Sabrina Raymers Camp at Convict Lake and Parchers Camp, all on Bishop Creek, out of Bishop, Tamarack Lodge at Twin Lakes, Mammoth Camp at Mammoth, Mono Inn at Mono Lake and Coso Hot Springs at Little Lake.

Several desirable stopping places on the main highway, just adjacent to this mountain wonderland, are the Dow Hotel in Lone Pine, the Winnedumah Hotel in Independence, Tom's Place just above Bishop, and last but not least the Keough Hot Mineral Springs just south of Bishop.

Barney Sears of Olancha, Jim Cowan of Coso Junction, R. H. Logan of Big Pine, Mt. Whitney pack trains of Lone Pine, and the High Sierra pack trains of Independence, are packers and guides who maintain competent pack-train service into the High Sierras.

ANDREWS CAMP ROAD IN GOOD CONDITION

Andrews Camp, situated at an elevation of 8100 feet, in the High Sierras on Bishop Creek, sixteen miles from Bishop, opened a short while ago for the summer seasop.

The road leading to that camp is in good condition. Excellent fishing and good hunting are to be had nearby. Andrews Camp is open from May 1 to October 1 each year.

FRENCH LAUNCH OCEAN STEAMER

Ile De France Takes Place With Giant Liners

Latest Equipment Featured on Atlantic Craft

Schedule Maiden Voyage from New York in July

For some years now, the debate as to whether or not the giant ocean grayhound has reached the limit in size, has waxed furious. The advocates of even larger ships than the largest so far built have numbered in their ranks many experienced naval architects, ship owners and operators, and maritime executives generally, while others equally well informed and experienced have declared themselves as favoring steamers of 35,000 to 40,000 tons.

With the advent of the French line's new 41,000-ton flagship Ile De France, the rivalry for splendor and elegance of decoration should be halted for some years to come, since it is difficult to conceive of a more perfectly gorgeous artistic achievement than this latest and largest unit of France's merchant marine.

Built at St. Nazaire, France, in the great Penhoet ship yards, certain individual distinctive features in themselves take the Ile De France out of the class of being "just another big boat." Such features as a permanent chapel seating eighty worshippers, several private dining-rooms for the use of passengers who wish to give intimate little dinner parties, a children's gymnasium boasting a merry-go-round, in addition to the usual playroom found on the big French liners, and a shooting gallery of fixed and moving targets are provided. Two extraordinary public rooms are the huge grand salon and the grand dining salon, the latter being the largest dining salon ever built on any steamer.

A grand foyer four decks high, around which, on its lower deck, are grouped a fascinating shop—a branch of the Grands Magasins du Louvre of Paris, beauty parlor and barber shop, tobacconist, candy shop and other similar conveniences; a sun deck on which all obstructions have been eliminated, leaving, between the funnels, clear stretches of deck space large enough for regulation-size tennis courts, and a special hold, accommodating sixty cars, for the transportation of unboxed automobiles of passengers are all a part of this ocean grayhound.

The Ile De France is the world's sixth largest vessel—790 feet in length—ninety-eight and one-half foot bear, thirty-one and one-half foot draft, whose turbines develop 2500 horsepower—and twenty-three knots per hour. Three passenger elevators afford communication between decks. It carries 1200 passengers, first, second and third-class, and special tourist third cabin. Two orchestras of conservatory musicians are maintained for dancing and concerts.

The maiden voyage of the Ile De France will be started from New York to Plymouth and Havre on July 2. Howard H. Adams is the Los Angeles representative of the French line.

WOMAN MAKES GOOD IN HOTEL BUSINESS

The hosts of friends of Mrs. O. E. Morris, not only in San Francisco, but all over the country, who remember her pleasantly during the twelve years in which she owned and operated the Hotel Cecil in San Francisco, will be delighted to learn that she is presiding in the same genial manner over one of the finest family hotels in Los Angeles, the Darby, located at the corner of West Adams and Grand, which she purchased about four years ago.

The success of Mrs. Morris in the hotel line demonstrates that some women are naturally adapted for that exacting business. Thirty-four years spent in entertaining the traveling public have not dimmed in the slightest measure her enthusiasm, with the result that she is today the same charming hostess that she was in years gone by, when the Cecil, under her ownership, was one of the most popular hosteiries in California.

ANGLERS HOOK GAME FISH IN POWERBOATS

Fully equipped power launches seating two persons are available to fishermen who desire game fishing at Avalon, Catalina Island, the year around.

Tuna, yellowtail, swordfish, white sea bass, albicore and bonita all offer thrills to the sportsman during their respective "running seasons."

Such boatmen as J. C. Carlton; L. De Roude; J. Edmundson; Sam Goulding; Tad Gray, Yellowtail John, Chet Markham, Parker Pence and Harry Warner offer launches at Avalon of the kind needed to hunt the game fish to be found in Southern California waters.

HI-LE, HI-LO, HIGH UP ON MT. LOWE

PLAN PAGEANT OF RAILROADS

Transportation World's Fair for Baltimore Planned

Two-Week Exposition to be Opened September 24

Coolidge Expected to Attend Inaugural Ceremonies

A world's fair in transportation, or what is believed will be the largest and most complete outdoor historic railroad pageant ever displayed, will be the chief attraction of the Baltimore and Ohio's two-week celebration at Baltimore, September 24 to October 8, next. This will be the principal function of the year in connection with the Baltimore and Ohio centenary.

President Coolidge is expected to be present on opening day. Everybody is invited and there will be no admission charge.

The centenary grounds will be located on the company's property in the southwestern outskirts of the city at a point called Halethorpe, close by the railroad and the Baltimore-Washington highway. Work is progressing on the 1000 acres which will be the site of the exposition. Plans include a loop track over a mile long, nearly two miles of other track and a grand stand seating 12,000 persons. Within the twenty-five-acre loop space, various replicas of buildings and railroad structures will be erected, representing century-old associations, among which will be one of Mt. Clare Station, the oldest in the world.

The hall of transportation will house many exhibits showing the development of rails and ties, not only from the Baltimore and Ohio's earliest used, but going back to those on the tramways of England in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. The development of many railroad appliances, notably the air brake and the signal, also will be displayed in careful detail. There will be shown reproductions and models of the earliest European locomotives, equipment and conveyances, even to the vehicle in use in the days of the Pharoahs. The motor vehicle, especially as it is correlated with the railroad, will have its proper place in the show.

Special platforms will be provided for those arriving and departing by train or automobile, contiguous to a subway passing under the railroad so that no one will have to cross tracks either going or coming from the exposition grounds. Parking space for 3000 automobiles will be available.

In the transportation expositions of the 1876 centennial, the World's Fair at Chicago in 1893 and the St. Louis Fair of 1903, the Baltimore and Ohio took a prominent part, but these were held indoors and all the various historical types of locomotives were not in motion. By the use of the loop track for the passage of the pageant in the open, at a season of the year when the weather is generally favorable for outdoor affairs at Baltimore, an opportunity is afforded to display a mobile and articulate panorama three miles long, as it is planned to have many units of the pageant move under their own power.

Flies Popular With Anglers at Trout Club

Fly fishing seems to be all the rage at the Rainbow Angling Club this time of year, it is learned from the outing information bureau at the B. H. Dyas Company. Many of the fishermen are catching limits using flies exclusively.

The club's membership roll continues to grow at a rapid rate. Some of the new members are Stratton Harmon, A. O. Carl, T. B. Hatten, D. L. Imus.

A cooling system was recently installed on the large porch at the upper end of the stream and is working successfully on warm days. Fishermen who have rested up on the porch declare they get the same effect as though a rainstorm had broken.

Circus men have found out that they make about $20 a day by absent-minded excited persons leaving the ticket booth without waiting for their change.

BILTMORE GALLERY PRAISED

Oil Paintings of Garden Win Enthusiasm from Art Lovers

Lovers of art are finding much to enthuse over when visiting the splendid collection of oil paintings in the Galleria of the Biltmore. Particularly is this true of Colin Campbell Coper's beautiful conception of the gardens of the Samarkand, in Santa Barbara, one of California's loveliest hosteiries.

To one who has been a guest at that famous hotel, the effect is strikingly real. At this time of the year the gardens are at their best, and, according to Charles Bedell Harvey, manager of the Samarkand, they are planning a strong attraction to guests.

Noteworthy among the guests of the Samarkand at this time is Mr. Hervey's nephew, Harry Hervey, the novelist and poet.

Newport Beach Expects Heavy Vacation Rush

With work started on the $500,000 improvements to the jetties at the entrance to Newport Harbor, Newport and Balboa beaches are expecting their heaviest tourist and travel season. This section, including Newport, Balboa, Balboa Island and Corona del Mar, all within the city of Newport Beach is gradually becoming known as Newport Harbor, owing to the importance of the harbor, one of the few good natural harbor sites on the California coast.

According to the Newport Harbor Chamber of Commerce, which plans a big season for Newport Harbor, this is the only beach community in Southern California which offers a long stretch of sandy ocean beach and at the same time a fine, protected inland bay. It is the home of many yacht and aquatic organizations, and the Chamber of Commerce and other organization hope to make it as fine a commercial harbor ni a few years as it now is a port for pleasure craft.

The present work on the jetties has shown the faith of the people of the city in the harbor and in themselves, it is pointed out by Chamber of Commerce officials, and will bring about industrial development and numerous other improvements which will lift the community toward the "big city" class.

ROBBINS TAKES OVER FOREST HOME CLUB

Announcement is made by Henry Robbins, owner of the Forest Home Angling Club at Forest Home, that the club and grounds are again under the management of himself and son, Grant Robbins.

Mr. Robbins conducts the Forest Home Angling Club in a manner which permits anyone to fish on the grounds one time. Memberships are now available in that organization.

AVALON DRAWS VACATIONISTS

Magic Isle Ready to Greet Season Visitors

Land and Sea Sports Offered to Pleasure-bound

Wrigley Liners Give Speedy Channel Service

It is flying-fish time at Catalina, the play isle of the Pacific! Tuna, swordfish and yellowtail are biting.

The sparkling waters of Avalon Bay, smooth as a mirror, and clear as crystal, invite for a swim.

There is dancing and music and the swish of speed boats as they flash through silvery spray; there is laughter and song along the boardwalk of Catalina's undulating shore.

Two palatial $1,000,000 excursion vessels, the S.S. Catalina and the S.S. Avalon, daily bring their throngs of vacationists to this island of romance, play and rest.

ONE-FLOOR HOTEL

At the dock at Avalon, the picturesque little island city, gay with fluttering banners and bunting, await a long line of the season's early arrivals, enthusiastically greeting friends as they file down the human aisle, extending to Island Villa and Island Villa Park, the world's largest one-floor hotel. This unique hostelry comprises 1250 one-room bungalettes operated on the European plan with maid service. Each is daintily furnished and combines the comforts of a hotel room and the privacy of a bungalow. Gay Japanese lanterns, illuminated at night, hanging fern and potted palms, convert the aisles of this great outdoor hotel into a delightful conservatory of indescribable charm.

Around Sugar Loaf, nestling in lovely Descanso Canyon, is the beautiful Hotel St. Catherine, the rendezvous of the Southland's social elite and mecca for the world's men and women of renown; celebrities in the realm om letters, arts and science, kings of finance and empire builders who come to this Utopia of a nerve-wearying age to rest and gather strength and inspiration for still greater works.

Care-free informality is the spirit of Catalina and King Sport is host. No artificial entertainment, no hurdy-gurdy concessions to spoil the charm of nature's beauty.

Catalina offers to the vacationist the opportunity for the exploration of two worlds—that of land and sea. One of the best known of Catalina's many unique attractions and one which no visitor to California should miss, and certainly not a native Californian, is a view of the wonderful submarine gardens through the "sea windows" of the glass-bottom power boats. Here are shell-incrusted rocks, fishes—red, green and gold—great trees of kelp with long branches waving in the gentle currents of the sea; luxuriant foliage, beautiful groves and gardens. A lecturer on board the boat explains what you see in King Neptune's realm and a deep-sea diver gives an exhibition beneath the glass of the boat.

FLOOD THE SEA

At night the glass-bottom boats are equipped with pontoons and the depths of the sea flooded with the rays from electric lights of several thousand candle power. These bring forth many strange creatures of the sea seldom revealed to the human eye in their native habitat, crawfish, eels and many other forms of sea life.

A never-to-be-forgotten sight is the dance of the flying fish. The speed launch Blanche W, equipped with a powerful searchlight, makes nightly excursion cruises along Catalina's shores. Myriads of scintillating winged fish, like sheets of silver, rise to the surface of the sea in the path of the light, darting and cavorting with lightning speed hither and yon. On the rugged cliffs overhanging the sea, the searchlight picks out wild mountain goats grazing at night.

At the Greek open-air amphitheater Porter's famous Marine Band is playing nightly concerts for the thirty-first consecutive season. An audience of several thousand persons throng the tiers of the theater to enjoy the concert and the view of Avalon Bay with its fleet of pleasure craft, a light on each mast and prow rivaling the starry sky overhead.

Every night except Sunday there is dancing at Sugar Loaf Casino and in the big pavilion. Often a thousand couples are on the floor.

Lovers of golf find one of the sportiest nine-hole courses in the West at the Catalina Country Club. From every green the player is afforded a magnificent view of Avalon Bay. The clubhouse is a cozy structure with restful verandas and lounge room, lockers and showers.

SAFE FOR KIDDIES

In all the world there is no safer beach than at Catalina and no safer place for kiddies to play. There is no surf or undertow. The sun is at the back of the bather, no afternoon glare hurts the eyes. The building of sand castles attracts the little ones all the day, along the beach front. For older children who feel the need of making up credits or lessons during the vacation period, a summer school is maintained at the Catalina High School building under supervision of a staff of competent instructors. School work and vacation time may be combined at Catalina by the ambitious student. For the child who needs recreation, a summer health school is conducted under the auspices of the Los Angeles County Public Health Association, in a unit of the high school building. Here supervised rest and play are given the kiddies to put them in shape for next winter's school work.

Big-game fishing is a sport that attracts hundreds of sport anglers to Catalina each year. Nowhere is caught such a variety of fighting game fish as here, or are such remarkable catches recorded. A fleet of power launches in charge of experienced boatmen, with full supplies of bait and tackle and a knowledge of the best fishing water, makes the sport easy to enjoy. Where is there a greater thrill than the landing of a fighting yellowtail, a leaping tuna or a sworded marlin or broadbill.

The leaping tuna weighing from eighty to 300 pounds and more, the hardest-fighting fish known, is caught with rod and reel only in Catalina waters—season, May to October; the swordfish weighing from 100 to 500 pounds is a spectacular fighter—season from June until December; giant black bass weighing from 100 to 400 pounds; yellowtail ranging in weight from fifteen to sixty pounds and albacore from twenty-five to seventy pounds. White bass and mackerel are taken from April to December and barracuda, rock bass, sheepshead, white fish and many other smaller fish all the year round.

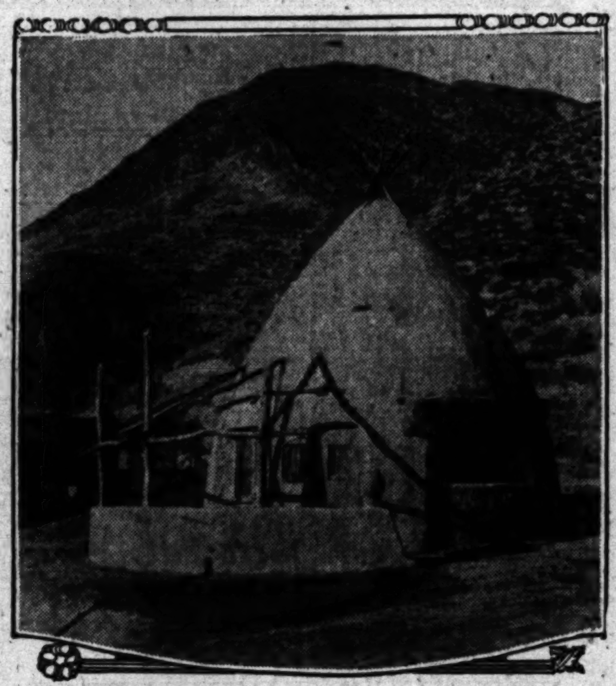
Architectural ideas, used by Southland Indians years ago, were used in building the new Soboba Mineral Hot Springs Hotel at San Jacinto. Ten Indian lodges were built similar in construction to the Indian lodges of yore. The new structures, however, incorportae the latest wrinkles in confort.



Y.W.C.A. Group Choose Camps Near Monterey

Asilomar-by-the-Sea, in Monterey county, is the site of the National Y.W.C.A. conference and vacation grounds, a spot chosen not only because of its general loveliness and convenience for such a purpose, but also because of its coolness during the months of August and September. Vacation days are always ideal with the seashore close at hand.

Many important conferences have been scheduled to take place at Asilomar throughout the summer, but, regardless of these, there is plenty of room for guests off and on throughout July and all of the time after August 8. A list of conferences scheduled for Asilomar is as follows: June 25 to July 5, Girl Reserve conference; July 5 to 10, Kappa Delta Sorority; July 11 to 20, Missionary Education Movement; July 20 to 30, Baptist Young People's assembly; July 20 to 30, Episcopal conference; August 1 to 8, Congregational conference; August 8 to 13, Lutheran Church conference; August 9 to 11, Freshman Y.M.C.A., University of California, and August 13 to 20, Y.W.C.A. Community conference.

NEW HOTELS BUILT ON DESERT ROUTES

G. W. Dow of Lone Pine and Independence owns and operates the Dow Hotel in Lone Pine and the Winnedumah Hotel in Independence. Both hostelries are new and modern throughout.

The Dow Hotel now comprises fifty four rooms and will be augmented in the fall by twenty additional rooms.

E. W. Wheelock of Los Angeles a short while ago purchased a copper plate eighteen inches by forty-four inches in size, which he recently donated to the Winnedumah Hotel to be permanently placed in that hotel building. The plate sets forth at length the interesting legend of Winnedumah, an Indian story, after which the hotel has been named.

Both hotels are open winter and summer. The Dow Hotel is a convenient stopping place for travelers en route to and from Death Valley.

ENLARGE MUNZ RANCH FOR SUMMER SEASON

A new addition is now under construction at Munz Ranch at Elizabeth Lake, which when completed about July 15 will contain a lounging-room, a dance floor and a pool-room.

Munz Ranch is situated fifty-nine miles from Los Angeles, via Bouquet Canyon, and is an ideal place to spend a quiet vacation. The elevation at the ranch is 3700 feet.

The ranch extends over 320 acres and adjoins Elizabeth Lake on the east and Lake Hughes on the west. Seventy-five of the 320 acres are covered with apple and pear trees. The table of the ranch is excellent and of the home style. Mrs. E. Munz manages that popular resort.

KEOUGH HOT SPRINGS RESORT IS ENLARGED

George L. Vonderheide, manager of Keough Radium Hot Springs, situated on the main highway, just this side of Bishop, has completed twelve cabins at the Springs, adding twenty-five rooms to his capacity in that popular resort.

A new dining-room has also just been built, the dance floor of the Springs has been enlarged and the entire vacation rendezvous has been repainted throughout.

Mr. Vonderheide reports also that the travel northward from Southern California has very materially increased each year he has been at Keough and he is looking forward to an exceptional year for 1927. His resort is open the year around.

GLACIER PARK SEASON OPENS

Montana Offers Unique Spot for Vacationists

New Hotel Makes New Virgin Area Accessible

Beauties of Nature at Best in Wild Country

With endless variety of recreation opportunities and facilities to tempt the vacationist who is seeking something different, and with additional de luxe accommodations practically complete, Glacier National Park, Mont., on the main line of the Great Northern Railway, opened on June 15 for its eighteenth official season.

The opening next month of the New Prince of Wales Hotel in Waterton Lakes National Park in the Canadian Rockies, north of and adjoining Glacier National Park, will at the some time make accessible a hitherto little known mountain area of marvelous beauty.

High on the shoulders of the Continental Divide in the Montana Rockies, Glacier National Park is the center of a region renowned for scenic grandeur. The park, covering an area of 1500 square miles, includes sixty living glaciers and 250 blue-water mountain lakes. Among these is found the famous Iceberg Lake, which has been termed aptly a vest-pocket polar sea, filled, as it is, with floating masses of jagged ice.

There are inviting valleys and tumbling streams in the V-shaped declivities formed by the scouring of ancient glaciers; there are mountain vistas that charm with their scenic spell. Everywhere timber areas range—forests of fragrant pine, spruce and balsam. There are wild flowers in profusion, 157 varieties to delight the visitors' eyes.

With the great choice of camping and recreational equipment available it is possible to see Glacier just as a person would choose. Mountain climbers and hikers take to the trails afoot; others select mounts from the 1500 saddle and pack horses for the tourists' service. The larger lakes are equipped with excursion boats and from fine stages the visitor may ride in luxury over the park roads.

Wielders of the brassy and spoon will find outlet for their inclinations on the fine golf course close by the Glacier Park Hotel, or on the splendid course maintained by the Canadian government in the vicinity of the new Prince of Wales Hotel at Waterton Lake.

Reports from Great Northern passenger representatives in the East and South concerning reservations and touring parties scheduled indicate big attendance, and officials are preparing for the heaviest tourist season in the park's history.

ATHLETIC BOYS TO CAMP AT CATALINA

Starting its fifth season, the Catalina Island Boys' Camp will open at Howland's Landing, Catalina Island, July 5, next, and extend to August 20. Willis O. Hunter and Elmer C. Henderson, directors of the camp, report a large enrollment for the 1927 outing.

The program of camp activities includes water sports, fishing, boating, baseball, tennis, archery, track and field, hiking and trips, basketball, boxing and wrestling, horseback riding, football, stunts, handball, woodwork, rifle range shooting, golf, nature study and woodcraft.

"SHORT-CUT" ROAD WARNINGS ISSUED

MIAMI (Ariz.) June 18. (Exclusive)—Automobile travelers in Arizona are strongly advised against taking "short-cut" roads, however well recommended by crossroad signs. Even though the main highway be longer, it usually is the faster, as well as taking the traveler through better settled sections, where assistance and supplies are to be had as desired. Especially on the western and southern desert areas, side roads should be avoided by all save the experienced, this with particular reference to summer travel.

PINECREST IS DRIVERS' HAVEN

Resort Offers Accommodations for Travelers' Needs

"Rim of the World" Trip is Great Pleasure Road

To Build Extension Through to Big Bear Lake

Pinecrest, the home of the Pinecrest Resort is the pivotal point on the Rim of the World drive. Roads lead out in all directions to places of interest and beauty. Roads are smooth, wide and safe.

TO IMPROVE ROAD

The California State Highway Commission is improving the Rim of the World drive on the top of the San Bernardino Mountains, so greatly each year that it has become the greatest traveled pleasure road in the West. Plans are now complete to rebuild that portion of the road from the Waterman Canyon at the foot of the switchbacks to the top of the mountain at Squirrel Inn, so that a sixty-foot boulevard with a 6 per cent grade will replace the present Rim of the World drive.

This new road will connect up at Squirrel Inn and Pinecrest with the eastern end of the road, built by the United States government Forest Service funds, through the Deep Creek cut-off to Big Bear Lake. When completed the Rim of the World drive will be a high-gear boulevard from San Bernardino all the way to Big Bear Lake.

TRAVELERS' HAVEN

Pinecrest Resort offers splendid accommodations for every need of the traveler, whether a stop for a meal, a vacation of length, an overnight visit or a point for little journeys to the lakes, trout streams or golf links.

For a place to give the family one and all a change, where the surroundings are restful, where everything is freshly clothed in nature's garb, go to Pinecrest, where the water and air are a tonic, where the little ones may grow strong and the mothers become refreshed; and peace and comfort from business strife come to the tired father. Mountain air brings vigor and courage and joy to the whole family.

Hiking, mountain climbing and horseback riding along with every outdoor sport takes on greater value when you are up above the clouds.

What a joy, too, are the dancing parties, the dancers seemingly never tire. The orchestra for this season at Pinecrest is perhaps the finest and jazziest of any year.

There are cabins and cottages where you can housekeep if you fancy, in your own way, with a fine market spot for table needs. There are hotel facilities if you prefer; or the dining hall at any time you tire of your cottage.

Summer and winter, all the year round these wonderful mountain log houses of charming Swiss effect are open. Huge fireplaces and fragrant pine logs for a cool night, how snug and cosy they are! Every trip to the mountains at Pinecrest means another. The Rim of the World is the Southern California mountains resort region.

MAMMOTH CAMP OPEN FOR BANNER SEASON

Mammoth Lakes Camp, located in the high Sierras in Mono county, is open for the season.

That popular resort suffered a loss by fire last winter, by which the main hotel building was completely destroyed. Ten housekeeping cabins and the store building were not touched by the fire and will be utilised this summer.

Rebuilding of the main hotel building is now going ahead and it is hoped by Summer Brothers, proprietors, that the new accommodations will soon be available.

Fishing is reported to be excellent in the Mammoth country. Mammoth Camp maintains a stable of 100 horses and makes a business of packing fishermen into any of the fifty wonderful trout lakes to be found in the vicinity.

ROAD TO COLD BROOK SHOWS IMPROVEMENT

Frank M. Headlee, owner of Cold Brook Camp, situated in the San Gabriel Canyon, a few miles north of Azusa, writes that the road to his resort is now in very good condition and greatly improved over last year, largely the result of much work on the part of the road crew in keeping it in good shape for travel by motorists. Fishing conditions are excellent and anglers are being attracted to the spot daily. Cold Brook Camp offers splendid housekeeping accommodations, which, with its convenient location, makes it an ideal vacation spot.

IMPROVEMENTS MAKE GRAY'S CAMP POPULAR

Improvements are now under way at Gray's Camp, on the north shore of Big Bear Lake, which are expected to make that resort one of the most attractive in the lake region.

The camp will be entirely remodeled and painted, according to "Cowboy" Tracy Morris and Warren W. McCready, who recently took over control of Gray's Camp. These changes will not affect guests of the resort in any way as the new management promises them freedom from any inconveniences while the work is progressing.

Gray's Camp is one of the oldest at Big Bear Lake, having been founded by Alexander Gray in 1907.

NEW APARTMENTS TO OPEN AT CATALINA

J. Albert of Alberts Court at Catalina is now adding several new apartments to his court, which will be ready for occupancy on July 1.

The new apartments are modern in every respect and will accommodate from three to six persons each.

Alberts Court is situated on Summer avenue in Avalon, one and one-half blocks from the beach. It consists of twelve bungalows, cottages and apartments in addition to the new apartments now building. All are completely equipped for housekeeping.

The court is open the year around.

HANNAGAN'S MEADOWS SCENE STATE PICNIC

CLIFTON (Ariz.) June 18. (Exclusive)—Arizona has an official, annual mountain picnic, held at Hannagan's Meadows, midway on the Coronado Trail highway, north of Clifton. This year the celebration was given formal opening today in an address by Gov. Richard C. Dillon of New Mexico. There were cowboy sports, a barbecue and interesting Indian ceremonials, with especial reference to the Apache devil dance, long continued at night, around big fires of pitch pine. With exception of the Indians, automobiles brought every one of the several thousand attendants, all on a road that has been in existence little more than a year, the way over high mountains, reaching nearly 10,000 feet of elevation and through many miles of tall pine timber yet untouched by the woodman's ax.

ARIZONA ROAD MAPS GOING OUT OF DATE

PHOENIX, June 18. (Exclusive)—Arizona roads have been changed so much within the past few years that the old maps often are found erroneous with regard to distances. So the State Highway Department has sent out a special engineer, well equipped with instruments of precision, to log 3000 miles of highway, both for length and condition. These data are to be incorporated in the next map compiled by the department.

MUST NOT DRIVE

PHOENIX, June 18.—(Exclusive)—Just as an indication of what may be known in the future, a Phoenix justice, in dropping $10 fines upon speedsters, is adding prohibition of driving for three days. This bar is considered more serious than the fine, especially when reference is made to a possible second offense.

LDEN TROUT NOT SO SMALL

ing Experts Hook Husky h of Rare Specie

od Lakes and Creek e of Finny Freaks

Waters Easy to Reach er Good Highways

The ... prevalent among aver- ... anglers, that the golden trout, ... only in high altitudes of the sierras, seldom grows to any great size or vigor has been exploded by experts of the art of Izaak Walton who, at the close of last year's season brought out specimens of this aristocratic branch of the trout family measuring from sixteen to twenty-seven inches and weighing from one to seven pounds.

That there may yet be some granddaddy of the golden trout of even larger size is indicated by the report from Barney Sears, veteran guide and packer of Olancha, Cal., that numerous outdoor experts of Los Angeles have already made known their intentions of visiting the Cottonwood Basin region this year with rod, reel, and fly.

Unusual as it may seem the golden trout are found nowhere else in the world but in the Sierra Nevadas of California. Their native habitat was Volcano Creek, according to piscatorial data, and were such curious discoveries at one time that Theodore Roosevelt made a special trip to this locality to study their habits. In later years they were transplanted into various lakes that lie at an altitude of 10,000 feet and more.

EASILY ACCESSIBLE

The first lakes, according to ideal fishing authorities to be stocked with these finny wonders were seven of the twenty-one lakes in the Cottonwood Basin in the shadow of Mt. Whitney. These ice bodies of water are still known as the Cottonwood Lakes and lie 11,000 feet above the sea. And while the average angler with salmon egg, helgamite, and fly can, without difficulty fill their creels, with fish running all the way from the minimum limit to twenty inches, it is the contention of the died-in-the-wool angler that the upper lakes of the picturesque Cottonwood chain are the homes of some mighty big granddaddies.

While 11,000 feet sounds like being away up in the air, it is an altitude at the Cottonwood Lakes which is so easily accessible that it can be reached in one day's journey from Los Angeles. After bowling over a splendid highway for five or six hours one reaches a turn off of the Owens Valley State Highway, eleven miles beyond Olancha, which takes one up picturesque Cottonwood Creek Canyon to Barney Sear's pack station at the end of the road.

SAFE, EASY TRAIL

Here one mounts a trail-trained horse, mule, burro or what you like, and follows a safe, easy, and shady trail up Cottonwood Creek to the majestic heights above; through Cottonwood, birch, aspen, into the pines and green-flowered meadows of the spicy, invigorating altitudes. Three miles this side of the lakes one can obtain hotel accommodations, meals, lodgings, and house-keeping cabins at reasonable rates at Golden Trout Camp. Or if one priers throwing his bed in the open reservation can be made with Barney Sear's to pack to a camp site in the green meadows alongside the lakes.

Besides the shortest route to the lakes the Cottonwood Creek trail, according to Sears, is the quickest and easiest way into such scenic wonders of the High Sierras as Mt. Whitney, Kern River Gorge, Rock Creek and Rock Creek Lakes, Whitney Creek, Junction Meadows, and many other regions of lake, stream and meadow.

Rainbow Camp All Prepared for Tourists

Parcher's Rainbow Camp on Bishop Creek opened last Sunday for the new season. Road conditions to the resort are already good, but will be further improved, the county of Inyo and the United States Forest Service co-operating to make this a fine stretch for mountain travel. From the highway near Bishop to Bishop Creek Canyon the road has been widened and ironed out and made attractive for the motorist.

Among other improvements planned for Rainbow Camp this year is a large modern dining-room, and the Parchers are already beginning construction of a kitchen, rest rooms and several new cabins. This resort, high up in the most scenic part of the Sierra Nevada, among forests, lakes and trout streams, and glaciers, is attracting more attention than ever this spring.

The wild-flower refuge established there last season by Robert Kessler, well-known botanist, will be greatly enlarged and the plantings accordingly increased this summer. The Rainbow Camp flower refuge is the first and only one in the high Sierras, and has drawn national comment as a splendid idea.

Plants, seeds and bulbs from all the surrounding country for many miles were taken to the camp last season and carefully placed in harmonious settings so that persons who enjoy nature may see and study them without climbing to almost inaccessible places. It has been found that 85 per cent of all transplantings are growing. Eventually a vast variety of mountain plant life from even distant lands will flourish at Rainbow Camp.

THE MARATHONERS' MECCA

Avalon, the fairyland spot of Southern California, located on Mr. William Wrigley's well-known and justly famous island of Catalina is not only the playground of the nation, but serves as a starting and finishing point for every sort of marathon imaginable. Photo shows Avalon Bay, the beautiful pleasure steamers, Catalina and Avalon, a section of the city itself, and numerous other details which daily gladden the eyes of thousands of happy and sunburned vacationists.

BEAUTY SPOTS LURE VISITORS

warm, mellow moon, and myriads of stars that shine like so many brilliant lamps. Even the silent wastes of Death Valley are now open to vacationists with safety. Up-to-the-minute and convenient hostelries cater to the pleasure of the visitor all along the route.

Coming up from several hundred feet below the sea to sea level, we find the ever-popular beaches. Southern California's coast, which stretches from Santa Barbara to San Diego, seems to have been definitely formed just for the benefit of tired vacationists. Summer sports are most popular near the sea shore with yachting, golf courses overlooking the blue Pacific, and swimming to entice the pleasure bound.

If you prefer the higher altitudes where the spicy, cool breezes fill one's lungs with a new vim and vigor, just jump in the old wagon and be off. First of all, just ramble along the foothill boulevards, which have a beauty all their own. Gradually, the bus begins to climb and now and then you reach a point where thousands of miles of fertile valleys and rolling hills lie below while up above the snow-covered peaks glitter in the sunlight. It's a grand and glorious feelin'.

MULTITUDE OF JOYS

Once you get among the pines, there are a multitude of joys to keep one busy eighteen hours out of the twenty-four. Camps and hotels are liberally scattered throughout the forest regions, and campsites are everywhere for the man who enjoys camping out under nature's canopy. Bubbling brooks, sweeping streams, and mirrored lakes beckon the angler to try his luck with trout or plucky bass. For those who enjoy other sports, there is horseback riding, sailing on lakes fringed with pines, and dancing. All health-giving activities, that build the body up for another ten months of city life.

In this day of automobile transportation, there is no feature of vacation which appeals so much to the motorists as the splendid labyrinth of highways which cover the Southland. It is easy to go places in Southern California, so let's go. All aboard for vacation land.

It it that cooling stretch of sand with its eager oncoming white caps that captures your dreams? There let us start southward through Santa Ana where we are just in time for an enjoyable luncheon at the Saint Ann's Inn at Santa Ana. A leisurely stay over night or longer and we have a refreshing beginning for our pleasure jaunt down the coast.

BAY AND OCEAN

Balboa! Boats, still water and ocean bathing. A splendid place to try out those water sports and gain that summer tan. There are many and ample accommodations; Balboa Tent City, the "city of little yellow houses with the Japanese curtains." Sohn's Bungalow Court, Stieffel's Cottages and others.

Laguna Beach and its picturesque surroundings offer pleasant quarters with its Tent City, Hotel The Villa and Honeysuckle Court. If one chooses to stop at Oceanside, comfortable house-keeping cottages are available in the Oceanside Cottage City.

Lovely Stratford Inn at Del Mar with its beautiful setting is well worthy of one's time and pleasure. Then farther down the Coast that city of artists' delight, La Jolla, with its attractive Casa de Manana Hotel, its Blue Sea Cottages, Colonial Apartment Hotel, Terrace Apartments and Alta Mar Apartment Hotel, presenting many alluring vacation arrangements.

In San Diego, a sojourn of almost any length can be enjoyed. That city is fortunate in having such splendid hotels and apartment hostleries as the San Diego Hotel, the Park Manor, and the Barcelona Apartment Hotel.

Then at Ocean Beach the recently opened Ocean Village offers excellent accommodations for the vacationist.

FAR AND WIDE

A ferry-boat ride to Coronado and then the world renowned Hotel Del Coronado with its appealing air of old-world graciousness. Near by we have the Coronado Tent City, camping de luxe in the very heart of vacation land.

Now upon the silver sands of Coronado and transport ourselves across that sparkling restless ocean of blue to the enchanted island of Santa Catalina where vacations to fit all hearts and pockets can be enjoyed to the fullest. The Saint Catherine's Hotel, the Hotel Atwater, the Island Villa, Villa Park, the Independent Foresters' Inn, the Mathewson Cottages, National Camp, the Sunset Apartments, and Alberts Court proffer varying and pleasurable accommodations.

Back to the mainland again and up the long Coast Highway between Los Angeles and San Francisco we encounter the famous Santa Maria Inn in Santa Maria, favorite stopping place of many motorists located just south of San Luis Obispo and half-way between the two great cities.

The New Atascadero Inn in Atascadero has just been opened and extends to the traveler everything he desires for a comfortable nap.

Last but not least in Father Neptune's repertoire of sea-coast vacations is that of Carmel, with the incredibly deep blue Carmel Bay and its pine-clad rocky shore, it surpasses all in sheer breath-taking beauty.

Pine Inn and Highlands Inn in Carmel, the Forest Hill Hotel in Pacific Grove, the San Carlos Hotel in Monterey and the famous Del Monte Lodge are well equipped to care for the most fastidious and seasoned traveler or vacationist. At delightful Capitola Beach the commodious and comfortable Capitola Hotel is available to the summer guest.

Then a little farther north lies Santa Cruz, that gem of the Pacific, with its Casa del Rey Hotel, Beach Hill Inn and many others.

BIG-TREE COUNTRY

Taking the paved highway northward from Santa Cruz into the Santa Cruz Mountains brings one into a mountain region of exceptional beauty, and one to which justice cannot be done by the pen. En route to the Big Basin in the heart of the Santa Cruz Mountains there are to be found many delightful camps and resorts such as Pine Lodge, Brookdale Lodge, Shady Rest Camp, Ben Lomond Lodge and Mt. Hermon Resort, and in the basin itself, the incomparable Big Basin Inn. Redwoods of mammoth size are contained within famous Santa Cruz Big Trees Grove.

And now that we have journeyed in fancy along the shores of California from the border to San Francisco, and have viewed in eager anticipation the lavish variety of our many coast resorts, I think we will agree that it is not at all a problem to spend a vacation in California. However, if your dreams should be tinted with forest green and the shimmering white of high peaks we have at our pen's tip another and equally fascinating world for you to explore.

The high Sierras with their lofty snow-clad pinnacles, many of them inaccessible in winter and in summer, the high adventure. The low-lying San Diegos with the friendly charm of her oak-dotted vales and wealth of early romance and Indian lore. Good roads and easy grades affording an agreeable accessibility together with a coolness borrowed from proximity to the sea make of these last-mentioned mountains a delightful vacation retreat.

SAN DIEGOWARDS

Hospitality to the traveler in the Incopah (San Diego) Range is extended through such attractive resorts as Powan Lodge, Hulburd Grove Inn, Kennilworth Inn, Warner's Hot Springs, the Green Parrot Lodge, Santa Ysabel Inn, Oakanita Lodge, Jacumba Hot Springs, Live Oak Springs, the Murrietta Hot Springs. The grassy meadow of the Lagunas with their pine and oak present a special treat to the camper; and over all the flat top of Palomar Mountain, nearly 6000-feet high, tenders the less-frequented refuge of her many trails.

Farther north lies San Jacinto, that imposing peak of the southern desert. Nestled high on its south slope is the extensive and homey mountain resort of Idyllwild and that of Tauquitz Lodge. The northern face of San Jacinto is a sheer perpendicular granite wall 9000 feet high from the summit of which one can view out over the panoramic awesome vastness of the Colorado desert, the Chocolate Range, the Salton Sea, the Morengo Pass and the distant beckoning Mojave.

Near the town of San Jacinto we find Gilman's Relief Hot Springs and Soboba Hot Springs, two well-known and well-favored resorts. From here we sight across the pass to San Guogonio and the peaks of the San Bernardino range.

There is Glen Ivy Mineral Hot Springs near Corona, a delightful resort proffering excellent accommodations.

Within the San Bernardino range proper are the very well-known resorts of Forest Home, Oak Glen Lodge, Seven Oaks, Big Bear and Arrowhead Lakes. The Forest Home Angling Club and the Rainbow Angling Club on the Mill Creek road are offering to their members excellent year-round trout fishing.

VARIETY GALORE

Of all the resorts we can name, perhaps none are better patronized than those of the San Bernardino mountains. High peaks, wonderful lakes, splendid trees and babbling streams all entice the lover of woods and hills to this great mountain fastness. Surrounding Big Bear Lake are eighty-seven different resorts offering abundant accommodations of every description ranging from house-keeping cabins to first-rate American plan and European plan hotels. Also there are many camping spots of no inconsiderable charm to please the enthusiastic camper.

Farther west, picturesque and enchanting is Arrowhead Lake with its Lake Arrowhead Lodge, Lake Arrowhead Club, Raven Hotel, Camp Fleming, Chapman's Court, Village Inn, and Cottage Grove tempting the mountain tourist with their attractive shelter. Pine Crest Mountain resort with its scenic and striking setting and extensive accommodations, the Alpine Terrace Resort, Switzer's Resort, and Camp Angelus overlook the San Bernardino Valley from their impressive heights in the south ridges. A short way up the slope just above San Bernardino and guarded by the legendary Arrowhead of the Indian gods lies the world-famed Arrowhead Springs which is not to be forgotten.

And now we find ourselves in the shadow of San Antonio, the highest peak in the Sierra Madre range. West across Cajon Pass we travel to Tally's Glenn ranch resort, Ice House Canyon resort, Camp Baldy, Eleven Oaks Camp, and in the San Gabriel Canyon, Cold Brook Camp and Camp Rincon.

Mt. Wilson's Hotel and cabins, located upon the very top of Mt. Wilson is a well-known resort that needs no introduction. In San Dimas Canyon is Wolfskill Falls Camp, which is not to be overlooked.

AT BACK DOOR

And now, hikers, rejoice, for we find ourselves in the mountains back of Pasadena and Sierra Madre. Familiar as these trails are, they never fail to reduce and delight the incurable hiker. A hike of considerable enjoyment and interest can be had by starting up the Arroyo Seco to Camp Oak Wilde and continuing up that most delectable of trails through Switzer-land Resort, Opid's Camp, Mt. Lowe, and Mt. Wilson, to Roberts Camp and Fern Lodge, and from there back into the west fork, stopping at Valley Forge Lodge or Opid's Camp. One of the most fascinating trails of Southern California is through the eighteen miles of canyon country down the west fork of the San Gabriel from Opid's Camp to Camp Rincon and Cold Brook Camp.

Farther west, north of Ventura, in the coast range, are the famous Wheeler's Hot Mineral Springs and Lathrop's Camp.

Another favorite retreat of the vacationist is that of Stanley Park Lodge, with its luxuriant shrubs and flowers, located near Carpenteria.

In Santa Barbara, that splendid and beautiful city, possessing both the mountains and the sea, we find hotels of the first class. The Samarkand Hotel, known in every quarter of the civilized world, is the mecca of honeymooners and tourists from all points. The Carrillo Hotel, also in Santa Barbara, is operated on the European plan, and is a favorite stopping place for many coast travelers. Situated on the Coast Highway in Montecito, and also on the ocean, is the Miramar Hotel and bungalows, extending a hospitable welcome at all times to the guest.

In the Santa Monica Mountains is the Seminole Hot Springs, a desirable springs resort, offering a pleasant and enjoyable week-end or even longer stay.

After our brief retrace south we are back again in that greatest of all northern ranges to revel amid the finest and most glamorous land of all vacation seekers, the gigantic range of the Sierra Nevada, rising hydra-headed and massive to the last of the San Joaquin Valley. Here Huntington Lake Lodge, one of California's hospitality. And here with, with pack and saddle, the adventurous may traverse the Kings River past Hunce and Kanawyers, where they will encounter a magnetic enthralling wilderness of vast cliffs, donies, streams and waterfalls. Truly a second Yosemite. In this vicinity also is found Capinero Lodge on Pine Flat and the California Hot Springs, both first-rate resorts and worthy of the traveler's interest.

Finally, we arrive in that world-famous Yosemite Valley, with its widely pictured splendors, good hotels and camps and numerous enticing camping grounds. Here Yosemite Lodge, the Sentinel Hotel, Camp Curry and the Wawona Hotel at Wawona en route to the valley are all familiar to the summer tourist.

Lake Tahoe with its great stretches of sheer indescribable beauty is, like Yosemite, so well known as to need but little mentioning, secured in its position as the one ideal in each traveler's memory. Among the attractive hotels and camps at Lake Tahoe are the Brockway Hotel, Camp Richardson, McKinney's Resort, Conolley's Bijou Lodge, Homewood, Meek's Bay Camp, Young's Bijou Lodge, Tahoe Tavern, Tahoe Inn, Globin's Al Tahoe Inn and the Glenbrook Inn.

The Pines, a rustic mountain resort in Madera county, should be remembered for that fishing spree you have promised yourself. Another fascinating retreat of the high Sierras in Tulare county is Camp Nelson, near Springville. And while we are exploring this wonderful region we must not overlook the Calaveras Grove of Big Trees; for here the great trees are at their best in one of the finest groves of the giant Redwoods and is easily accessible by motor from Stockton.

It's Lovely
in the gardens of Victoria, B. C.

Very even is the temperature in the Victoria island country. The mornings are crisp enough to put pep in your golf game. The evenings are cool enough to make a light sweater feel pleasant, and sometimes to have a little open fire for company.

There is sun for an average of ten hours per day in the summer months . . . sun that doesn't burn you, but just feels warm on your back. No wonder the grass is always green, the turf springy on the golf course, the complexion of Victoria girls celebrated.

Drive north to the island city, for a holiday. You pass from Seattle, Bellingham, Anacortes, or Vancouver—a lovely stillwater sail among the islands. You stay at The Empress, that pearl among hotels, set in rose gardens on the lip of the Inner Harbor. You golf on a championship course. You fish for salmon or trout. You play tennis, or swim, or canoe, or sail, or ride, as the fancy takes you. The social-minded find plenty of dancing and gaiety. Victoria people are the most hospitable souls in the world. HIKING TALES RECOUNTED

F. C. Bradley Tells Some of His Experiences on Journeys to Mt. Wilson

In consideration of his one hundredth round-trip hike up the Mt. Wilson toll road to the Mt. Wilson Hotel and bungalows, Mr. F. C. Bradley, 82 years of age, recently recounted some of his past hiking experiences which are interesting and worthy of note.

Born in North Haven, Ct., in 1845, Mr. Bradley made his first trip to California in 1887, crossing the continent forty-three times since that date over ten different routes. Although he always delighted in hiking in the southern mountains and made his first hike to Mt. Wilson in 1897, it has only been in recent years that he has confined a greater portion of his time to this delightful pastime.

Contemplating leaving for his summer home in Connecticut in a few days by way of Yosemite, and wishing to bring his mileage up to an even 800 miles in the San Gabriel Mountains before leaving, Mr. Bradley walked up to the Mt. Wilson Hotel on the morning of the 13th inst., stopping there over night with the intention of making up the difference the following day. Arising at 4 a.m., Mr. Bradley, in the company of the clerk of the Mt. Wilson resort, Glenn C. Moore, proceeded to Echo Rock to view the sunrise. After a hearty breakfast the pair started on one of the roughest, steepest and hottest hikes in that section of the mountains. Leaving Mt. Wilson at 8 a.m., the new forest service road was followed to Barley Flats, a distance of ten miles to the east side of the flats. From this point a ridge was followed for four miles by means of trail, firebreak and road right of way, and the going was anything but pleasant, bringing them out at the Big Tejunga, West Fork divide. From here a drop of four miles down Shortcut Canyon to the West Fork of the San Gabriel River, ½ mile up the stream, and then a four-mile grind on the north side of Mt. Wilson to the summit, a distance of twenty-two and a half miles.

Anything but tired after this trip, Mr. Bradley ate a hearty dinner and viewed the total eclipse of the moon at 12:20 a.m. The following day he hiked back down the toll road to the Lincoln-avenue car line and thence to Pasadena.

ARROWHEAD RESORT GAINS POPULARITY

Camp Fleming, on the shores of Lake Arrowhead, is one of the most ideal mountain resorts in Southern California.

Offering modern and well-equipped housekeeping accommodations at moderate rates, that resort caters yearly to an ever-widening circle of patrons.

Camp Fleming is close to the village yet offers all the attractions of a modern resort. For the convenience of guests the camp maintains a grocery store where fresh meats and vegetables are supplied daily.

MOUNT LOWE TO DRAW TOURISTS

Railway Ascent is One of Beauty and Charm

Lowe Observatory Attracts Scenery Lovers

One Hundred and Twenty Curves on Ride

At this season of the year, plans for forthcoming vacations become of all-absorbing interest in the minds of most people, and with the diversity of year-round recreational projects for which California is noted, it is a comparatively easy task to find a place of one's liking, far away from the world of humdrum, where you can rest your wearied nerves and enjoy to the utmost a glorious outing.

From seashore to mountains the southern vacationist is offered an alluring array of playgrounds, all of undeniable charm; but that which distinguishes California from other vacation lands of America is the beauty and rugged grandeur of its mountain resorts. The year round finds, not only tourists but also those who have lived here for many years enjoying the pleasures and sports of the many mountain rendezvous within a few hours' run of the larger cities.

One of the most interesting of all these is historic Mt. Lowe where high up in the glorious mountains one may view in panorama the fifty-six cities and towns of the valley below, and where, amid picturesque surroundings one may enjoy every sort of outdoor diversion.

The trip to Mt. Lowe from the foot of Rubio Canyon near Altadena, a rise of 1245 feet, is accomplished by Pacific Railway cars in an ascent of rare beauty and charm. This railway is considered one of the world's greatest engineering feats and has been in operation thirty-three years.

At Echo Mountain, the top of the incline, is situated Lowe Observatory, founded in 1894 by Prof. Thadeus S. C. Lowe, a noted scientist after whom Mt. Lowe was named. The observatory is open to visitors on Saturday, Sunday and holiday evenings when free lectures on astronomy are given by the director.

The most impressive part of the journey begins at Echo Mountain and from here one enjoys a scenic ride of three and one-half miles, making 120 curves, passing over eighteen bridges and gradually climbing to an elevation of almost 5000 feet above the Pacific sea level. Bridging rugged canyons, skirting the walls of cliffs on a roadbed of solid granite, with ever-changing vistas of the valley below and the towering peaks above, this ride is one of spectacular variety. Midway through the trip of enchanting mountain beauty and pleasurable thrills, one passes over the celebrated Circle Bridge, famed as a marvelous piece of engineering skill.

The railway terminates at Mt. Lowe Tavern and Cottages. The summit, 1230 feet above, is made by trail up one side of the mountain and down the other, with the endless change of panorama, sea, mountains, valley, canyons, painted villages and toy trains. Mt. Lowe Tavern is a Swiss-like hotel amid a forest of oak, spruce and cedar. It is attractively furnished and every facility is provided for both indoor pleasures and outdoor sports.

Helpful Hints for Those Who Travel by Car

With the advent of the summer months motorists of this section already are beginning to have day dreams of vacation days in which the old family bus will play a prominent part. In order that the coming recreation period will afford a maximum of enjoyment and a minimum of discomfort, the Automobile Club of Southern California offers the following hints to drivers prior to attempting a long trip:

Clean and flush the radiator and cooling system.

Inspect the ignition system to make sure that generator brushes are properly adjusted.

Look over the wiring system for breaks in insulation and short circuits.

Have the battery properly tested.

Drain out all oil and cleanse entire system with paraffin oil rather than kerosene.

Have breaks inspected to insure equalization.

Clean and oil brake rods and connections as well as shackle bolts for better braking power.

Take out oil and gasoline screens and clean thoroughly.

Have carburetor properly adjusted, sparkplugs cleaned and grease cups filled.

Take wheels off and repack bearings.

One of the attractive young subdebs who has just been graduated from Marlborough School is Miss Emelie Childs, charming young daughter of Mrs. Stephen Vincent Childs (Gertrude Redman) of 3125 West Adams street, and grand-daughter of Mrs. Emeline H. Childs of 3109 West Adams street and the late O. W. Childs.

Miss Childs is a native daughter of Los Angeles and has been the honor-guest at numerous delightfully appointed affairs given in honor of her being graduated. Among the hostesses were Mrs. William Francis Howard who gave a supper party at her home in Lafayette Park Place Sunday evening while Mrs. Samuel Cary Dunlap and her daughter, Miss Sue Betty Dunlap, entertained with a breakfast at their home when Miss Childs shared the honors of the afternoon with Miss Frances Sue Coffin, Miss Genevieve Henneberger and Miss Adelaide Wilson.

Miss Childs is planning to go east later in the summer, accompanied by her mother and young brother and is also contemplating an European trip in the fall or early winter although no definite plans are yet made.

Miss Coffin, by the way, is planning an eastern trip with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Tristram Coffin, and her elder sister, Miss Dorothy Coffin, and in the fall she will enter Mt. Vernon Seminary in Washington, D. C., having been graduated last Thursday from Marlborough School.

Miss Dorothy Coffin who was graduated from Marlborough School two years ago has had a year at Miss Ransom's school in Piedmont and then chose the University of Oregon at Eugene for her second year, in order to be near her brother Harry Tristram Coffin, Jr., who is to be graduated from there this year.

An interesting event always, is the change of residence after many years and among those who have gone to new homes recently are Mr. and Mrs. I. B. Dockweiler, who for many years lived at 957 West Adams street, but who some weeks ago leased the old home of Mrs. Hugh Livingstone Macneil, 2321 South Figueroa street, which was purchased some months ago by Edward Laurence Doheny.

Mr. and Mrs. Dockweiler have but just returned from an extended trip through the East visiting in Washington, D. C., and New York City and have with them in their new home Dr. and Mrs. Marcus Esketh Crahan (Rosario Dockweiler) and their two sons, Henry I. Dockweiler and George A. Dockweiler.

A wedding in the East which is of much interest to Southern California society was that of Wednesday when in the national capital Miss Gerry Morgan, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. William Gerry Morgan, became the bride of Lieut. Charles Wellborn, Jr., son of Judge and Mrs. Charles Wellborn of Chester Place, the affair being carried out in true military fashion.

Mrs. Wellborn with her daughter, Miss Dorothy Lillian Wellborn, and Mrs. Henri de Roulet (Nancy Bilicke) left for the East the 4th inst., and Miss Wellborn was the maid of honor at the wedding. They are planning to visit for a month in Montreal and Quebec as well as other eastern points of interest and will not reach home much before the first of July.

Lieut. Wellborn and his bride will tour the East, but will return to Washington, where he is on shore duty for a year's detail.

Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Billingsley Howard, whose wedding was one of the loveliest of the early summer weddings, are now in Carmel-by-the-Sea, having motored north immediately after the wedding supper Saturday the 11th inst. They are not making any definite plans, but will just motor leisurely up the coast as far as British Columbia, stopping en route at the various points of interest, and staying as long as the mood calls them.

Mrs. Howard was formerly Miss Eleanor Otis Booth, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Franklin Booth, and the ceremony took place in the lovely walled gardens of the Booth home in Inverness avenue, Los Feliz Heights.

Mrs. Otis Booth, sister-in-law of the bride, assisted as matron of honor while Miss Dorothy Wright of New York who came west to be maid of honor, left for Berkeley Thursday evening and is planning to make an extended visit there, and probably will come south again for a short visit before returning to her eastern home.

Mr. and Mrs. Otis Booth, who come south every year for several months, will return shortly to their home in Medford, Or.

Mr. and Mrs. Howard will return to Los Angeles early in July and after July 15, will be at home in West Avenue Forty-second.

Among the members of the younger set who graduated from Girl's Collegiate School this month is Miss Decla Dunning, attractive young daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Carroll H. Dunning of Casa Mia, 1751 Hillcrest Road, and who, with her parents, came from the East eighteen months ago.

They made their winter home in New York City, and have a lovely country home in Ridgewood, N. J., where Mr. Dunning was one of the directors of the country club.

Miss Dunning took an active part in the school festivities and was "Lady Mary" in the senior class play "Monsieur Beaucaire," given just before commencement.

She entertained Thursday afternoon with a beautifully appointed luncheon at the Mary Louise, the decorations being especially attractive. Those included were Miss Frances Jean, Miss Betty Woodworth, Miss Catherine Jean, Miss Maxine Abel, Miss Virginia Aldous, Miss Barbara McCartney. Ross Lucille Guild, Miss Minnerva Bell, Miss Isabella Schiffman, Miss Elva Walklin, Miss Helen Graham, Miss Anna Jungquist, Miss Mary Stuart, Miss Virginia Mauser, Miss Virginia Callender, Miss Sybil Kane, Miss Marcia Forbes, Miss Elizabeth Gude, Miss Carol Crandall, Miss Janet Torrence, Miss Ethel Ware, Miss Mary Dearing, Miss Marion Bryce, Miss Eleanor Edwards, Miss Virginia Augustus and the hostess.

Miss Dunning is planning to continue her studies along journalistic lines and will probably go East and afterward abroad in the finishing of her chosen vocation.

The visit here of Mrs. McDonald Brittain from her home in Atlanta, Ga., has been the motif for many beautifully appointed affairs as this is her first visit here since her marriage last fall. Mrs. Brittain was formerly Miss Olive de Four, niece of Mrs. Roscoe Lipscomb Cannon of Lafayette Park Place where she is visiting with her aunt and cousin, Miss Ruth Cannon, and she has come especially to be in the bridal entourage of her cousin Miss Amy Phillips whose wedding with Herbert Arthur Tosteson takes place next Saturday.

Among the recent affairs given in her honor was the bridge tea given by Mrs. Lombard Smith when Miss Phillips shared the honors of the afternoon at the Jonathan Club and Miss Ruth Cannon gave a tea for her two cousins when more than 125 guests called.

Assisting Miss Cannon and Mrs. Brittain in receiving were Miss Gladys Crall, Mrs. Loren Babcock, Miss Mary Elizabeth Westpheling and Miss Louise Ley, while Mrs. Robert Langley and Mrs. Charles Lewis Allen presided at the tea and coffee urns.

Miss Gertrude Ferguson Cowles has chosen the 29th inst., as the date for her wedding with John Hyde Braly, son of Arthur Braly, the ceremony to take place in Wilshire Congregational Church, with Dr. Frank Dyer officiating. Miss Merrill Cowles will assist her sister as maid of honor and the other attendants will include Miss Louise Janss, Miss Amytis Rochey, Miss Barbara Palmer, Miss Sue Betty Dunlap, Miss Genevieve Henneberger, Miss Maud Ryan and Mrs. William Norbert Neff (Mina Jevne) sister of the bridegroom.

George Brock is to be best man and the ushers are William Norbert Neff, Stow Hollister, Moye Stephens, Allan Pyle, Edward Graham, John Neff and Harold Hyde Braly, Jr.

Miss Cowles, who is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Nelson W. Cowles, is one of the most popular members of the younger set and has been much entertained with prenuptial affairs.

Last evening Mr. and Mrs. Edward Pyle, Jr., gave a bridge supper in her honor, Mr. Braly sharing the honors of the evening and Miss Margaret Martin is planning a luncheon for her Tuesday, while the same evening Mrs. Herman Janss, aunt of Mr. Braly, is giving a dinner for the bridal party at her home in Luberne avenue and Mrs. William Norbert Neff will also honor her brother and his fiancee with a dinner at the home of her father in Rossmore avenue next Saturday evening.

Another popular member of the younger set who is being much entertained this month is Miss Katherine Fudger, charming young daughter of Mrs. Richard Fudger of Muirfield Road, who has just returned from the University of California at Berkeley, Miss Dorothy Llewellyn and Miss Virginia Llewellyn, who with their parents, Mr. and Mrs. David Edgar Llewellyn, have just returned from a trip around the world, sharing the honors of the afternoon at a tea with which Miss Elizabeth Rose and Miss Dorothy Marian Daum entertained yesterday at the home of their parents, Mr. and Mrs. William H. Daum in Fremont Place.

The hours were from 4 to 7 p.m. and 400 invitations were issued, the guests being classmates of the young hostesses from Marlborough and Westlake Junior College.

A profusion of early summer flowers, ferns and foliage were artistically combined in the decorations and dancing was enjoyed on the spacious tennis courts in the gardens, at the rear of the house.

The Misses Daum, by the way, with their parents and brothers, William Howard Daum, Jr., and Richard Hampton Daum, are leaving next month on an extended motor trip through the north, their itinerary including British Columbia and various points of interest en route. They will not return to Los Angeles before September.

The Misses Daum were assisted by the honor guests and Miss Patricia Fudger while Mrs. Leon Fremont Moss assisted Mrs. Daum.

Last evening after the tea, Miss Fudger entertained a merry coterie of young folk with a supper party at the mother's home, the special guests of honor being Miss Elizabeth Rose Daum and her sister, Miss Dorothy Marian Daum.

In honor of Miss Audrey Nelson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Nelson of Catalina street, whose engagement to Alvin Loskamp was formally announced, Mrs. Alvin Wendt entertained with a bridge luncheon at the Women's Athletic Club the 8th inst.

Silver and nile green were artistically combined in the decorations with white sweet peas and lilies of the valley.

Small silver boats formed the place favors with a heart on the sail, and at Miss Nelson's place a small gangplank led up to the boat with a man ascending the plank.

Green candles lighted the table in silver candelabra, and when the guests sat down to the card tables they found Miss Nelson's name with Mr. Loskamp on each ace of hearts.

The guests included Miss Nelson, Miss Lucille Mead, Miss Sally Smith, Miss Gertrude Carr, Miss Audrey Fox, Miss Eunice MacRae, Mrs. Robert Dale Bachellor, Mrs. G. F. Francisco, Miss Patricia Carey, Miss Virginia Hosey, Mrs. Juan Bautista Martino, Mrs. Philip Miles Chapman, Mrs. Edward Dryden Thompson, Miss Dorothy Laurence, Mrs. Andrew Max Douglas, Miss Cornelia Hayes, Miss Tessie Dell Parsons, Miss Helen Breitholle, Miss Margaret Cassidy, Miss Janet Morris, Miss Helen McPherrin, Miss Maud Barker, Mrs. Hugh Edward Reeves, Mrs. A. L. Nelson, Mrs. Harry K. Loskamp, the hostess, and honor guest.

To Visit Here

One of the charming visitors to Los Angeles, whose coming will be the inspiration for many delightful parties, is Miss Maritita Brennan, attractive young daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Brennan of San Diego, who arrived yesterday to be the house guest of her aunt and uncle, Dr. and Mrs. Carl Kurtz, who have recently moved into their new home at 520 Rossmore avenue.

Miss Brennan, who is the favorite niece of the Kurtz family, is always a most welcome guest, and as the Convent of Our Lady of Peace has just closed, she fulfilled the promise to visit them as soon as her junior year was finished.

At Beach Club

Among the attractive affairs of the week given in honor of graduation ceremonies was the supper-dance with which Miss Dorothy Llewellyn and Miss Virginia Llewellyn entertained Thursday evening at the Westport Beach Club in honor of Miss Adelaide Wilson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Elihu Clement Wilson of Fremont Place, who in the afternoon received her diploma from Marlborough School. More than 200 guests were bidden, members of the younger set, which just now is holding the center of the stage in social activities. The Misses Llewellyn, with their parents, Mr. and Mrs. David Edgar Llewellyn of Muirfield Road, have but just returned from a delightful and interesting tour around the world, and are being the inspiration for many welcome-home affairs.

the picturesque little Christ Church in the Bay City, where so many army and naval weddings have taken place and will be an event of the 29th inst., at 4 p.m., with Rev. John Grainger officiating. A reception and supper will follow at the home of the bride's mother. Lieut. In the East

Mr. and Mrs. Sylvester Weaver of Fremont Place have been having a most delightful outing in the East, where they have been in the Berkshires with their daughters, Misses Sylvia and Rosemary, and son, Sylvester, Jr.

A letter received from Westchester Biltmore Country clubhouse in Rye, N. Y., tells of motor trips through the country, and the interesting horse show at the latter place. Mr. Weaver is on his way home. They returned to New York City in time for the festivities Monday given in honor of Col. Lindbergh. They also have visited at Lake Placid and motored up to Dartmouth College in Northern New Hampshire, where they were joined Thursday by their son, Sylvester, Jr., whose school closed then. They are now taking the White Mountains tour, and will remain a week at Newport, where Miss Sylvia is to visit several school friends. Mrs. Weaver, with her daughters and son, is planning to sail shortly for a summer in England. Miss Sylvia was graduated several weeks ago from the Castle at Tarrytown-on-the-Hudson and as part of the curriculum will take several months' tour of Europe and the British Isles.

During their stay in Gotham, Mr. and Mrs. Weaver were guests at luncheon with George Browne, at the New York Yacht Club.

Farewell Party

Mrs. Frederick Enderly, (Mae Shumway,) at a very interesting breakfast last Sunday, entertained a few artist friends as a farewell party to her summer home in Beverly Glen, which she has just sold. The Countess Anna Jouromska painted a vivid word-picture of her situation in Russia during the revolution. Baroness Rhymer Morrill delighted the guests with the reading of her prize play, and Col. Konovaloff briefly and interestingly described scenes of the World War in Russia, Italy, Turkey and other countries. Among the guests were Baroness Rhymer Morrill, the Countess Anna Jouromska, Mme. Philla Marcon, Mme. M. Gerdes, Mrs. Betty Gilmore, Monsieur and Mme. Carri, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Hickock, Mr. and Mrs. George Baker Anderson, Mr. and Mrs. Mathes Morrill, Mrs. Rose Bryant, Mrs. J. E. Brown, Miss Lillian Fitch, Miss Sonya Pushcarriff, Rollo Sugert, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Manchester, F. Enderly, Adolph Johnson, F. W. Enderly, Harold Roe, Col. Kali Neigen, Col. Nicholas Konovaloff.

Commencement Ceremonies

The sub-debs and their commencement doings have engrossed the town these past few weeks to the exclusion of other things, and none have been lovelier or of more interest than those centering on the beautiful secluded campus of the Hollywood School for Girls which is a bower of bloom, yet within a few steps of Hollywood Boulevard. The school has closed its eighteenth year and, by an odd coincidence has graduated eighteen seniors and also eighteen members from the eighth grade into the high-school department. The commencement exercises were held Friday at 4 p.m. on the lawn. Dr. Rufus B. Von KleinSmid delivered the address. A musical program was given by Mrs. Martha and Mr. Raymond Shryock. Dr. James Hamilton Lash pronounced the benediction and Mrs. William Lee Woollett, principal of the school, presented the diplomas and awarded the cups and prizes.

The members of the class are Madeline Campbell, Elizabeth Campbell, Evelyn Flebbe, who for two years has been editor-in-chief of the "Inkling," the school annual, Virginia Lyon, Betty Saxe, president of the student body whose dramatic gift was amply shown when she appeared in the title part in "The Piper," the senior play, and many other readings during the year; Cathleen Weiller, Henrietta Youell, president of her class; Grayce Black, Marie Duffy, Charlotte Dunnington, Ina Lind Farmer, who was Queen o' the May at the May Day fete; Jane Gronen, Frances Haushammer, Maran Johnstone, Alice Jordan, Elizabeth Puterbaugh, Marie Ramsey and Virginia Wheeler.

The class held its class-day exercises Thursday morning, which included various amusing skits and farewell speeches to the campus spots dear to their hearts, the planting of an ivy and the reception of the juniors by the seniors. Immediately following came the graduation exercises of the eighth grade, when Mrs. Woollett presented diplomas to Barbara Albertson, president of the class; June Birchard, who read the class propهecy, Katherine Bronson, Emily Dean, Eugenia Graham, Dorothea Frudden, Marietta Kessler, who read the class will, Betty Jean Kuder, Faye Lewis, Betty Milliron, Louise Minugh, who gave the class history; Neslo Olsen, Betty Potter, Ruth Rockwell, Betty Schofield, Audrey Smith, Jeanie Gutterson, Florence Waddell, and Ramona Wentzell.

Other interesting functions of the week were the glee club concert Tuesday evening, the piano recital of the younger girls Wednesday afternoon, when the pupils of Mrs. Inga Sandberg and Miss Blanche Strong played; the dramatic recital of the pupils of Miss Gertrude Prescott last evening. Noteworthy participants in these were the two plays, "Evening Clothes," in which Marie Ramsey, Betty Saxe, Marian Marks, Alice Felix, and June Birchard took part; "Poor Old Jim," Natalie Schenkelberger, Blanche Rourke, and Marie Ramsey; the vocal solos by Virginia Wheeler and Marie Ramsey; and the group of selections for the piano played by Katherine Bronson on Wednesday

The week was replete with functions of a purely social nature, among them being the tea given by Miss Madeline Campbell Tuesday afternoon for the seniors to meet her friends at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Henry F. Campbell in South Orange Drive. This was a beautifully appointed affair and there were fifteen guests. The banquet for the juniors and seniors at the Old Stone Inn was a gay affair of Wednesday evening, and the final function will be the junior-senior prom at the beautiful new home of Evelyn Flebbe and her parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Flebbe, in Los Feliz Boulevard.

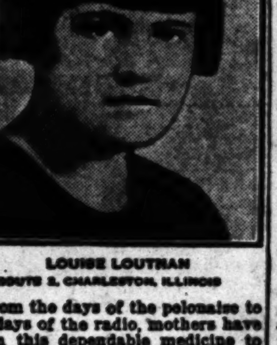
GIRLS OF SCHOOL AGE KEEP IN GOOD HEALTH

They Find Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a Dependable Medicine



LOUISE LOUTHAN
ROUTE 2, CHARLESTON, ILLINOIS

From the days of the polonaise to the days of the radio, mothers have given this dependable medicine to their daughters. School girls are often careless. They get wet feet. They overstudy or they tire themselves with too many dances and parties. They get run down.

Many an active girl of today, like the demure maiden of the 1870's, has found that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is helping her to find better health and energy.

"I gave my fifteen-year-old girl Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it did her a wonderful lot of good. She had been out of school for four months. I read the advertisements of the Vegetable Compound, and since she has taken it she has improved and has gone back to school again. I recommend the Vegetable Compound to other mothers with girls who are not as strong as they should be."—MRS. ALICE LOUTHAN, Route 2, Charleston, Illinois.

"My daughter was out of school two terms. I have known about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound all my life and finally decided that she should try it. Three bottles helped her in various ways for the next couple of years."—MRS. W. E. GILLETTE, 936 E. 53rd Place, Los Angeles, Calif.

"I have always been sickly, and until I was fourteen my father was very strict about my perfect attendance at grammar school. I have gone to school through hard storms and often taken cold. When I was fourteen I took to my bed and did not get up for eighteen months. Everyone thought I could not live. Just four months ago I began taking your wonderful medicine, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I could notice a great change almost at once. Now I feel like a new person. I wish all girls would try Lydia E. Pinkham's wonderful medicine."—MRS. C. M. SMITH, Union Village, Vermont.

avenue, with Rev. S. J. Mathieson of Hollywood Christian Church officiating.

The bride was charming in an afternoon frock of yellow and carried an arm sheath of yellow rosebuds. Mrs. Marjorie Hall assisted as matron of honor and Normal Hall served Mr. Elliott as best man.

Immediately following the wedding Mr. and Mrs. Elliott left for Lake Arrowhead, where they spent their honeymoon. They are now at home at 1765½ North Western avenue.

Mrs. Elliott was graduated from the Indiana University in 1925 and taught in the high schools of Westervelt, Ill., and Windsor, Ill. She came to Los Angeles immediately after the closing of these schools. She was also president of the Classical Club of the Indiana University.

Mr. Elliott, a well-known newspaper man of the East, after three years in liberal-arts school at Indiana University, studied law and was junior in the school of law prior to coming to the Coast. He edited newspapers at Wabash, Ind., and Bloomington, Ind. He is a member of Gamma Eta Gamma, law fraternity; Sigma Delta Chi, Tau Kappa Alpha, the Aeons and many other Indiana University campus organizations. While a freshman at Indiana University he was awarded the international reporters' prize for the most outstanding feat of college journalism in the United States and Canada.

An interesting feature of the wedding here is that at the same hour in Greenfield, Ind., the wedding of Robert C. Elliott, brother of James W., and Miss Vera Lucile Wise took place at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. Merle M. Wise, in Greenfield, Ind.

Church Ceremony

One of the attractive early summer weddings was that of last evening at Westlake Methodist Church when Miss Marjorie Finch, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Finch, became the bride of Harold Lee McClanahan, Dr. George A. Warner officiating. The church was decorated with pink blossoms and the altar was banked with pink gladioli, potted plants and greenery.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, was lovely in gown of ivory satin and lace, fashioned in bouffant model, with veil of Chantilly lace and tulle caught into a cap and fastened with orange blossoms. She carried an arm shower of orchids, lilies of the valley and gardenias. Mrs. Joseph Hirsch, matron of honor, wore a bouffant frock of shell pink taffeta and carried a sheaf of pink rosebuds, while the maid of honor, Miss Grace Osborne, in pale pink chiffon, carried a shepherd's crook, and bridesmaids, Miss Helen Mill, Miss Cusanovich, Miss Dorothy Snyder and Miss Lorna Orr, wore gowns of taffeta fashioned alike shading from deep rose to palest pink and carried arm bouquets of sweet peas and maidenhair ferns.

Joseph Hirsch served his fraternity brother as best man and the ushers included Kenneth Hull, Jack Eagle, Howard Wittenberg, Maxwell King, Russell Schuck and William Anderson.

A reception for the bridal party was held at the home of the bride's aunt, Miss Mary Adams, after which Mr. and Mrs. McClanahan left for Seattle and British Columbia on their wedding trip.

The bride just received her degree from the University of California at Los Angeles where she was a member of the Kappa Alpha Theta sorority and Mr. McClanahan received his degree from Columbia University, where he is a member of the Delta Tau Delta fraternity.

One of the most enjoyable affairs of the past week was a birthday dinner-dance given by Mrs. Joseph Miller of 1814 North Van Ness Saturday evening at Greenwich Village, honoring her daughter, Miss Cecille Miller. The color scheme used for table decorations was carried out with pink sweet peas and roses, and dainty little place cards, and fortune souvenirs of pink and green.

A six-course dinner was served and between courses the guests enjoyed dancing.

The guests included Misses Claudia Goldberg, Katherine Bowie, Hortense Peiser, Gertrude Mintz, Helen Lewis, Cecille W. Miller and Messrs Stanley Fox, Horace Marsh, Norman Kirshbaum, Louis Tarsky, "Doc" Firestone and George Rhein.

Bridge-Luncheon

Mrs. Orrie E. Ghrist of 1516 East Broadway, Glendale, was hostess at a delightful bridge-luncheon Thursday at the Oakmont Country Club. Flag Day furnished the motif for decoration, the table being arranged in the form of a flag, decorated with red gladioli, white sweet peas and blue corn flowers and southern smilax in profusion. Red and blue service doilies were used. Speciall designed favors were miniatures of Betsy Ross in yellow with white fig and holding in her arms the symbol of the Colonial States. Bridge tables were arranged in the northwest corner of the lounge, with a magnificent view of the mountains to be glimpsed through the windows.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS OF THE NAVY

Social affairs of the navy set these days are the most informal of events while members of the service colony who are not leaving themselves for a change of duty are busily engaged in bidding adieu to their friends of the past season or greeting older friends of other times and other places who, with their officer husbands, are to be stationed here for the remainder of the summer.

Perhaps the most prominent of recent arrivals is Mrs. Franklin D. Karns, wife of Capt. Karns, commanding the U.S.S. Colorado, who has been for the past three months in San Francisco with her daughter, Mrs. William Christian Schultz, whose marriage to Ensign Schultz of the U.S.S. Maryland was one of the outstanding events on the social calendar of the navy elite last fall. Shortly after her return to San Pedro, however, Mrs. Schultz left by train for Philadelphia to meet Ensign Schultz, who has been detached from the Maryland and ordered to the U.S.S. Wyoming, a unit of the scouting fleet. Mrs. Schultz was accompanied on her trip east by Mrs. T. Gordon Reamy of Long Beach, who joined Ensign Reamy in New York to be with him there while his ship, the U.S.S. Colorado, is undergoing repairs at the Brooklyn navy yard.

Mrs. Karns shared honors with Mrs. D. W. Rose, wife of Commander Rose, at an attractive bridge and tea given by Mrs. L. P. Davis, wife of Commander Davis of the Colorado, at her home, 238 Molina avenue, Long Beach, last week. Bidden for bridge were Mmes. David F. Ducey, H. Kent Hewitt, Russell S. Crenshaw, D. J. Friedell, M. C. Bowman, Charles Weitzel, J. G. Farlan, H. O. Roesch, Robbins, Wilde, Frank Braisted, Franklin D. Karns and D. W. Rose. Calling later for tea were Mrs. Glover, Mrs. J. V. Chase, Mrs. Furlong and Mrs. Harry Stengle.

Upon the return of the U.S.S. Colorado, Mrs. Karns and her mother, Mrs. I. K. Seymour, expect to leave for San Francisco, where Capt. Karns will be detached from command of the Colorado for shore duty.

Rear-Admiral and Mrs. Henry J. Ziegemeier, who were popular members of the naval colony last fall, will make their home in Washington, D. C., for the next two years, where Admiral Zieremeier is to be dierctor of fleet training at the Navy Department, succeeding Rear-Admiral Montgomery M. Taylor, who in turn is to relieve Admiral Ziegemeier as commander of Battleship Division Three.

An interesting event in naval social circles of Washington, D. C., was the recent marriage of Miss Anne M. Chamberlain, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John A. Chamberlain, and Ensign Thomas Henry Tonseth, Jr., U.S.N., of Fairbanks, Alaska, which took place at the home of the bride's parents, 1502 Emerson street. Lieutenant James Snedeker, United States Marine Corps, was best man. Ensign and Mrs. Tonseth will be at home in Long Beach after September 15.

Mrs. Donald B. Beary and her two daughters, Mary and Alice Ervin, are spending the summer in Bremerton, while Lieutenant-Commander Beary's ship, the U.S.S. New Mexico, is in dry dock for repairs.

Capt. and Mrs. E. W. Skinner, U.S. M.C., of San Pedro, will make their home in Quantico, Va., after September 1, where Capt. Skinner, formerly attached to the U.S.S. Tennessee, has been ordered for duty.

Early last Saturday morning Commander D. W. Rose, who was recently detached from the U.S.S. Colorado with Mrs. Rose, and their daughter Ruth left Long Beach, where they have made their home for the past year or more, to motor across the continent, stopping en route at Yellowstone Park and other places of interest. They expect to arrive in Washington, D. C., about July 1 where Commander Rose is to have duty at the navy yard.

Friday, Mrs. Rose, who has been feted at a round of affairs prior to her departure, was the complimented guest for whom Mrs. Harry E. Stengle, wife of Lieut. Stengle of the Colorado, entertained with a luncheon and bridge at her home in Long Beach. Summer flowers in the bright shades were used to decorate the luncheon tables, while place cards and favors carried out a bon-voyage motif. At the conclusion of the bridge games an attractive guest prize was presented to Mrs. Rose by the hostess.

Asked to bid adieu to the honor guest were Mmes. Franklin D. Karns, I. K. Seymour, L. P. Davis, D. J. Friedell, Charles Weitzell, T. A. Kingsland, A. B. Leggett, Charles Maynard Cooke, Jr., H. G. Hanson, Philip C. Ransom, William Hanna, John Sharpe and Roy C. Swink.

Culminating a romance which began in Long Beach last fall when the engagement of Miss Virginia Dare Parke and Ensign Victor Dismukes Long, U.S.N., was announced at a dinner party given aboard Ensign Long's ship, the U.S.S. Pennsylvania, the marriage was solemnized in Washington, D.C., at All Saints' Episcopal Church, Chevy Chase Circle, shortly after the fleet arrived on the Another pretty affair held Thursday in honor of Mrs. Carr was a bridge-luncheon hostessed by Mrs. Ronald W. Hunt at her home on Putnam avenue when thirty guests were bidden in compliment to her. The Misses Zoe Claubes and Ellenor "Peggy" Knupp, assisted by their mothers, Mrs. Todd C. Claubes and Mrs. Guy Knupp were hostesses at a most delightful dinner-dance Tuesday, complimenting Harriette and Philip Carr, the guest list including a group of fellow-students in Porterville Union High School. Mmes. W. A. Ferguson, Todd C. Claubes and Jay G. Brown entertained in honor of Mrs. Carr Friday at a bridge-luncheon at the home of Mrs. Brown, the guest list including a number of friends who had assisted the three hostesses and Mrs. Carr in giving a series of bridge-luncheons and teas earlier in the season. Special courtesies were shown to Mr. Carr by the Rotary Club of which he has long been a member, at their Tuesday luncheon, and Mr. Carr and his family were guests of honor at a community banquet Monday night, sponsored by the Chamber of Commerce and attended by a large number of fellow-townsmen.

Tulare

Among the Tulare residents who will spend the summer in Europe are the Misses Constance Bertels and Forrestine Wilhite, who will land at Havre, France, and from there go to Granada, in Southern Spain. After that they will join a party of friends and together tour France, Italy, Germany, Switzerland, Belgium and England.

Mrs. Ezra Bauman entertained with a delightful shower Wednesday evening at her home on East Inyo street, complimentary to Miss Pearl Schatz, a coming bride of the month. As the honor guest entered the prettily decorated living-room, where the other guests were already assembled, she was greeted by the strains of "O, Promise Me," sung by Miss Blanche Anderson, with Miss Loretta Nickelson at the piano. Thereupon entered a group of young women, members of the elementary school faculty, attired as a wedding party, Miss Agnes Peterson as the blushing bride and Miss Hilda Bloom as the proud bridegroom. Miss Taylor was the petite flower girl, and Mrs. Hoyt the officiating clergyman. After the merriment was over, Miss Schatz was presented with many beautiful gifts.

Exeter

Complimentary to her sister, Mrs. H. C. Carr of Porterville, who is moving to Palo Alto the latter part of this month, Mrs. O. W. Carr and Mrs. Herbert C. Balaam of this city entertained with a prettily appointed bridge-luncheon at the home of the latter in Loma Vista Thursday, the guests adjourning to the Carr home near by for several interesting hands of bridge, following the luncheon. A beautiful going-away gift was presented to Mrs. Carr by her hostesses.

Mrs. Guy Hopping, newly elected president of the Woman's Club of Three Rivers, and her board of directors were hostesses to members of the club Friday at the last meeting until opening of fall activities. A short business session was held, followed by an interesting program of readings and music, before tea was served by the hostesses.

Visalia

Miss Sue Hunter, popular daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. Wood Hunter, who is leaving soon to make her home in Ocean Park, and Miss Edith Parsons of Palo Alto, house guest of Miss Ruby Ellen Gibson of this city, were complimented jointly Saturday evening by a dancing party, elaborate in its appointments, given at the Tulare County Golf and Country clubhouse near Strathmore by Miss Gibson and Fielding Combs. The guest list included friends from all sections of the San Joaquin Valley; quantities of varicolored flowers made the ballroom very gay, and a delicious supper was served at the close of the evening's merriment, participated in by more than 100 young people.

The Sunday School Lesson

FOR JUNE 26, 1927

ONE MAN WHO DARED AND DID

The International Sunday School Lesson for June 26 is a review of the life and letters of Peter.—I Peter v, 1-11.

"Once upon a time there was a man." That is the oldest story of all, and the newest. From Noah to Lindbergh, the tale of life is told in terms of the man who dared; the "different" man, the independent man, the audacious man. Personalities embody history. Truths are incarnated in individuals. Lindbergh's bold flight has been a clearer call to youth to display courage, initiative and modesty than all the homilies of the schools. Peter's example has taught more Christianity than a million sermons. After all, a man is the only message.

UPSETTING A NEW IDEA

Minds that seek to be "modern" before they are anything else find a wholesome corrective in this Galilean fisherman. Peter embodies the Big Idea of Christianity, a truth that is under fire today. Peter, the common man who became great, flouts the current scientific notion that every human being is the bond-slave of protoplasm and of corpuscles. "Science" is crying from the housetops today that Mendel's botanical law applies equally to human beings: if a man has a certain sort of ancestors he will, despite everything, himself become that certain sort of man. Both character and conduct, according to this popular teaching of the highbrows, are entirely beyond the individual's control. We are what we are because our forbears made us so, and nothing that we ourselves may do can change our qualities.

This new fatalism of science outranks any doctrine of predestination ever held by Presbyterians. It nullifies the primary purpose of education and of religion.

Peter gives the lie direct to all such notions. By his life and by his words, he shows that this is "science, falsely so called." He stands conspiculously for the Gospel's "Big Idea," which is that a life may be made over into complete newness by the power of Christ. We do not always remember that the most exultant message of hope ever heard by despairing humanity is the Gospel. Shallow critics sometimes portray Christianity as gloomy; whereas it is the brightest form of optimism. It bids no man despair because of his antecedents or of his circumstances or of his natural qualities. "If any man be in Christ Jesus he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new."

Peter is proof that characters may be completely changed, and consequently, conditions may be changed, by the grace of God. No real student of this three months of Sunday School Lessons should be among the addle-pated, itching-eared crowd who are quick to welcome every speculation of science as true and to reject lightly the revelation that has been vindicated by the ages. When the materialist cries that each man's fate is in the blood of his ancestors, the Christian replies that each man's fate is in the blood of Christ.

TAKING HOLD BY THE HANDLE

Because so many religious teachers use the petrified phraseology of the past, "the language of Canaan," there is a likelihood of the real significance of this course upon Peter being missed. Let us grasp the story by the handle. Peter was a rough fisherman, living and working by the Lake of Galilee, nearly 2000 years ago. He was a common man, crude, clumsy, not keen in his mental processes, and vulgar in his speech. He was as commonplace and ordinary as the run of workingmen in his class-controlled era. If Jesus had not come along, Peter would have died as inconspicuously as he had lived: and our new notions of all-powerful heredity would have been vindicated in his case.

From his nets he was called by Christ, who sees in every human spirit possibilities which neither reason nor science can discern. This boastful, blustering, blundering fisherman was taken into the Master's school. He was not a hopeful pupil, and many failures and low marks are upon his early record. After Jesus had been crucified and resurrected, His Other Self, the Holy Spirit, continued the work with Peter. The outcome was a small man made great, a coarse man made fine, a boastful man made humble, a stupid man made wise, a swaggering, swearing, strutting fellow made into a saint, a statesman, a seer of God. By human inheritance, Peter was the most ordinary of ordinary men: by birth from above he became the superior of kings, able to cry, with his friend Paul, "I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me."

A MAN WHO SPOKE OUT

Something like a new respect for outspoken convictions comes from even a casual consideration of the life of this immortal world figure, Peter, the disciple of Jesus. His example starts disturbing thoughts concerning the relative importance of witness-bearing and of organization. Ours is an organization-mad day. We exalt the machine above the man. Institutions give us more concern than prophets. Almost every preacher would consider it a promotion to move from the pulpit into an office, as a board secretary or undersecretary. Indeed, one practical reason why the prophetic note is so seldom heard in clarion tones is that so many of the great preachers have become secretaries or presidents or other cautious office holders. Imagine Peter as secretary of a church board!

We have wholly revised the Bible program, which provides for the growth of the church by way of witness-bearing disciples, into an elaborate and modern system of organization, which seems more dependent upon money than upon spiritual enduement. Organizations have to be prudent and conservative and worldly wise; whereas witnesses have no concern except to tell what they know, and to be truthful, in scorn of consequences. Peter's recklessness would create as great consternation today at a meeting of a denominational board or a theological seminary directorate as it caused in the Sanhedrin in Jerusalem. Nevertheless, it was the boldness, or "free utterance," of Peter and John that caused men to say that they had been with Jesus.

Peter puts a premium upon personality. His career reveals the power of an indivual life set free in a community to represent its highest experiences and beliefs. A great personality—which is another phrase for a fearless, selfless, consecrated personality—means more to an community than a new church building or a new society. The gospel way has been to unleash individualities aflame with God, to testify, by character and by conduct and by conversation, to the call of Christ. This lesson will have been studied in vain unless it incites teachers to inspire boys and girls to dare to go forth into all the newness and greatness of life which Peter embodied. What the underprivileged fisherman became and accomplished is possible to every other audacious disciple of Jesus.

HIS SUCCESSFUL YEAR

The last year has been a good one for Victor Fleming, Paramount director. The list of his recent productions includes such successes as Clara Bow's "Mantrap," "The Rough Riders" and most recently Emil Jannings's first American-made picture, "The Way of All Flesh," said to be one of the greatest pictures Paramount ever released. Fleming is now directing Clara Bow in "Hula."

"Scenic" Feature Unfolds Amazing Dramatic Plot; Where the Note of Artificiality Originates in Many Current Photoplays

And it is one of the most ... features, that was ever done without a fictional plot, ... has a plot that is so vital and dramatic that it is almost [illegible]

I LOOK for the next exploits to be along the path of high adventure and courage. Pictures so far have caught very little of that epic note that goes into the flight over the North Pole or one across the Atlantic by airplane, rushing around the world in a score or so days, or any of those feats that are now particularly in the spotlight. Some dextrous scenario writer will, however, catch this note, and it won't be something so cheaply obvious, say, as a poor imitation of a flight by Lindbergh, but it will sound that note none the less.

The trouble with most adventure pictures so far is that they have been insincere—that they haven't touched the chord of humanness. They have had forty-dozen villains, skulking villains of the old ten-twenty-thirt' type, but little that is real of the war against time or the elements that go into the making of such an adventure.

THERE is the crowd spirit which hasn't been touched on as yet, but which King Vidor may visualize in his picture titled "The Crowd." Certainly it is a theme of vast possibilities, and it affords a genu-

VILLAIN BECOMES BOLD HERO

George Bancroft Now to be Starred in Melodramas by Lasky

Among the few upstanding, forthright villains who have turned into heroes by popular demand is George Bancroft.

As a scoundrel of the screen he won the sobriquet of "the smiling villain." He could bare a fang with the best of them and chuckle softly after a quiet, wholesome murder or two.

But he is such a magnetic character actor that exhibitors, speaking for the public, began an insistent call for him in starring pictures. And no matter how much of a villain a man may be in films when he be-

I would turn down. But, you know, you've got to be fair about the whole business when you are under contract, got to 'play ball.'"

He shrugged. "I suppose I have a reputation for being picky and choosey," he admitted. "Even now, I find myself turning down as many roles as I accept."

One of the principal reasons for this, he added, is that he has permanently disowned the black-hearted villain who first brought him into prominence on the silver sheet. This was the ruthless mountaineer in the never-to-be-forgotten picturization of "Tol'able David," and the manner in which he came to play it was brought about by happy accident, indeed.

Torrence was a baritone in Gilbert & Sullivan opera when he came to America after years on the British stage. He had no thought of doing picture work. When Henry King, casting for his contemplated filming of the Hergesheimer story, sent for Torrence and asked him to act in it, adding further that the role was one

BEING KID BROTHER IS HARD LIFE

Carroll Nye Plays Fourteen "Youngster" Roles During Screen Career

Carroll Nye wants to grow up!

Yes, indeed! Playing fourteen "kid brothers" in two years gets monotonous—even if on every occasion one is connected with a different family and can claim relationship to the most prominent stellar lights of the day.

"Kid-brother roles are all the same," he said, "you're either the weakling or the coward, you betray your family, friends or yourself . . . then you have a fight . . . and always die! Perhaps it's the best thing."

It was two years ago that Carroll, young and good-looking, started his career as a motion-picture actor. At that time he was the wise-cracking brother of Corinne Griffith in "Classified." His last "kid brother" complication was with Monte Blue in "The Black Diamond Express," the current attraction at the Uptown Theater.

"It's not that I'm exactly dissatis-

THEY DO COME BACK

Marie Dressler and Polly Moran Appear as First Feminine Comedy Teams

BY MARQUIS BUSBY

The stars never come back. Around this apparently inoffensive five-word sentence have been written enough sob stories which if laid end-to-end would undoubtedly reach some place or other. The idea persists, however, Once a star leaves the screen or stage he or she is through. He can buy a chicken ranch and try persuading the biddies to lay eggs, or she can open a tea room and serve weak pekoe tea and stale crumpets, but certainly the studio gate or the stage doro is barred to them forever.

Applesauce and hooey, descending into the expressive vernacular, so to speak.

Marie Dressler and Polly Moran are two of the many stars who have actually "come back." Both of these sprightly ladies, no longer in the Baby Star classification, have again scored a success after being "gone" for some time.

FOURTEEN YEARS AGO

It has been very nearly fourteen years since Marie Dressler appeared in "Tillie's Punctured Romance," and the two "Tillie" sequels that followed. For the past several years she has been living in retirement in New York. It has been two or three years since Polly Moran was in the "Sheriff Nell" comedies at Sennett's. Since then she herself says she has been playing an "Alice-Sit-by-the-Telephone" role, waiting for studio calls that rarely came.

"The Callahans and the Murphys," showing at Loew's State this week, serves as the medium in which the two "come back." In the picture they play, as far as I know, one of the first stellar feminine comedy teams in screen history. Of course there was no reason to suppose that the sometimes politely called gentler sex would let the Bancrofts and Beerys, the Murrays and Conklins have all the comedy honors. In the picture they play the warm-hearted Irish ladies, staunch friendly enemies.

Talking to these ladies at the same time is something like having ringside seats at a circus, but in

THE SLIGHTLY BORED GIRL

Louise Brooks's World-Weary Manner Merely Covers Sensitive Disposition

BY ALMA WHITAKER

A slim little girl of 20, with a sleek black straight bob beneath a pale green sport hat, riding in a handsome sport-model automobile behind a chauffeur, with a slightly bored world-weary air.

That is my first impression of Louise Brooks, featured in the still-another college picture, "Rolled Stockings," at the Metropolitan this week. In fact, at first I wasn't at all sure I could live up to the hauteur standard set by this sophisticated little Louise—who someone described as "a little Kansas girl with a Broadway complex"—until I discovered that that is really a protective little pose she adopts to cover a sensitive disposition.

In spite of the fact that this Louise seems destined for sparkling comedy, cheeky flapper roles, in spite of the fact that she was a successful Ziegfeld Follies girl, in spite of the fact that she is Eddie Sutherland's wife and prefers dogs to children, in spite of the fact that she told me she preferred New York to Los Angeles, because there isn't anything to do out here, or any place to go, still, I think Louise is a shy, sensitive girl with a remarkably intelligent head on her shoulders, and not half as superbly blase as she endeavors to appear.

SPEAKS FRANKLY

Anyway, I like reserved and slightly conceited people if they have something to back it. They are an interesting change from the bubbly good mixers who effervesce bright conversation. Louise thinks before she speaks—and then speaks very frankly. And why wouldn't she be justified in feeling a bit superior, basking in success at 20, with five years of experience behind her? It began when she took dancing lessons with Ruth St. Denis in New York, and was taken on tour almost at once. Three years' valuable training. This was followed by a chorus part in George White's "Scandals," in company with Dolores and Helen Costello and Dorothy Sebastian, all four of them since having become famous. Then with $300 and any amount of pluck, the then 17-year-old Louise goes to London and Paris and makes no end of a hit giving them their first taste of the Charleston.

BABY FAT!

"I did it very badly, too," sighs Louise, seriously. "And I was fat, you know. Baby fat." And she sighs at the absurd memory.

Anyway, Ziegfeld must have liked baby fat, and it was while she was with him that they saw her and took picture tests and gave her a contract—and then "they didn't do a thing about it, for some reason or other." But, by and by, in their own good time, they put her in "The American Venus," and "she had to rush through places in a bathing suit with Ford Sterling."

"Everyone kept saying I was a punk actress and all giving me advice," she sighs, with a weary little smile. "But perhaps it was good for me. Anyway, I decided to learn how to act. I am very lazy when I am not working, never want to go anywhere or do anything but play around the house in fancy pajamas, but when I work I put my whole heart into it."

So, she must have learned rather well, for in a year and a half Louise has been in pictures she has appeared in "Evening Clothes," "The Show-off," "A Social Celebrity," "The Old Army Game," "Just Another Blonde," and now, after this "Rolled Stockings," she is to play

LINDBERGH IS FAVORITE STAR

News Reels Showing Flyer Pack New York Houses

"Secret Studio" is Futile Attempt at Artistry

Leatrice Joy Excellent as Star of "Vanity"

BY NORBERT LUSK

NEW YORK, June 18.—Col. Charles A. Lindbergh is so completely New York's favorite screen star that his appearance in the news reels at every theater has won a response that no feature could possibly hope to surpass. To the Fox-Case Movietone at the Roxy goes the honor of presenting him in the most effective and intimate fashion by means of a complete record of the celebration in Washington and New York, by which not only are the accompanying sounds perfectly reproduced and synchronized, but the photography is of an unusually high order. Attempts to record the same events by other processes only show the superiority of that sponsored by Fox. The scope of the Movietone in relation to news events is unlimited and is thought to be far more satisfying than the usual program vaudeville and operatic artists.

On Wednesday the Warners were hosts at a swanky luncheon at the Park Lane in honor of Dolores Costello, who is here to make a personal appearance at the opening of "Old San Francisco" next week. Miss Costello is a newcomer so far as the local critics are concerned and the impression she made on them was wholly in keeping with their conception of her diffidence and charm on the screen.

UNFORTUNATE STORY

It is regretted by everyone that so outstanding a star as Lon Chaney cannot be provided with a more satisfactory vehicle than "The Unknown" at the Capitol. By the sheer power and depth of his acting he rises above the deficiencies of the picture, which makes the lack of a perfect story all the more to be deplored. "The Unknown" has elements of striking novelty, but at the same time it leaves a great deal open to conjecture and its sudden ending makes the story appear incomplete. This should not be, but it is recalled that the same faults were apparent in "The Road to Mandalay" and it may be that in cutting a Chaney picture so much footage has to be eliminated in order to achieve program length that certain threads of interest must be cut short.

The fact remains that Lon Chaney is a dominant figure on the screen, has made for himself a unique position and his artistry commands respect no matter what faults the critics may find in his pictures. Joan Crawford is a seductive and glamorous figure in the new film and is photographed much more effectively than has some times been her lot. John George has been commended for an arresting performance, and Norman Kerry's brawn has won its meed of praise.

WRITHING STAR

"The Secret Studio," at the Roxy, is thought to have no place in Broadway's largest and most beautiful theater. Ten years ago it would have been considered daring and artistic, but unfortunately today finds it a terrible picture, its most obvious secret being why it should have been twice remade when one glance at either the original story or the treatment would have indicated the hopelessness of the subject to any but a fatuous optimist. tured ahead of everyone else, contributes one of her writhing performances in which she apparently attempts to emulate an eel. She is irritating beyond belief and the free display of her pretty figure does not mitigate the utter ineptitude of her flings at expressing anything but coyness. The critics have found a silver lining to this dark cloud, however, and have singled out Clifford Holland for honorable mention, one of them going so far as to say that any man who is able to remain likeable in the priggish role given him to play should be in the top rank.

Much to the surprise of everyone W. C. Fields has put over a successful comedy in "Running Wild" at the Paramount, where Paul Whrteman's band might be expected to atone for any lapse in the selection of the accompanying picture. The new Fields picture is considered the best he has made and is all the more appealing because of its unpretentiousness. Gregory Lacava's direction is highly praised but for an occasional recourse to slapstick where it was not warranted. Altogether Fields, who is thought by the majority never to have fulfilled the promise held out by his first screen appearance in "Sally of the Sawdust," has suddenly blossomed forth in a picture that has won unanimous praise.

JUST BY COMPARISON

Leatrice Joy in "Vanity" is the attraction at the Hippodrome, a house with a growing reputation for never having shown a first-class picture, and the present one cannot, by the wildest stretch of optimism be considered out of that dark category. Although when it is remembered that "The Secret Studio" holds forth at the Roxy, the matter of intrinsic merit will readily be seen to figure not at all in the allotment of Broadway's film fare. By the side of it "Vanity" is pure inspiration and Leatrice Joy becomes by comparison a Duse.

She is afforded opportunity for her best performance in many a day, one that would rank with the best of the month in a less silly picture, but given some of the situations she is asked to make plausible it is doubtful if the greatest actress in the world could do better. It was an unforgiveable lapse of judgment to permit a society girl, even one lured by vanity, to go forth in the night in orchids and diamonds to explore the harbor with a comparative stranger and those responsible for this false move should not blame the star for the giggles the sequence evoked.

"Lost At The Front," with Charlie Murray and George Sidney, is current at the Strand. It is considered a frankly vulgar specimen of studio humor, but it must be said in justification that considerable laughter has broken forth as a result of its ribaldry and in the long run, which has nothing to do with its single week at the Strand, it will probably stack up as a paying proposition.

"The Sunset Derby" is at the Broadway and averages as a good melodrama, with some of the finest racing scenes ever photographed in spite of being one of the most uneven pictures. William Collier, Jr., has scored with his usual fine performance. The Cameo is reviving Douglas Fairbanks's "The Three Musketeers" and the Fifty-Fifth street cinema offers "Beggar on Horseback."

Rex Ingram's "The Garden of Allah" will shortly have its premiere at the Embassy Theater, thus bringing to a close the comparatively brief run of "Annie Laurie," which opened on May 11. "Camille" closes tonight at the Globe and "Beau Geste" likewise moves from the Rialto. It is expected that King Vidor and his company will return to Los Angeles tomorrow following several days in Pittsburgh where certain scenes for "The Crowd" were shot.

STARS RETURN AS LAUGH TEAM

fact the setting was a luncheon table at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio.

"Now, me, I'm plebelian," began Polly Moran, relieving the strain in the atmosphere, if any. "I'm going to order pork spareribs and red cabbage."

"You don't worry about diet?" I asked.

"Heavens, no," she answered. "I eat anything and say anything."

However, Marie Dressler was more cautious. She ate chicken broth and cottage cheese.

Polly began to elaborate on her plebeian tendencies. She doesn't like high-class plays.

"They're too high brow for me," she admitted. "I like burlesque shows. When I go downtown I drop into one of the little theaters on Main street and see the pictures made ten years ago. The theater smells like a goulash but what a laugh I have."

Marie and Polly did not meet for the first time during the making of "The Callahans and the Murphys." They played together in "Little Robinson Crusoe" back in the '90's. Now Polly is disconsolate at the thought of Marie returning to New York. But Marie is looking forward to a vacation in Europe after a short visit in her beloved New York.

SPOILED BY GOTHAM

"New York spoils me," she confessed. "I've lived there so long and played on the stage there for so many years that everyone calls me Marie from Mayor Jimmie Walker to the traffic policemen."

Incidentally she has one serious fault to find with Hollywood. She goes to the studio and everyone talks pictures. She goes to a party and everyone talks pictures. It's pictures, pictures, pictures. She admits it becomes rather deadly.

"It isn't that way with me," Marie continued. "As an example I like to talk of my club and what it is accomplishing."

The "club" is a likely-looking skyscraper for women in New York. With all the conveniences of the most expensive men's clubs, a room and bath can be had for $14 a week. Marie lives there. She is one of the founders and has interested many famous people in its welfare.

Marie Dressler, of course, has been one of the outstanding comediennes on the American stage for thirty-eight years. Now, she says she is through.

SHE SAVED MONEY

"I've been a good business woman. I knew that I had to save my money . . . knew that the time would come when I would need it. Now I don't have to worry. The next time you hear of me I may be managing a hotel. I could do it, and I'd like it."

"I'll probably be carrying a bunch of keys," chimed in Polly.

The two told me of the thrill of seeing "The Callahans and the Murphys" previewed. After it was shown the entire audience arose and turned to the back of the house where they were sitting, and applauded.

"I don't like to say much about the picture because I am in it," said Marie.

"I don't mind," smiled Polly. "I ask everyone I meet if he has seen a preview. If he hasn't I tell him what he has missed. The theater should hire me to ballyhoo."

Just as we were leaving the manager of the studio wardrobe department stopped and gazed at Polly.

"These clothes are all my own . . . not good perhaps, but still mine," said Polly with considerable emphasis.

"Are you sure," he twitted her. "We've been missing a lot, lately."

Dorothy in "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes." "I am going to like that one," she smiles, enthusiastically, and artfully implying that she hasn't thought much of any of her previous roles. "They didn't mean anything," she says sadly.

"Did you marry because you really wanted to or because it just happened?" I asked personally.

"Because I really wanted to," she said simply. You see, Louise was working in New York, while Eddie Sutherland was stationed out here almost ever since they have been married—until Christmas.

"And aren't you going to raise some nice little flappers?" I suggested.

"I am not. But I have three cute dogs. I have just bought a camera and am having a wonderful time taking pictures of them," she said sweetly.

"Tell me about this 'Rolled Stockings' picture," I begged. "I shall have to write this story without seeing it."

"I really don't know anything about it. I never see the rushes. It has nothing to do with rolled stockings, that is just the Lasky touch," she smiled sweetly.

But, all the same, when we talked about rival youthful actresses, this Louise was generous in her praise—particularly of Janet Gaynor in "Seventh Heaven," and of Clara Bow, who is a "wonderful actress." And I caught a glimpse of something deeper when she told me graphically about the despondency that prevailed in the New York studios when it was announced that all production would be moved out here — thus throwing hundreds of people out of of grim realism, Torrence simply stared.

ACTOR DISOWNS VILLAIN ROLES

"Why, Henry," he expostulated at length, "I'm a comedian!"

"Not any more, you're not," decided Henry; and that settled it.

SUCCESSION OF ROLES

After "Tol'able David" was released, Torrence became too good a bet to be overlooked. He appeared in "The Prodigal Judge" for Vitagraph, and shortly after, signed his Paramount contract. He repeated his earliest success in "The Covered Wagon," but this time in a semihumorous characterization and not as a straight heavy, and this decided him definitely against the latter type.

His association with Cecil De Mille for "The King of Kings" came after he had proved his versatility in many Paramounts. "We all of us felt that it was a privilege to be working in the biblical picture," he said. "Mr. De Mille plugged away without rest, and, besides the production work, he was often interrupted to settle this or that detail of the contemplated merger with Pathe. I remember one evening on the lot, when we had been shooting steadily all day and there was no sign of a let-up, he came over to speak to me for a moment.

"After a minute I asked him, 'Don't you ever get tired?'

"He smiled a little. 'I haven't got time to be tired,' he said."

Torrence's most recent picture was "Captain Salvation" for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Now he is finishing a bootlegger role with John Gilbert in "Twelve Miles Out" for the same company. What he will do next is problematical. It may be a part in "Sadie Thompson," if Gloria Swanson goes ahead with production on that Maugham story; it may be in a Dick Barthelmess picture; and it may be neither. Torrence doesn't know, himself.

SPECIALIZES ON DIX

Ray Harris, Paramount scenarist, might almost be termed the Richard Dix specialist of the writing department. His concentration on Dix stories started with "The Quarterback," which Harris adapted, in the East. Then, in collaboration with Sam Mintz, he wrote the screen version of "Man Power," recently completed. After this, in Hollywood, Harris drew a new team-mate, John Goodrich, with whom he has just finished the adaptation of "Shanghai Bound," a story of present-day China, on which Dix will start work shortly.

VILLAIN IS BOLD HERO

comes a star he is automatically a hero.

Bancroft proved this in "Underworld," Ben Hecht's story of gangland for Paramount in which he was cast as a modern Attila the Hun, plundering ruthlessly in a metropolitan American city. This picture has not yet been released, but it is persistent talk that Bancroft walks away with the honors.

At Paramount studio yesterday Bancroft was in a role neither villainous nor heroic. In further proof of his versatility he was going through the antics of a comedian with a fellow laugh-maker of fame, Chester Conklin. He was rigged up like a locomotive engineer for the purposes of "Tell It to Sweeney," in which he and Conklin are co-starred.

It was a very serious Bancroft, however, who took time to tell an interviewer things about himself.

"Paramount is giving me a great break," he said. "I am getting the opportunity now that I have wished for during many years as an actor. Every role that has been given me to play during the last year has meant something big and splendid in my career. Characterization to me is a matter of deep study and absolute sincerity of feeling. One of the parts I loved most was that of 'Happy Joe,' the rollicking, jail-breaking cowboy minstrel in 'The Rough Riders,' now showing at the Million Dollar Theater.

"This was because 'Happy Joe' was such a human, roistering sort of devil. I liked him so much that it was the most natural thing in the world to lose myself in his personality and forget myself.

"I was tremendously wrapped up in the role of Bull Weed, the gangster leader in 'Underworld,' which I recently finished. He was a huge fellow born a thousand years too late, living by his own code of taking what he wanted by force, yet square as a die with his pals.

"And, now I am to be starred in melodrama. Sometimes I feel like pinching myself. I'm not quite sure I'm awake. The possibilities before me are inspiring and I can say that I'm a truly happy man."

Bancroft, a giant over six feet in height, made his stage debut as an infant, carried before a Philadelphia theater audience by an actress who was a friend of his parents. He played child parts until he entered school.

After several years of successful legitimate work he turned his efforts toward the screen, making his first appearance in "The Journey's End," his second in "The Prodigal Judge" and his third in "Driven." He has been on the screen for eight years now.

When Rupert Julian, film director, finished the cutting of "The Country Doctor" yesterday at the De Mille studio it became the one hundred and fifty-first picture of his career, wherein he occupied the position behind the megaphone. Of course, many of his efforts were two and three reelers, but there have been some of the most pretentious film also—"The Merry Go Round" for instance, and "The Phantom of the Opera," "Beast of Berlin" and five box office hits under his present De Mille contract.

"The Country Doctor," stars Rudolph Schildkraut and features Virginia Bradford, the new "find."

ine primitive background. The emotions of the mob are always fundamental, every large city when taken en masse is a mob to itself nowadays, organized, but in a broad way fundamental. Any large city might afford the background for a story that would prove individual.

"Chang" is a forceful and a powerful picture because its background, the jungle, is primitive. The jungle of "Chang" may be duplicated or at least matched not alone in Siam but wherever forces are at work that are natural and primitive, and where the overcoming of them can furnish the leaven of drama, as it does practically always.

Actor's Trip in Air Prohibited by Film Work

Ben Lyon, the sweetheart of Billie Dove in "The Tender Hour" at the Figueroa Theater, never realized just how valuable a person he is until he tried to take an airship trip.

It was during the filming of "The Tender Hour." The First National studios had engaged a Chinese valet to care for his wardrobe and Ben discovered that he could fly an airplane. A flight was arranged and the actor looked forward eagerly to his first departure from earth. He told several friends about it. Promptly there came an outcry from his employers. His contract forbade the taking of unnecessary risks. The company had furthermore taken out a large insurance and the insurance company threatened to cancel the policy if he so much as stepped into an airplane. Lastly, George Fitzmaurice, the director, protested so vigorously that the trip was abandoned.

About the time that this disappointment was happening to her leading man, Billie Dove was spending most of her time weeping. Not because she didn't like her role of the rich American girl, but because Mr. Fitzmaurice had started the picture with the most dramatic scenes in the picture. "Emotional parts affect me so deeply," says Miss Dove, "that it takes me days to get back to my normal cheerfulness."

Duo Engaged by Studio as Film Titlers

Dwinnelle Benthall and Rufus McCosh have just signed a new contract with First National as a reward for their success in titling "Lonesome Ladies," "See You in Jail" and "Framed."

Miss Benthall graduated into titling from the publicity staff of the old Ince studio. Formerly she was dramatic editor of the Baltimore American and also taught English in a woman's college in Richmond, Va. Rufus McCosh was a flour broker in Philadelphia, but always hankered after an inky career. Their marriage resulted in a business partnership.

At present they are at work on "The Stolen Bride," which is sending them deep into the history of Hungary for research. This will be Alexander Korda's first American picture, now being built around Billie Dove.

Carthay Circle.

"Seventh Heaven," the film drama adapted from the stage play of the same name, continues as the attraction at the Carthay Circle Theater.

Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell are seen in the leading roles as Diane and Chico.

An elaborate Jack Laughlin prologue proceeds the film offering.

Chinese

The long heralded "King of Kings," continues as the popular attraction at the elaborate new Chinese Theater. The film is said to be one of the finest ever produced. The cast is a noteworthy one, and the prologue preceding the offering up to the usual Grauman standard.

Criterion

"Flesh and the Devil," a screen adaption of Henry Sudermann's novel "The Undying Past," is now offered as the attraction at the Criterion Theater.

Playing the featured roles are Greta Garbo and Jack Gilbert. Others include Lars Hanson, Barbara Kent and a noteworthy cast.

Orange Grove

"Slums of Berlin," a true story of the underworld of the German capital, continues as the attraction at the Orange Grove Theater. In spite of the alleged daring theme and sequences, it has been decided to admit mixed audiences to the production.

Egyptian

"Topsy and Eva," starring the inimitable team of the Duncan Sisters, is now in the first week of its run at the Hollywood Egyptian Theater. The film version is said to be equally as captivating and amusing as the far-famed musical production.

As the prologue, the Duncan Sisters, assisted by members of the "Topsy and Eva" cast, will present portions of the musical comedy version.

Rialto

"Senorita," the lively comedy, starring Bebe Daniels, is offered this week as the Rialto attraction. The picture is said to be a highly amusing one, and one of Bebe's best comedy efforts.

In the supporting cast are James Hall and William Powell. Clarence Badger directed the feature.

Uptown

"The Black Diamond Express," with Monte Blue at the throttle, is the current attraction at the Uptown Theater today, with Edna Murphy playing opposite the chief engineer and the supporting cast including William Demarest, Myrtle Stedman, Claire McDowell, Carrol Nye and others.

Monte plays the role of an engineer who never misses his schedule until his roaring express train collides with Edna Murphy's joy-riding automobile. From then on, bandits and everything conspire to keep Monte off his schedule.

Dave Good and his Revelers, with Oscar Taylor and a group of specialties performers, offer a tuneful program of melodies and capers on the stage.

Forum

Syd Chaplin has reached the pinnacle of his remarkable career as a comedian in "The Missing Link," directed by Charles Reisner for Warner Brothers now the Forum attraction. As a woe begone down-and-outer hanging about the steamship docks in London, Chaplin is pressed into service by a famous anthropologist whose servant has gone back to get some missing baggage. Aboard the ship, the comedian gets entangled in a series of risible experiences that result in his failure to get off the boat before it sails. He changes places with the British nobleman in the hunt for the "missing link" in Africa, and succeeds in his quest with much other good fortune into the bargain. Ruth Hiatt, Tom McGuire, Craufurd Kent, Sam Baker, Akka, William Steele, George Nardelli and Nick Cogley comprise the remainder of the cast.

On the stage Andreas Pavley and Serge Oukrainsky present their ballet, the bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah." The Forum Theater also offers Big Boy in "Atta Boy." Misha Gegna presents the Forum symphony orchestra in an overture, and has written the musical setting for "The Missing Link." Organ numbers and the score for "Atta Boy" are played by Price Dunlavy, Jr., Forum Theater organist.

Figueroa

The "Tender Hour," a romantic drama featuring Billie Dove and Ben Lyon is the current attraction offered for the week at the Figueroa Theater. The film deals with the story of a beautiful girl who, believing her lover dead, enters into a marriage with a Russian duke at the demand of the father. After the wedding she discovers that her lover is alive—and a thrilling series of events follow.

Montague Love is seen as the "heavy" in the cast.

Loew's State

Kathleen Norris' story of Irish life is brought to the screen in "The Callahans and the Murphys"—at Loew's State this week—with one of the greatest feminine comedy teams in motion-picture history—Marie Dressler and Poly Moran heading the cast which also includes Sally O'Neil, Lawrence Gray, Eddie Gribbon and Gertrude Olmstead.

The picture is mainly for laughing purposes—with heart-throbs and romance interspersed. There are two Irish families—each with a beautiful daughter and each with a grown son—and the fun is fast and furious with bootleggers and prize fighters and hobnobbing with reducing experts.

On the stage Fanchon and Marco give their idea of "Petting" in their "Petters" idea—starring Jane Green—supreme siren of syncopation in a second triumphant week—with Earl Capps and the Sunkist Beauties—with Lynn Cowan—"Dr. Jazz" leading the Loew's State Greater Band.

Million Dollar

Frank L. Newman announces that beginning next Friday the Million Dollar Theater will present the picture which has been heralded by New York critics as one of the most exciting moments in motion-picture history. The picture "Chang" is the work of Ernest Schoedsack and Merian Cooper who plunged into the Siamese jungle with cameras and provisions and after many months emerged with this remarkable picture. Continuity and story theme are said to characterize the picture which is in no sense a travelogue.

"The Rough Riders," current attraction, closes Thursday.

GLADYS McCONNELL DISDAINS SPORTS

Usually the biography of an actress in motion pictures contains a top-heavy list of the athletic diversions which she enjoys, or says she enjoys—and limits to which she will go to maintain perfect health, a graceful muscularity and a symmetric figure. It's quite customary to follow Hollywood's best athletic style in reporting what a charming girl Miss So-and-so is because she's such an all-around athletic wonder, more particularly among new "discoveries."

Gladys McConnell, Harry Langdon's leading woman in his latest First National production and a Wampas Baby Star, shows unusual frankness and a defiance of current conventions by failing to crowd her time with all of these achievements. She plays golf but a little, tennis is an occasional diversion, and numerous other sports are more or less neglected by her. She swims a little for pleasure, and has taken up acrobatic dancing several times as a diversion rather than a schedule of physical reconstruction.

Her one hobby outdoors that becomes a matter of first call on days of leisure is the pursuance of inviting trails, by horseback, automobile or on foot. Exploration of rural and mountain sections not too close to paved highways, billboards or the regular routes of the tourists' marathon, provides her with more thrills and pleasure than any amount of fashionable athletics.

NEW FACIAL MAKE-UP

Renee Adoree is beginning all over again as far as film make-up is concerned. She is perfecting an entirely new facial adornment for the special effects in "Rose Marie," in which she will appear in the title role at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios.

GAYNOR, FARRELL RISE TO STARDOM IS UNPARALLELED

The Cinderella fairy story has been the basis of many a movie plot during the years since pictures have become a popular form of amusement. Cynical critics have scoffed and ridiculed tales of beautiful but poor heroines and heroes reaching the top of fame's ladder through luck, coincidence or hard work.

But two young stars in Hollywood today have the greatest respect for the old fairy tale.

They are Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell who less than two years ago were just members of the movie mob struggling to earn a few dollars a day as extras on the various studio lots around the city.

When "Seventh Heaven" was announced to be produced by Fox there was a rush of applicants for the roles of Chico and Diane that has never been equalled in Hollywood's history. It seemed as if almost every actor and actress in Hollywood had long held the secret ambition to portray one of these characters on the screen.

Frank Borzage, the director, spent several months testing for the roles. Broadway stars, film players of reputation, extras, all went before the Klieg lights. But the director could not find just the types he wanted to portray the youth and enthusiasm which he thought the roles demanded.

Finally he picked Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell as possibilities and following severe tests these two almost unknowns were chosen.

At the Carthay Circle Theater now are these two former extras giving a performance applauded by critics and public alike. Janet is the little Paris street waif bravely smiling through her tears and gradually but surely learning the great lesson of courage and faith as it is unconsciously preached by Charles, the courageous and upward-gazing Chico, who works in the sewers but lives among the stars.

Frank Borzage, the director, has been given praise for his inspiration of the two youngsters and his development of the story.

The success of Charles Farrell and Janet Gaynor, two "youngsters," in a screen production of the size of "Seventh Heaven," and their rapid rise to stardom from the ranks, will serve as an incentive for thousands of others, it is declared.

CHRISTIE FORCES ADDED TO PARAMOUNT PROGRAM

A group of the most popular stars and players in the comedy field will be added to the Paramount specialties program of short films by the annexing of the Christie product of two-reel comedies, it is reported. Featured stars in the Christie line-up will include such comedians as Bobby Vernon, Billy Dooley, Jimmie Adams, Neal Burns, Anne Cornwall and Jack Duffy.

In point of time Neal Burns has been with the Christie organization the longest, coming with Christie eleven years ago when the producer left the Universal company to form his own independent organization.

Bobby Vernon joined Christie nearly ten years ago and had previously been with Mack Sennett, in whose comedies Vernon had been co-starred with Gloria Swanson. This year so far he has had "Wife Shy," "Hoot Mon" and "Duck Out," rated as exceptional comedies.

Jimmie Adams has been with the Christie organization since 1923 and has been presented the last two seasons in a series of his own "Jimmie Adams" comedies. He has been seen lately in such comedies as "Beauty a La Mud," "Shell Socked," "Wild and Woozy" and "Here Comes Precious," and is usually featured in eccentric characterizations.

Jack Duffy's whiskers are his trademark. In the current year's pictures Duffy is in "Uppercuts," "Dummy Love," "Hoot Mon," "Cool Off" and "Chicken Feathers," with Anne Cornwall.

Billy Dooley only joined the Christie organization two years ago, but his sailor characters made an instantaneous hit. He was recruited from the Orpheum Circuit over which he has done his act "The Misfit Sailor." His comedies have all been nautical in flavor, with such titles as "A Dippy Tar," "A Briny Boob," "Sailor Beware," "Have Courage," "Dumb Belles" and "Wild Wallops."

To add further variety to the program three of the pictures in the current series of ten, Christie is featuring a popular girl star in Anne Cornwall who comes to the Christie short-features program from appearance as leading lady in prominent long features of other companies. In this year's schedule of Christie Comedies, Miss Cornwall is starred in "Hold Still," "Cool Off" and "Chicken Feathers," which are rated among the best of the year's program.

SCREEN OR STAGE ASK DUNCANS

Is Comedy Work Better in Shadow or Spoken Drama, They Question

Does the screen rate higher as a medium for comedy than the stage?

Hollywood apparently is engrossed by this problem to judge by the comments among the crowds at Grauman's Egyptian Theater to experience the novelty of the Duncan sisters starring on the stage in Sid Grauman's elaborate prologue to "Topsy and Eva," their initial United Artists screen production.

Although opinions are divided, the biggest proportion seem to agree that the comediennes are just as funny, if not funnier, in celluloid as in person, after enjoying opportunity to make a direct comparison of spoken and shadow comedy.

Starting as a cyclone of laughs from the time "Topsy," impersonated by Rosetta, bursts into the film with characteristic audacity and begins her pugnacious onslaught on Gibson Gowland, as "Simon Legree," the tide of mirth can not be held back, by even the sweetness of Little Eva.

As a travesty on the time-honored vehicle "Uncle Tom's Cabin," "Topsy and Eva," was written especially to bring to the screen that unique type of mirth that made the Duncan Sisters known on the stage.

The production minimizes the more serious aspects of Harriet Beecher Stowe's masterpiece. There is just enough of pathos left in between the riotous adventures of the volatile pickaninny who "just growed" to pull the heart strings of the audience.

Rosetta and Vivian are to star in the prologue at every performance during the run of "Topsy and Eva" at the Egyptian.

PARAMOUNT DEDICATES FILM TO LINDBERGH

Col. Charles Lindbergh, San Antonio, Tex., and "Wings," Paramount's production of the war in the air, are marked with strange coincidence. San Antonio, where Lindbergh won his spurs in the art of flying, is where "Wings" was made with the flyer's companion's as actors and there the production was previewed before Secretary of War Dwight Davis and other government officials. The picture will be dedicated to Lindbergh, Paramount has announced.

CEBALLOS TO HAVE DANCING SCHOOL

Larry Ceballos, famous New York theatrical producer and dance instructor, who came to the Coast last summer to put on the first Hollywood Music Box Revue, is about to join the ranks of Los Angeles dance masters an dannounces that he will open his own studio at the Egan School Monday. Mr. Ceballos who has put on the numbers in scores of Broadway's biggest musical comedy hits including six Greenwich Village Follies, "Big Boy," Al Jolson's present vehicle, and "America," one of this season's New York hits, attained tremendous local popularity through the success of his numbers in the first Music Box Revue. His Serpentine number featuring the famous Doll Dance by Nacio Herb Brown, became a national sensation and was copied far and wide, not only in cabarets and vaudeville acts but even in musical shows. After the Music Box Revue closed he was in great demand at the Hollywood studios and introduced dance sequences in a number of screen hits. During the past few weeks he has been putting on the dances for Sid Grauman's prologue featuring the Duncan Sisters, now playing at the Egyptian Theater.

The director, Mr. John Smallman, announces that a great number of new singers have affiliated themselves with the chorus for the summer concerts, but over 200 more voices are desired. Besides the Boito number on August 9th, the ensemble choral numbers will be sung with Eugene Goossens conducting. Entrance fees and dues have been eliminated during the summer months.

Singers from both Glendale and Hollywood have become a permanent part of the Oratorio organization.

SMALLMAN CHOIR SINGS IN REDLANDS

The Smallman A Capella Choir are opening the season at the Redlands Bowl on July 1, assisted by the Lotus Girls' Trio. The program will be similar to the one given at the Philharmonic in May, when the critics and public acclaimed this unaccompanied choir. Alexandro Koshetz, the famous conductor of the Ukranian Chorus (this chorus was Mr. Smallman's inspiration when he founded his own choir,) said after hearing the Smallman Choir: "Such perfect enunciation, ravishing tone colors, rich chordings and strict discipline, which is the first requisite of all successful conducting, would astonish any director of the keenest sensibilities. I may say with great pleasure that never have I heard such superb choral singing in America."

SINGING CLUBS TO HONOR DIRECTOR

J. B. Poulin

The Ellis Club has prepared a brilliant program for its closing concert of its thirty-ninth season to be given in Philharmonic Auditorium next Wednesday evening. The occasion will mark the twenty-fifth year or the 100th consecutive concert of the Ellis Club to be rendered under the direction of Prof. J. B. Poulin, disitnguished musician of national reputation.

Not only has Prof. Poulin directed the Ellis Club for the last quarter of a century, but he has also during the same period wielded the baton before the equally well-known body of women singers, the Women's Lyric Club. This talented body of women singers has accepted the invitation of the Ellis Club to participate in the quarter-century celebration of its leader's service to them and will render two numbers with orchestral accompaniment as follows: "Slave's Dream" (Mathews,) and "Entrance of the Gods in Valhalla," from Wagner's "Das Rheingold." Harold Proctor will appear as tenor soloist with the Women's Lyric Club in the latter number.

Another feature of this historical event will be the rendition of "Brier Rose" (Debois,) and "Maiden with the Lips So Rosy" (Gaul,) which two numbers were on the program of the first concert of the Ellis Club under the leadership of Prof. Poulin.

The Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra will appear with the Ellis Club in Felician David's Ode "The Desert," the spoken lines of which will be read by the well-known actor, Hobart Bosworth, while the lovely tenor solo part will be sung by Ralph Laughlin.

The ensemble numbers to be given by the Ellis Club, with Mrs. M. Hennion Robinson at the piano, include "A Song of Fellowship" (Gaul,) "Were I a King" (Speaks,) and the Finale from Arthur Sullivan's "The Gondoliers." The concert will close with the singing of the ever-popular Strauss "Blue Danube Waltz" with full orchestral accompaniment.

J. B. Poulin was born in Quebec, Can., of a musical family. At an early age his father taught him the violin. At the age of ten he entered the Boys' and Men's A Capella Choir of seventy voices. At 15 he joined the Symphony Orchestra, playing the flute. In 1880 he went to Toledo, O., where he began his vocal studies with Henry F. Stowe, English tenor of note. He sang and directed oratorios and operas through the Middle West and was choir master of St. Francis de Sales Cathedral for eleven years when he came to Los Angeles. Since 1901 he has become active in developing a better standard of music in this community, was soloist for the Emanuel Presbyterian Church of Los Angeles and the First Presbyterian Church of Pasadena, the First Methodist Church of Los Angeles, and choir master of the Temple Baptist Church twelve years, the First Methodist Church of Hollywood three years. He has directed and sung many oratorios including the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven twice, also directed the Pasadena Women's Club, the Glendale and Monrovia Choral clubs, Scottish Rite Male Chorus and Shrine Chanters, the Treble Clef Club two years, the Women's Lyric Club twenty-three years and the Ellis Club twenty-five years.

He became a citizen of the United States nearly forty years ago, has been a member of the Chamber of Commerce and the City Club for several years and charter member of the Gamut Club Musicians Guild, the Music Teachers' Association, and member of the Artland and Pro-Musica societies. Many of his pupils have become prominent in concert and church work.

BELCHER DEVELOPS STARS

Nearly fifty dance students of the Ernest Belcher School of Dancing are now twinkling their way to fame by way of their flashing ballet slippers on Broadway, New York, in the night clubs and revues of Europe, in the movies in Los Angeles, or via the leading vaudeville circuits.

The most notable of the list is Lina Basquette, who was prima ballerina of the Ziegfeld Follies until her marriage a short while ago to Sam Warner; Dorothy Dilley with the Music Box Revue two years, and now farmed in "Kitty's Kisses," and Beth Beri, leading danseuse of "Le Maire's Affairs." Miss Basquette is now here studying with Belcher in preparation to return to the stage this fall.

A partial list of other successful Belcher artists include Hazel Goodreau, dancing lead in "Rose Marie;" Ruth Sisters, Phylis Fayre, Carrie and Eddie, Mildred Burns, Dorothy Lambdin, June Hovick, heading their own acts on the Keith circuit; Louella Lee, Fay Adler and Ted Bradford, all appearing for Publix Theaters in the East; the Angelus sisters, late dancing stars of "Monkey Business;" Una Fleming, who just recently completed a coast tour of the Orpheum, and many others of equal reputation.

So numerous have Belcher artists become on Broadway, New York, that a dancer applying for a position in that city and stating she has had Belcher training will receive an immediate try-out. Many New York producers are requesting Belcher to send his talent direct to them.

Not only has he been successful in the field of legitimate theaters, but in pictures as well. During the past few years Belcher has staged dance episodes for more than 300 motion pictures that were staged by the leading directorial heads of cinemaland.

NEW YORK TEACHER GIVES UNIQUE CLASS

A class for teachers only, with the privilege of having an advanced pupil play in class and receive criticism, will be inaugurated by Paolo Gallico with his fourth season of summer classes in the art of piano playing, to be held in Los Angeles, July 18 to September 1.

This class will be limited to fifteen teachers to allow a thorough discussion of questions and problems of pedagogy. Each student may submit a list of teaching material they would like to hear played, discussed and analyzed. A special list of pedagogic works to be taken up in class has been prepared by Mr. Gallico and will be sent upon request to all those interested. Classes for artists and advanced students as in former seasons will also be held, according to Josephine Heintz, manager for Gallico.

JOINT RECITAL INTERESTS

James B. Swinney, tenor, and Howard Coombs, pianist, gave a joint recital at Chickering Hall Monday night that was largely attended. The program was a pretentious one gleaned from the popular classics of the usual concert artists' repertoire. These ambitious young men are to be commended for their devotion to their chosen art, as it has entailed sacrifices and even privation, especially upon the part of the young pianist.

CARTER WEAVER COMPANIES

The adult and juvenile dramatic companies organized by the Weaver Studio of Drama and Pantomime for play production during the summer months are well under way and several plays are in rehearsal. The classes in business speech, a regular department of the school, is meeting with the approval of the business men and women of Los Angeles. All direction is under the personal supervision of Carter Weaver.

POLLARD SCHOOL STAGES FESTIVAL

Billy Gardner

The Winifred Pollard School of Dancing and Expression, which specializes in child training, will stage a performance at the Broadway Department store Saturday.

The novel dance numbers are each especially suited to the particular child who executes it. The expression department of this school is growing rapidly.

One of the new features is the filming of a hilarious motion picture, "The Circus," by the kiddies, to be made during July and August.

EDISON CHORUS IN CONCERT

The Edison Chorus, directed by Hugo Kirchhofer, gave a creditable performance of the Chimes of Normandy last Wednesday night. It was an annual program with the assistance of such well-known soloists as Clemence Gifford, Corleen Wells and Dan Gridley.

ORIENTAL MUSIC HAS ATTRACTIONS

Savant Describes Superiority of Eastern Art for Pro-Musica

Henry Eichheim's talk on oriental music before the local chapter of Pro-Musica elicited much interest, as did the open forum on the subject, held afterward. The lecture, at which his wife played but two of his oriental impressions, took place at the Friday Morning Club and was prefaced by a greeting from Pro-Musica's president, Mrs. J. J. Carter. This popular advocate for music was welcomed warmly. The public misses Artie Mason Carter for her enthusiasm is a sparkling thing, precious because of its rarity.

Mr. Eichheim gave an all-too-brief resume of the salient points of difference between Chinese and European music which he found during his residence in the East. He made our music seem crude and childlike by his comparisons and proved that the Chinese knowledge of overtones and other subtleties is the result of centuries of musical growth, a growth of which we are in our infancy.

Instruments of wind and percussion were shown and discussed and it was remarked that in the refinement of bells alone, the Chinese are so far ahead that western bellmakers are at a complete loss to explain them.

After hearing Mr. Eichheim, it might be concluded that ultra-modern composers are reaching upward instead of downward as some annoyed detractors have suggested, and that they have a kinship with the advancement of the Far East that should be reverenced rather than scoffed at.

Mr. Eichheim touched upon the music of the Javanese, which he considers the highest order of music in the world today.

LUBOVISKI GIVES ANNUAL PROGRAM

Calmon Luboviski, popular violinist of Southern California, has decided on the 28th inst. as the date for his annual violin recital, to be held in the ballroom of the Friday Morning clubhouse.

Mr. Luboviski is building his program with the idea of appealing not only to the professional musician, but also to the layman. He will play two caprices by Frans von Vecsey, with whom he studied for six years in Berlin. These caprices are said to rank with those of Kreisler, but are seldom played because of their exceptional difficulty. Claire Mellonino will assist as his accompanist.

TERPSICHORE

The Pavley Aukrainsky school students again are receiving the benefits of professional experience, Serge Oukrainsky having produced the prologue to Syd Chaplin's "The Missing Link" at the Forum Theater. For this occasion, Mr. Oukrainsky is giving a glimpse of the operatic ballet, "Bacchanale" from "Samson and Delilah," which he put on during his association with the Chicago Grand Opera Company.

Verna Fulton, Eileen Panter, Josephine Larson and Mar Valle, artist pupils of the Arnold Tamon Studios, are appearing in the prologue to the Duncan sisters' picture at Grauman's Egyptian Theater.

Word has been received at the Earle Wallace Studios from Jack Bennet, who is dancing on the Orpheum circuit in the Keith Albee houses throughout the East.

Lolita Lane and Frank Raymond, exhibition dancers and dancing teachers, were added to the large staff of dancing teachers now at the Rose Room School of Dancing, Eighth and Spring streets, by Manager Joseph Lederer.

The intensive summer courses at Denishawn for beginning and advanced students started this week, for the usual twelve weeks' session. These classes meet for a three-hour class and practice period five days weekly, technique and dances being taught to the concentrated class pupils as well as twice-weekly students. The first four weeks of the course for advanced pupils is taught by Paul Mathis, the second four weeks by Ted Shawn and the last third of the course by Ruth St. Denis.

MUSIC NOTES

Louise Caselotti, the 16-year-old daughter of Guido Caselotti, vocal teacher and opera coach, will take the leading role in a sketch of the opera "Carmen," to be presented by her father's pupils at the Municipal Auditorium, Long Beach, Monday evening. The assisting artists will be Thomas Ames, Ruth Fisher, Stephen Gombos, Ellen Helmer for the "Carmen" presentation, and Dorothy Strong, Robert Sellon, Lois Monk, Lucille Morris, Febe Crooks, Gerald Barbeau, Ida Nolds, James Whelan, Madeleine Baker, Catherine West, Ada Roselein, Leah Pemberton for other operatic selections.

Margaret Montreville Juny will present her music class in recital the 30th inst. at the Regent Apartments.

Indorsing the Los Angeles Civic Opera Association as one of the greatest of its kind in the world, Ludovico Tomarchio, famed dramatic tenor and voice teacher of this city, last week gave two scholarships to members of the association's chorus.

By arrangement with Maestro Spadoni, who is in charge of the large choral group, Tomarchio asked the chorus to "draw lots," as there were so many good voices in their organization that he did not feel that he could draw a distinct line between any two of the singers. Two different drawings were made, on two different occasions. Those who won the scholarships, and who are now coaching with the tenor are Mario Colantoni and David L. Smith. By coincidence, both are baritones.

Blanche St. John Baker will present Enid Bertram in a piano recital Thursday evening at Chickering Hall. The program is a representative one and includes two movements of the Saint-Saens concerto in G minor with Marguerite St. John Williams at the second piano.

The business girls' section of the Catholic Woman's Club gave a musical-tea at the home of Mrs. Charles O'Reilly recently. The performers who contributed to the success of the event were: Jack Clarke, William Sullivan, Mrs. Vivian Duane Garroway, Will Garroway, James Burroughs, James O'Donnell, Miss Zillah Withrow and Leonora Eves.

Glimpses Along Theatrical Rialto

"All God's Chillun Got Wings" is a powerful treatise on the race problem from the pen of Eugene O'Neill. Dickson Morgan is presenting the play at the Majestic. "Abie's Irish Rose" has at last returned to Los Angeles where it originated several years ago. It has been one of the most phenomenal comedies in American stage history. "Abie" is housed at the Playhouse. Sketches are by Staff Artist Bob Day.

LUCILLE LA VERNE IS "MOM" TO MOUNTAIN BOYS, GIRLS

Lucille La Verne, star of "Sun-Up" now playing at Egan's Theater on Figueroa street, has nine sons and daughters and this week expects to annex her tenth.

Eight of them, she has never seen, although, she worries about their school marks and their birthdays and Christmases and keeps careful tab of their progress from short pants to long, and from half-sox to long. They are children of the Kentucky, Tennesee and Georgia mountains, whom she has "adopted" to see through school. She is "mom" to them all.

The ninth is her own daughter, Gracie, now 13, who with an 82-year-old aunt shares the fourteen-room house in which Miss La Verne makes her home while in Los Angeles.

The tenth is to be a boy of Little Pidgeon School, Gattlenburg, Tenn., chosen for "his desire and capacity for learning" and whom Miss La Verne confidently hopes may be President of the United States some day.

LOG-CABIN BOY

"And why not?" she inquires. "Two of our presidents, Abraham Lincoln and Andrew Johnson, were 'log-cabin' boys. Some of the finest stock of the world is to be found in the mountain country—boys and girls of initiative, courage, forbearance and intelligence. They need a chance, need education and when they get it, they can hold their own with anyone!"

Lottie, who has black hair and big dark eyes, 13 years of age; Gertrude, who is 5, small, shy and with an impediment of speech; Billie, 14 years of age, brown eyes; Anna, a blond of 13; mouse-colored Edna, 16 and in Berea College, Kentucky; red-headed Tom, 11 years old, straight and sturdy and inclined to be cocky; Maria, with Irish lilting ways, and Louis, dark-haired, hazel eyes—they all belong to this "very special brood of sons and daughters" which Miss La Verne claims as her own. All of them are being educated from funds provided by the actress personally.

"It isn't as expensive as you might think," she explains. "For $100 or $120 or maybe $130 a year, I feed, clothe and educate a child. It isn't much and it means so much to the child and his parents."

SHE HELPS THEM

Miss La Verne is—in a three-fold way—helping bring education and "a chance" to the mountaineers of the South. Hhere is her own personal work—her "adoption" of these children of which few people know. Then, the proceeds of a song, "It's Sun-Up Now" sold in the theater lobby go to the respective schools to help as many children as possible. Thirdly, many people who see the play, which is of the mountains, voluntarily send checks and banknotes to Miss La Verne to be forwarded to the places of most need, and the actress handles this money, sends it out, writes personal thank-you letters to all and sees to it as well that donations are acknowledged by the recipients.

"Since I've been in Los Angeles, we've made about $200 from the sale of the song which I have forwarded east," she said. "here have been voluntary contributions, but not to any large extent. Then, there are my benefit performances, sponsored by various organizations, and from which is given a share of the proceeds to be donated to the cause.

"Last week, the Pi Beta Phi Sorority had a benefit. Its members are vitally interested in Little Pidgeon School and hence my decision to adopt a boy from there. Next week, Monday, the Artland Club will have a benefit.

Bits of pottery, rag quilts, homemade chairs, all properties used in the play come from the mountains, the actress explained. "If you can think of 3,500,000 people, the finest in the land, away back in the mountains, seeing no one, knowing nothing of the outside world, you can visualize my mountaineers. They may not know the slang of today, but some of them can converse in the language of Chaucer, which their fathers and mothers taught them, brought from England. Their songs, their ways are hundreds of years old."

DRAMATIC PERENNIAL BACK HOME

"Abie's Irish Rose" is in Town; to Open Tonight at Playhouse

"Abie's Irish Rose," the dramatic perennial, will bloom once more at the Playhouse tonight. It will be presented by Anne Nichols's own company, an organization that has been in existence for four years and which played in Chicago for nearly two years. It has also played long runs in Detroit and other cities.

The story of "Abie's Irish Rose," has for a central plot the efforts of a young Jewish lad to keep from his orthodox parents the fact that he has married a young gentile girl. The situations resulting from this subterfuge teem with laughable incidents. There are moments of pathos and also a lesson in racial and religious tolerance. One of the delightful moments of the second act is the meeting between the Catholic priest and the rabbi. Both men of broad views and culture, ex-chaplains of the World War, there expressed sentiments, dignified and humane, never fail to make an impression on audiences.

"Abie's Irish Rose," was first produced in this city nearly six years ago. It was a success then, for nearly ten months it filled the Morosco Theater. Then it went to New York where it is now in its sixth year and still going strong. It will be presented here by what is said to be an excellent cast, the members of which have been together for several years. Among the players are Dorothy Coghlan, Ada Jaffre, William McFadden, Nat Koff, Frank Hersome, James R. Waters, Ray L. Royce and John M. Holmes. The scenic oprtion of the entertainment is new, having been built in New York for the Pacific Coast tour.

NOW IN RUSSIAN ROLE

Ricardo Cortez, delineator of romantic Spanish roles, is Russian in his latest part. He plays a young Russian officer in Lon Chaney's new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer starring vehicle, "Terror," which Benjamin Christensen is directing.

FLAPPERS NOT MADE BUT BORN

Spirit Which Makes Girls Flap Cannot be Cultivated, Says Hope Drown

"Flappers aren't made . . . they're born . . . and the only real true flapper of any family is 'little sister,' ranging in age from 1 to 16!"

This was the emphatic statement voiced by Hope Drown, vivacious blond of "The Great Necker," now playing at the Belasco Theater.

"I believe that there is no such a character as a flapper mother or flapper grandmother."

"Flapperism is a spirit . . . not a pose. It is an inborn something that only the girls of the last sixteen years really possess. Anyone else claiming to be a flapper is assuming the pose . . . not the spirit.

"I can't claim to be a real flapper, I'm sorry," the actress continued, "but it's just loads of fun playing one anyway! You see, in the play, as this particular character, I get chances to do so many things, that . . . well . . . perhaps I never really had the nerve to do . . . but it's everything that I've wanted to do anyway!"

Hope Drown's engagement at the Belasco Theater is her first appearance in this city in more than two years.

In that time she has been playing in various productions in eastern cities, primarily in New York. Her

FAIR-HAIRED GIRL BROUGHT BARRETT GREENWOOD TO COAST

A young lady with long, curling lashes and nimble dancing toes brought Barrett Greenwood, leading man in "Peggy Ann," musical comedy in the Louis Macloon Music Box, all the way from New York to California.

This same young miss—she has fair hair and blue eyes—is responsible for Barrett's decision to eschew New York for good and settle down in Los Angeles.

"As long as I can be near her and know that she is happy, I will never go East," he solemnly and dramatically insisted last Wednesday after the matinee performance of "Peggy Ann." "Her happiness is mine!"

U-um! What a romance for the matinee fans to weave about this 28-year-old, tall leading man, who plays the part of the strong, tender lover of little Peggy Ann in the show!

NOW THE CONFESSION

But the confession—the young lady in question is very, very young, only 8, to be accurate, and she is Barrett's daughter, Dawn, whom he brought west to be with her grandmother, his mother, in Long Beach.

She is quite the darling of Barrett's heart. He told of her merry, laughing ways and her love of dancing. He has entered her in the Ernest Belcher school of dancing, and in the Long Beach public schools.

"And if she wants to be a dancer, she can," he said, a frown for the moment wrinking his brow. "I don't want her to go on the stage because I did. I would just as soon, in fact, that she did something else. But she shall make her own decisions, and if she is a dancer, all right. Girls who dance must keep in trim; they cannot do the splits; toe work or acrobatic dancing if they keep late hours. They must work and practice and keep busy all the time."

Barrett ran away from Arlington Military Academy in Texas when he was but 15 years of age and joined a wild Mexican show, "The Cow Puncher," in Chicago, playing a black-mustached heavy, he admitted. His parents found him and made him come home, but he wasn't to be kept long. He went back, this time to New York, and his first work in that eastern city was in the cast of "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine" with Noah Beery. He did some road shows for Klaw-Erlanger, "When Dreams Come True," played "Watch Your Step" with Mr. and Mrs. Jack Coogan and eventually went on Broadway as a lead with Louise Groody in "The Night Boat" and "Toot, Toot" and Dorothy Dixon in "Girl o' Mine." And there have been others.

IN PICTURES, TOO

He had motion-picture work in mind when he came West—"so many of my friends are here. With my stage experience, I thought I would be available for heavies, characterizations." He did "The Kid Sister" with Malcolm MacGregor and Margaret De La Motte, which is yet to be released.

Then came "The Donovan Affair" at the Vine-street, and he essayed the role of the heavy, the man who was killed in the first act. Then "Peggy Ann." "Quite a transformation," he remarked. "That's what makes me think I can do dramatic roles in the pictures."

DRAMA HOPE IN AMATEUR WORK

Says Irving Pichel, Star of O'Neill Play

To be Seen in "All God's Chillun Got Wings"

Dickson Morgan Produces at Majestic Theater

Irving Pichel has swapped a whole month's vacation in August in exchange for two weeks now—so that he can appear in "All God's Chillun Got Wings" a Dickson Morgan production at the Majestic Theater, beginning this evening. The success of the matinee project in Hollywood recently inspired him to this.

An interesting character, this Pichel, for so long identified with the Little Theater movement, ever since he came out from New York in 1916 to play the lead in "Nju," when Arline Barnsdall, Richard Ordynsky and Norman Bel-Geddes tried to win Los Angeles to the idea at the Egan Theater.

There was an interval about 1919 when Irving Pichel went back to direct for the Schuberts, "some of them quite worth-while plays like 'Not So Long Ago' with Eva Le Gallienne," he bristles defensively—but he soon returned to his Little Theater love. This time at Berkeley, with Sam Hume, before the students became enthusiastic enough to produce their own.

ON THEIR OWN

When the students had become properly enthusiastic, Pichel felt that job was satisfactorily completed, and he and his wife, Liolette Wilson, whom he met and married during the Barnsdall-Ordynsky experiment here, started a Little Theater of their own in Berkeley, and reveled in their dramatic strivings for higher things. They produced a long succession of good plays ("by which I mean with an intelligence content" smiles Mr. Pichel.)

They have two fine boys, who are now 7 and 3½, respectively. And they lived to see that Berkeley Little Theater venture successful and out of debt.

This "debt" question seems to be inevitably associated with Little Theater movements, but they thrive on it all the same, just as so many poets have to starve in garrets to achieve their best.

Next came the Santa Barbara venture, opening with "The Beggar on Horseback" nearly three years ago. Little Santa Barbara has proved a fertile field, for the thing has paid its way, with the help of a little Carnegie Foundation contribution, and of keeping earnestly within a budget. And such plays as Shaw's "Caesar and Cleopatra," "Twelfth Night," "Peer Gynt," "Loyalties," etc., etc., received top vote for popularity in a recent ballot.

"Do you feel that the hope of the drama lies in the talented amateurs," he was asked.

PREFERS PROFESSIONALS

"Oh, I prefer professionals," said Pichel, "but we have to start with the talented amateurs. Of course, we hope to develop superior professionals that way. No, I don't really like puttering with Little Theaters and amateurs for their own sake, but I would always prefer to present some important thing poorly, rather than a trivial thing well, and the Little Theater makes the worth-while production possible. And it can always grow into something bigger, like the Pasadena Community Players, and eventually branch out—as we did with the matinees in Hollywood, and now this regular production of 'All God's Chillun' here at the Majestic."

Pichel directed at Pasadena during the absence of Gilmore Brown last year and is most enthusiastic about the Community Playhouse there. "My Santa Barbara one may soon be as good," he says. He returns to direct the Santa Barbara fiesta play in August.

Mrs. Pichel was the daughter of J. Stitt Wilson, who was twice Mayor of Berkeley on the Socialist ticket. She was quite advanced for Berkeley at that time, and was rumored to hold theories about letting one's children grow up by themselves. It is whispered she is quite a normal mama these days, however, and is evidently also very happy in her dramatic work with her clever husband.

Part Played So Well It Was Nemesis

To be able to enact a role so well that it becomes one's nemesis, seems to be the fate of Allan Davis, who resumes his former role of "Langford" in the tropical-life drama, "White Cargo," that is playing at the Vine-street Theater.

"When 'White Cargo' opened in New York and I was given the chance to play Langford, I was greatly enthused," says Davis. "After the opening night the critics all gave wonderful write-ups for the production and the cast was given nice bits of praise, I was quite confident that I was at last on the road to theatrical success, and that recognition was near. After playing the part for two years, 'White Cargo' closed and I took a well-earned vacation.

"Upon returning to New York, I began making the rounds of producers and agents, with the thought in mind of accepting nothing but the best of roles. Imagine how dumbfounding it was to be informed everywhere that 'you're not the type, Davis; this is a typically American play,' and me born in Chillicothe, O."

But apparently Davis has outlived the tropical stigma, for he is creating quite a name in the motion-picture field and has taken this opportunity to return to his old love.

What's Doing in NEW YORK

Arbuckle in Farce Has Stage Ability Year's Best Acting

BY ALLISON SMITH

NEW YORK, June 18.—Those assistant sleuths who stand guard over a practically nonexistent season through the summer months have long since learned not to be surprised at anything. It is wiser to face Broadway with an air of calm acceptance once you have been deserted by your chief on a sweltering June evening with the sardonic injunction to keep the home fires burning. The first thing to remember is that in mid-June almost anything can happen—and frequently does.

Nevertheless with the best possible fortification against freak announcements and still more freakish entrances, a note which reached this desk recently brought a certain shock of mild incredulity. It read: "Next week Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle in a revival of 'Baby Mine.'"

This was as fantastic a combination as was ever heralded, even in the theatrical mail of midsummer. And what it suggested was even more depressing than most of these. The play by Margaret Mayo first opened in 1910 for a record-breaking run but there are few farces that can survive the changes in popular humor of seventeen years. Moreover, long experience with the behavior of screen stars suddenly grown articulate on the stage (an experience stamped with one excruciating memory of Theda Bara in "The Blue Flame") held out little hope for Roscoe Arbuckle.

OBSCURE PAST

It is true that his very early career started on the stage but this was so long ago and his roles were so obscure that none of the oldest inhabitants when questioned could trace his appearance to Broadway. He had been identified entirely with innumerable comedies on the screen and one tragedy—off stage—through which he was barred irrevocably from the films by Mrs. Grundy.

So his opening the other night marked his first conspicuous entrance as a star before the footlights. To the surprise of at least one spectator he emerged not only as an excellent comedian but as an actor possessing a certain subtle sense of expression which might carry him far beyond farce. He played the part of Jimmie, the good-natured, obliging friend of the squabbling young couple who finds that his innocent offer of assistance involves him in every form of social embarrassment, including the kidnaping of triplets. There is plenty of chance here for the grotesque horseplay of the screen comedy—for the mugging and bounding and South falls that belongs to the changeless traditions of slapstick.

Mr. Arbuckle ignores them all. He does one fall, it is true, but that was because he tripped legitimately on the doorstep which is exactly the sort of thing that does happen to you when your accumulated woes are more than you can bear. For the most part he gives the authentic values of a blundering, perspiring mass of humanity lumbering through a tangled situation which was none of his making. It is the sort of comedy that has real suffering behind it and thus, such is the tender nature of our tribe, is all the funnier.

NOT ALWAYS HILARIOUS

There were moments, however, when you really felt sorry for Jimmie and when Arbuckle disposed of the amiable theory that a fat man is always the most hilarious figure in the world. (It is a theory which Somerset Maugham speedily dispatched in his tale of a grotesquely fat and genuinely terrifying monster which he called "The Magician" but that is another story and perhaps another play.) Arbuckle makes the most of that most pathetic spectacle—helpless bulk in distress—in his appearance after all these years indicate that the adamant and outraged authorities who have barred him from the screen may unwittingly have restored to the footlights an excellent stage comedian.

He has done this with little assistance from the play. The old farcical situations—so successful in their day that the piece became the "Abie's Irish Rose," of its period—emerges almost twenty years later with the threadbare aspect of a battered merry widow hat still doing its best to be perky. Its first situation gives the piece away; the young husband has quarreled with his wife because she went out to lunch with another man. In the face of the domestic follies of 1927, this dates it beyond all redemption.

This is the time of year when post mortems are breaking out in the most unexpected quarters and when from various official and unofficial quarters you get solemn statements as to the ten best plays, the ten worst failures and the most important events of the season that has just closed. The latest symposium was on the two actors who contributed the best performances.

LUNT BEST ACTOR

Last week the Morning Telegraph as represented by Burton Davis, its dramatic critic, subpoenaed the rest of his confreres to testify on their own choice. The verdict was swift and though the identity of the voters is guarded in secrecy it seems to have been fairly unanimous. Their medals were pinned on Alfred Lunt as the best actor and Pauline Lord as the best actress of the year that began last Labor Day. Alice Brady, Holbrook Blinn and Ruth Gordon were the closest runners up. And Walter Huston, Edward G. Robinson, Lee Tracy, Helen Menken, Lynne Fontanne, Jane Cowl, Ethel Barrymore, Morgan Farley, Frank Wilson and Blanche Yurka achieved honorable mention.

The tribute to Miss Lord is all the more gratifying in that her year was a disastrous one from the box office view. From minor role in all-star revival of "Trelawney of the Wells," her season was made up of "Sandalwood" and "Mariners," both of them failures, though the latter had the cold comfort of being called an artistic failure. Mr. Lunt's record's more cheerful, financially; he appeared in "Juarez and Maximilian" "The Brothers Karamazov" "Ned McCobb's Daughter" and "The Second Man" all of them except the first, fair financial triumphs in the Theater Guild's breathless rotations of repertory.

ONCE COSSACK SOLDIER

Mikhail Visaroff, Russian actor and once a soldier in a Cossack regiment, is playing with Tim McCoy in his latest Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer vehicle, "The Gallant Gringo," which Viaschelav Tourjansky is directing. It is an adventure story of Latin America.

YOUTHFUL SISTERS PLAY HERE

Lee Girls Start Run at Orpheum After Enacting Topsy and Eva Roles

Two dainty American misses, the Lee Sisters, Jane and Katherine, march onto the Orpheum Theater stage this week to treat local patrons to desserts which have earned them recognition as two of the most popular younger favorites on the American stage, it is said.

As the "Lee Kids" of childhood motion-picture fame, they were princesses of the cinema. Early in 1920, aged respectively 10 and 11, they invaded vaudeville and became known as child stars of the stage. More recently they blossomed into full-fledged legitimate stars, portraying the title roles Topsy and Eva in the extravaganza of song, dance and comedy created by the Duncan Sisters. Today they are featured on the Orpheum circuit.

Their mother still travels with them. Tolerant only as all mothers are, she keeps close check on her daughters. Their success she attributes to hard work, regarded all the while as play. She speaks lightly of her own part in the labor, preferring to tell of the days when she, herself, was an American and continental favorite heading the "Irene Lee and Her Candy Kids" company. One of her last American engagements with this act was in San Francisco a month after the earthquake of 1906, when she helped spread comfort and cheer among the unfortunate.

Geritz Sends Goudal Etching to Paris Salon

Jetta Goudal leaves for Paris tomorrow.

Not "in the flesh," however, but in etching representation of the drama. The Cecil B. De Mille emotional star, sat for Franz Geritz, noted etcher, last week, for an interpretative portrait that is to hang in the academy salon in Paris in July.

Miss Goudal is scheduled to start work on her new series of films this week at the De Mille studio, with Paul Stein, in all likelihood directing her in "The Forbidden Woman," with Joseph Schildkraut and Victor Varconi featured.

There is some discussion of the possibility that Lois Weber may pilot Miss Goudal in her second vehicle. Three, already titled, are announced to exhibitors as her 1927-28 product, including "The Forbidden Woman," "The Leopard's Lady" and "Midnight Madness," with a fourth in preparation.

Character Man Picked as Star for China Film

After taking numerous screen tests of various actors, Paramount has chosen George Irving, character actor, to interpret one of the best delineations which that studio has to offer this season.

Irving, who recently completed a prominent role in Richard Dix's most recent production, "Manpower," has been selected by the star to play the first character lead in his forthcoming picture, "Shanghai Bound," for the Paramount company. Irving's part will be that of Louden in the picturization which will be directed by Luther Reed. Mary Brian has the feminine lead opposite Dix in the story, written by Tex O'Reilly, which will be put into production early this week.

Although not under contract to Paramount, Irving in as many months has interpreted five different roles at the Lasky studios. Included in the films in which he has appeared of late for that company are "Wings," "Drums of the Desert," and others.

ORDERS LATEST FASHIONS

Travis Banton, Paramount's fashion creator, on his annual trek to London, Berlin, Paris and the Riviera, has been instructed by B. P. Schulberg to visit every fashion mart of the European capitals and to bring back the very latest in feminine foibles so that Clara Bow, Esther Ralston, Pola Negri and Florence Vidor may rule as the dictators of style for the motion-picture industry.

last engagement on Broadway was in "The Constant Nymph," and when the play opens for the winter at a Chicago playhouse she will again be numbered in the cast.

Miss Drown is an "almost" native daughter of California, having lived in Los Angeles the greater part of her life, and was graduated from Los Angeles High School.

"I've never appreciated it until now, though," she said, "you see all of my friends are here . . . and I always felt self-conscious when I acted before them. But that's over now, and I would just like to stay here forever."

"What about pictures?" she was asked, recalling her performance in "Hollywood," the James Cruze picture of life in the colony, made some time ago.

"I've always enjoyed working in pictures," she replied, "but on the screen I feel that my forte lies in characterizations . . . If I had an opportunity to do that type of work I would welcome it, indeed."

Miss Drown was inclined to be silent about her future plans, although she did vaguely hint at the possibility of giving up her stage career.

"It's hard to be definite about it," she smiled, "one never knows what may happen, and so for the present I'm just taking life as it comes."

German Film Tells Nation's Pre-war Tales

Local playgoers are being afforded an opportunity to judge for themselves just how potent a force the motion picture can become as a means to promote international peace and good fellowship. More than ever before it is being borne in on the public mind that the real and most dangerous ally of the war god Mars is ignorance.

"Slums of Berlin," a German imported production, is the current attraction at the Orange Grove Theater. This film gives a vivid and realistic picture of conditions in Germany's capital after the great war. It is felt that the picture, being both informative as well as entertaining, will, through the circumstances of its story and background, convey a better understanding of what the war's aftermath meant in the poorer sections of Central Europe. "Slums of Berlin" is the first release of Imported Pictures Corporation, a company having as its object the increased presentation of imported motion pictures on the American screen. Louis O. Macloon, noted local producer, has converted his Grand-avenue theater into a motion-picture house and intends to present only imported first-run pictures in this city.

Actress Plays Third Role in Dix Pictures

Mary Brian, who in the two and a half years since she made her screen debut in "Peter Pan" has played in more than twenty pictures and has been featured in every one, has won another honor.

She is the first girl to play leading woman in three consecutive Richard Dix starring pictures. Selected this week to play opposite Dix in his new Paramount vehicle, "Shanghai Bound," Miss Brian won the honor by having played with the star in his last two pictures, "Knockout Reilly" and "Man Power."

Mary Brian was a little girl with long curls when she was chosen to play Wendy in "Peter Pan," and she was cast in little girl roles in several of her roles immediately following her success in her first. But since then, she has grown up right before the camera. For a newcomer to the screen, her success has been phenomenal, as she has played featured roles in every picture she has ever been in. Her services have been so much in demand that she has worked steadily both for Paramount and for six other companies to which she was loaned.

GET NEW CONTRACTS

Of the many writings Louise Long and Ethel Doherty, scenarists, have done for motion pictures, none was more pleasurable to them than a three-second assignment just completed—the placing of their names on respective new contracts with Paramount.

HOUDINI MESSAGE SCORNED

Brother Defies Medium to Name Any of Words Included in Pact

Branding as false a recent assertion of Hamid Bey, Egyptian medium, that he had received a spirit message from Houdini, Hardeen, brother of Houdini, who is appearing as the headline attraction on the bill at the Hillstreet this week, has posted $10,000 which he will forfeit to any worthy cause if Bey can name any of the six key words, which he declares will be the preamble to any communication from Houdini from beyond the grave.

Houdini, Hardeen and a third brother, William, who died a year ago, entered into a secret pact shortly before the last-named died, that if it were possible to communicate with the living after death, the six key words would form the preamble to the communication, Hardeen says.

Hardeen, who bears a striking resemblance to his brother Houdini, declared that many impostors are linking their names with Houdini as a means of winning publicity and attention.

"Houdini and I, at the death bed of our brother William, a year ago, formed a sentence of six words which we agreed would be the key to any after-death communication between dead and living brothers," Hardeen says. "None of us believe in spiritualism, but to relieve any doubt, William, who knew he was going to die, was to make an effort to talk to us after death. We, of course, never heard from him and no living person has received a message from Houdini since his death."

Broadway House Shows 'Wonders of the Wild'

Professors and writers who essay nature's primitive haunts for a book or a picture ordinarily miss intimate touches which make for universal appeal. Generally, it is declared, they become involved in technical matter and miss the breath-taking wonders and the human element of their work.

"Wonders of the Wild," the feature photoplay, which Burr Nickle is presenting at the Broadway Palace Theater this week, presents contrast in this respect.

It was filmed by Nickle, a Hollywood motion-picture producer, who, ventured to the Far East, found men and nature undressed and filmed the most interesting wonders which he encountered. Unaccompanied save by his camera, he journeyed more than 20,000 miles, through Old Mexico, the South Seas, the Orient, the East Indies Singapore and other extremities over-flowing with natural wonders, gripping examples of cruel fate and magic romance. He hired equipment as he went along and was often a king in state, surrounded by hundreds of savages.

The adventurous Yankee penetrated countless regions hitherto untouched by white man, much less motion-picture camera. Neither art nor archeology divided his interest. He knew what he wanted and got it. The tremendous gulf twixt civilization and uncivilization—the tree-dwellers, the fire-walkers, the "covered-wagon" elephants, the mighty "sea-elephants" plunging off southern coasts, the lowest forms of human life existent, the myriad forms of unlabeled animal life liable to prey upon humanity—all these and many other features of tropics in the raw he succeeded in getting in films.

Nickle makes a personal appearance in connection with the showing of this picture.

LILLIAN RICH WILL PLAY WILL DENNY

Lillian Rich, who began her film career with Reginald Denny, will once again appear with the comedian. She has signed a contract to play the feminine lead in "Now I'll Tell One," Denny's next picture for Universal. Miss Rich is completely restored to health after the severe illness which kept her absent from the screen for a long period of time. "Now I'll Tell One" was written by Denny himself and will be produced under the editorial supervision of Joseph Franklin Poland. Production will begin this week with Fred Newmeyer directing.

Split Skirt for Evening is New Fad

Divided skirts for evening wear are the latest wrinkle in gowns.

The new style is direct from Paris, and was introduced to Hollywood at a smart evening dance by Billie Dove, the beautiful First National star.

However, those who have visions of women appearing at a formal dance in knickers will be disappointed The trousers, or "divided skirts," are cleverly designed and are half concealed beneath a filmy bouffant skirt of matching fabric, with the result that there is nothing at all shocking in the effect.

"In addition to being more comfortable, I believe the trousered skirt for evening wear is more modest," said Miss Dove. "I actually obtained the design to wear before the cameras in 'The Stolen Bride,' which Alexander Korda is now directing. But I liked it so well that I am making it a part of my regular wardrobe. The divided skirt is quite the rage in Paris this season, with such designers as Poiret and Chanel sponsoring it."

Meanwhile Hollywood is all excitement, and the male stars are wondering how the new mode, which is also being introduced for sports wear, will match their Oxford bags and plus fours.

Scenarist and Director Join in Screen Aim

A director-scenarist coalition of talents in the preparation of screen material makes for better plays and lesser cost.

Such is the contention of Sam Wood, maestro of the megaphone, who needs only to point to his recurrent professional association with Byron Morgan, of which "Rookies" is the latest example, to give weight to his argument, it is said.

"With creative and interpretative faculties practically fused in conceiving or expressing plots intended for reproduction on the screen, the arduous task of manuscript preparation is lightened, a greater technical surety is attained, snappier action is certin, psychological errors are reduced to the minimum and a tremendous saving in time and cost is achieved," is the way in which Wood makes his point.

"A combination of intellects engaged in story preparation is equivalent to taking out success insurance," Wood said in amplification. "Stimulation of ideas is retroactive and the story grows like magic. I advocate a reversal of the present general practice in preparing material for the screen. Let the writer and director work together from the start."

Bessie Love Selected for De Mille Film

The petite Bessie Love is to star in another De Mille production, Renaud Hoffman having chosen her as the leading lady for his "Harp in Hock."

Hoffman is selecting a brilliant group of screen celebrities for this picture, which is the first of a series that he is to produce for De Mille. Another player who has recently been added to the cast is Elise Bartlett, famed for her stage roles, but who is making her initial screen appearance with Hoffman. Rudolph Schildkraut and Junior Coghlan are also to be featured in the screen play.

TEXAN, ADVENTURER AND TRAVELER, IN FILM HERE

Strolling about the streets of Hollywood these days is a man who can explode a lot of ideas.

He has fought river pirates on the Yangtze; he has been a boon companion to Madero and Villa in their revolutionary activities in Mexico; he has battled with "Peppe" Garibaldi in Venezuela; he used to know Addel-Krim in Morocco; he was a Texas ranger for a time. He bears a number of scars. The world is his home. And he is said to resemble Abraham Lincoln.

His name is Edward S. (Tex.) O'Reilly.

All preconceived ideas of what a world adventurer looks like go by the boards when Mr. O'Reilly appears. He is 6ft. 4in. tall. His voice is soft and he drawls his words. He might be the peaceful owner of a farm or an orange grove. Instead, he is the possessor of a life story that could startle the sturdiest lover of thrills, and he has incorporated some of his experiences into "Shanghai Bound," a story which is being used as Richard Dix's new Paramount starring picture.

ENLISTS IN ARMY

Until he was 17 Mr. O'Reilly had confined his travels to the road between Dennison, Tex., his birthplace, and San Antonio. Then he enlisted in the United States Army for service in Cuba during the Spanish-American War. He received it, at the end of three years he was discharged in the Philippines.

He had a desire for world travel but not much money, and complications naturally followed. For six months he taught English in a Japanese school. He landed in Shanghai just as the Boxer uprising was subsiding—broke.

"I discovered," he says, "that I had two qualifications for the International Police Force. I was more than six feet tall and was ordinarily husky, so I became a policeman. After a year and one-half of this I had a chance to get a better job as instructor in the Chinese Imperial Army, and I took it.

"That was where I had my first experience with Chinese bandits. We were ordered up the Yangtse River for 1500 miles to suppress an attack.

LEADERS FORMER OUTLAWS

"Many of the present leaders of the armies are former outlaws. For years they have been organized in large groups. It has not been uncommon for 2000 or more of them to float around in junks and sampans and attack ocean-going vessels in the rivers. In some cases they have even captured small cities."

Tiring of the exciting life in China, Mr. O'Reilly returned to this country and began a career divided spasmodically between newspaper work, fighting and writing. For a time he worked on the Chicago newspapers. He was also a reporter on the St. Louis Republic. For several years he was managing editor of the San Antonio Light. For five years he was in Mexico, part of the time as an officer in the armies of Madero and Villa and part as a correspondent of the Associated Press.

Before the outbreak of hostilities between Spain and France and Abdel-Krim in Morocco, Mr. O'Reilly was there seeking mining concessions. Later he became captain of a regiment in the Spanish Foreign Legion. From the French he received the Legion of Honor and the Croix de Guerre and from the Spanish the Military Cross of Valor. He was wounded during this campaign.

MACHINE GUN MAJOR

During the World War Mr. O'Reilly was a major in a machine gun regiment at Camp Travis, San Antonio. At one time, also, while a young man he was a Texas Ranger stationed on the Rio Grande. At present he is a major in the Reserve Corps of the Texas National Guard.

In 1904 he was with "Peppe" Garibaldi, grandson of the Italian patriot, in a revolution in Venezuela. Two years later he was in Nicaragua in another revolution.

In 1917 he published a book titled "Roving and Fighting." He has had many short stories on China published. The Pictorial Review is now running a series of his stories. He is also the author of a number of vaudeville sketches.

FIFTEEN PICTURES BOOKED FOR PRODUCTION SCHEDULE

With eight pictures soon to start, seven being edited and cut for immediate release and three in production as a preliminary before the big drive begins, workers at the Paramount-Famous-Lasky studio in Hollywood are facing a summer that will be far from "slumpful," it is said.

"Hula," Clara Bow's new starring picture which is being directed by Victor Fleming, is several days under way. Olive Brook, Arnold Kent and Arlette Marchal are in the supporting cast.

Chester Conklin and George Bancroft, Paramount's newest comedy team, are far along with "Tell It to Sweeney," the mirthful tale of farcical railroading that is being directed by Gregory LaCava. In this picture Doris Hill and Jack Luden have the romantic leads.

John Waters, director, and Gary Cooper, star, who together will make "Beau Sabreur," are just finishing production of "Nevada," the Zane Grey western that features Thelma Todd and William Powell.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

The pictures that are being cut and edited for immediate release include: "Firemen, Save My Child," the new Edward Sutherland comedy co-starring Wallace Beery and Raymond Hatton; "We're All Gamblers," the Thomas Meighan picture that James Cruze directed; "Ten Modern Commandments," starring Esther Ralston and directed by Dorothy Arzner; "Underworld," featuring Evelyn Brent, George Bancroft, Clive Brook and Fred Kohler; "The Woman On Trial," the last picture Pola Negri made before her marital trip to Europe; "The Big Sneeze," the Wallace Beery-James Cruze comedy sensation, and, most important to Paramount of all, "Wings," the story of the war-time aviators.

The pictures now being prepared for immediate production include: "Love Comes First," to star Pola Negri and to be directed by Rowland V. Lee, who directed the exotic Pola in "Barbed Wire." Emil Jannings, with assurance that his first American-made picture, "The Way of All Flesh," is his supreme effort to date, is about to start his second under the direction of Mauritz Stiller. The second Jannings picture, from an original by Josef Von Sternberg, is not yet titled.

Frank Tuttle, who will direct Florence Vidor in "A Celebrated Woman," is now waiting that star's return from Hawaii to begin the picture. Miss Vidor will arrive in Hollywood within the coming week. Adolphe Menjou also will be reportings at the studio at 9 a.m. within a few days after production begins on the untitled picture which Harry D'Arrast is to direct.

"SWIM, GIRL, SWIM"

Clarence Badger, just finished with the Richard Dix picture "Man Power," is scheduled to start at once on "Swim, Girl, Swim," which will find Bebe Daniels in a role combining her talents of "The Campus Flirt" and "Senorita."

Richard Dix's new starring picture, "Shanghai Bound," is another that will start within a few days, Director Luther Reed having assembled most of his cast. Mary Brian will again play opposite the popular Richard.

The seventh picture slated for immediate start is a story of the underworld which will star Thomas Meighan and which will be directed by James Cruze, and the eighth is "Shootin' Irons," to be directed by Arthur Rosson and to introduce Jack Luden as Paramount's newest western star. A ninth picture for the near future is Esther Ralston's next starring opus, which will be based on an original by Owen Davis.

TURNS GOLF CADDY

Lee Moran, once of the comedy team of Lyons and Moran, has turned golf caddy. Only for a picture, however. He caddies for William Haines in the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production, "Spring Fever."

HOME OF ACTOR ON HIGH HILL

Seventy-seven Steps Lead to Residence of John Litel, Morosco Star

Seventy-seven steps must be climbed every time one desires to enter the beautiful new home of John Litel, who is now appearing at the Morosco in "The Creaking Chair." The house is situated on the top of a high hill and every one who comes to the house must walk up the seventy-seven steps.

Mountainous country has always appealed to Litel, as he was born and lived in a house situated thus. He cannot enjoy a place that is set among other houses on a level street. Every day Litel climbs the seventy-seven steps to his front door and says that he enjoys doing it. The exercise is beneficial and the view can be appreciated all the more after such a climb, he says. For the comfort of his guests, however, there is a driveway that leads up to his door.

Litel's home is as unusual as his role in "The Creaking Chair," the farcical mystery play which is duplicating its London and New York successes in this city. As the English newspaper reporter he takes a part that is far from the straight leads he has been accustomed to enacting. "The Creaking Chair" will enter its fourth week today.

All Hands Help in Comedy of Golf Links Here

William Haines has a supporting cast that won't appear in the list of screen credits in his first Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer starring vehicle, "Spring Fever." It includes director, assistant director, script clerk—in fact, everybody on the staff except Ira Morgan, the cameraman.

In the new picture, a comedy of the golf links which Edward Sedgwick is directing, practically everybody turned actor in the exterior scenes played at the Flintridge Country Club. Vic Orsati, script clerk, and Eddie Brophy, assistant director, played on the field in the background in several of the scenes, and Hugh Cummings, comedy constructor, donned a tuxedo to play a comedy character in the scenes inside the clubhouse.

Sedgwick himself played a role, doing a comedy bit as one of the frolicking country-club members, while assistant cameramen, "grips" and even "still cameraman" enacted persons in the "gallery" that followed Haines about the golf links. The cast includes Joan Crawford in the leading feminine role; George Fawcett, Eileen Percy, Bert Woodruff, Lee Moran, Edward Earle, George K. Arthur and others of note.

FLAIR ON AUTO FILMS

Even before the final editing and cutting of the recent Red Grange production of "The Motor Maniac" has been completed, F.B.O. executives are preparing for a wave of popular demand for automobile racing stories and have assigned their ace scenarist, Ewart Adamson, to write the continuity of "Deadman's Curve," said to be one of the most thrilling automobile racing stories ever screened. Adamson recently completed "Shanghaied" and "South Sea Love," two adventurous south sea island stories.

When her boy is killed in battle she is proud of him, and because of her mother love hides in her cabin a youthful soldier who ran away from camp to see his sick mother. She defies the Sheriff and officers to capture the young deserter.

Hollywood Playhouse

"The Little Spitfire" with Dulcie Cooper of the original New York cast; Harland Tucker and associate players will enter its fourth week today. It is making a real comedy success and a long run is expected. Others in the cast are Wyndham Standing, Phil Tead, Florence Oberle, Mabel Forrest, Charles Miller, Erma McKendry, Emerson Treacy, Burdell Jacobs and Douglas Lawrence. Matinees on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday.

Biltmore

High life in the Chinese underworld, told with the clang of gongs and the incense of the poppy, holds the boards at the Biltmore Theater for a brief engagement. "The Shanghai Gesture," the A. H. Woods' resounding melodrama, is in unusual good favor by the patrons of the theater, and the daily attendance has come near to breaking all records for a nonmusic play.

Florence Reed, the talented stage star, gives a spectacular performance as the mistress of an establishment in Shanghai, and her acting is the acme of realism. The entire New York and Chicago cast have all been retained for the local engagement, including C. Henry Gordon, Percy Waram, Mary Duncan, Bruce Langdon, C. Haviland Chappell, Henry Warwick, Henry Cantzen and other equally popular stage players.

The second week of the successful engagement begins tonight.

Belasco

"The Great Necker," Elmer Harris's play of flappers and their habits, continues to amuse crowded houses at the Belasco, where it starts on its third week tonight. Taylor Holmes in the title role is winning new laurels and is generally conceded to have a better role even than his characterization in "No, No, Nanette." Nat Carr is also scoring in his role of a Jewish picture producer. Hope Drown as the latest thing in flappers and Allan Connor as the jazz boy have both made individual hits in this new play, which is ultimately destined to appear on Broadway, according to rumors around the Belasco. Matinees are on Wednesday and Saturday.

Orpheum

Henry Santrey and his orchestra will headline the new bill at the Orpheum Theater starting today. With Santrey comes Harry and Anna Seymour in a new act replete with tuneful melodies and smart steps. Jane and Katherine Lee, known to the stage and screen as the "Lee Kids," but now having advanced into young womanhood, will be seen as sprite young ingenues of amazing versatility.

Mr. Joe Frisco, the "jazz dancer," who has immortalized the big black cigar and derby, holds over presenting something new in steps and tunes. Other feature acts on the new bill include Burt Shepherd, the "Whip King;" Tameo Kajiyama, the oriental mentalist and psychologist, and Klayton and Gage, accompanied by the Caballero Orchestra, presenting novel ballroom dances. Pathe newsreel and Topics of the Day conclude the program.

Hillstreet

Hardeen, the master illusionist, will head the Hillstreet bill next week with his array of magical feats. Tom Smith, the comic, is also a feature. The Four Clovelly Girls will present a bright novelty, while Marie Cavanaugh and Bud Cooper will be seen in new songs and some dances. Charles Althoff, the "Yankee Fiddler," and the Le Grohs complete the bill.

The screen will offer Warner Brothers' late production, "Irish Hearts," starring May McAvoy and featuring Jason Robards and Kathleen Key. Chapter eight of "The Wise-Crackers," a newsreel and Fables conclude.

Pantages

Heading the Pantages for the week starting tomorrow will be Hazel Green's "Beau Brummel Revue," featuring ten stars in music, song and dance.

Other acts include Mack and Corel in a laugh hit entitled, "Crazy, But Good;" a novel bird act; Barber-Sims and company in their latest sketch; the Four Karreys, known as the "Spanish Elastic Bands."

On the screen Tom Mix and Tony will appear in their latest screen success, "Outlaws of Red River."

SHARK SKIN JEWELRY RAGE

The shark, once merely regarded as a menace to ocean swimmers, has now become a highly prized domesticated animal. He has been used for suit cases and shoes for some little time, but now his smooth skin is being turned into jewelry.

The choicest sharks of the famous shark farm at Ensenada, in Lower California, are now having their hides shipped to the most fashionable jewelers of Hollywood and Los Angeles.

Mary Astor is wearing in "The Road to Romance," now in the filming on the First National lot, a "shark necklace" of white gold, with a pendant oval medallion in front of highly polished shark skin, which resembles a large, precious light blue stone. It is rimmed around with fine white gold. Colleen Moore has a shark-skin coat, trimmed with kasha cloth, for sports wear.

Cast in Play Here Marked by Versatility

The Hollywood Playhouse is said to have one of the most versatile casts ever assembled in one company in "The Little Spitfire."

Outside of all being artists on the stage they have many other outstanding qualities and each with a material realization if they would care to "cash" in on these traits.

Dulcie Cooper, the little star, could make a name and a fortune with her fashion designs, it is said. She designed all of her ow ngowns in "The Little Spitfire." Harland Tucker could and would love to spend his life making radios. He made one with just a different twist than any other and he says that he has picked up Australia and China and many other distant points. Also he is interested in kennels.

Erma McKendry is qualified at any time to become an attorney at law. Phil Tead is a seasoned aviator and has designs for an airplane that he hopes, when completed, will revolutionize airplaining. Charles Miller has another very interesting and profitable calling and that is motion-picture directing. He is said to have been responsible for the success of a number of motion-picture stars.

Emerson Treacy has the urge to become a playwright and has sold several plays. Wyndham Standing studied and has also gained fame in light opera. He also has always been interested in chemistry. Mabel Forrest is a talented pianist. Florence Oberle is an interior decorator and has been responsible for a number of homes about Hollywood.

Actress Chosen by Princeton as Favorite Star

Princeton is the latest university to proclaim Norma Shearer its favorite movie star. Just as Columbia did last year, Princeton this year paid signal honor to the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer player, who has become definitely established as the favorite of collegians throughout the country.

As an incident to this year's commencement, the graduating class of 470 students at Princeton took a poll of the popular stars of the day, at the annual senior banquet. Miss Shearer was far in the lead of any star of the screen.

Last year at their commencement dinner, the senior class members at Columbia paid the star the same compliment, and several smaller colleges and a number of high-school graduating classes have done the same.

Miss Shearer's popularity among collegians will probably be much heightened by next year as the result of her role of Kathi in "Old Heidelberg," opposite Ramon Novarro, it is said. The story deals largely with life in one of the best known universities in the world. Miss Shearer is now finishing "After Midnight," her first starring vehicle since she completed her role in "Old Heidelberg."

FILM DUO APPEAR AT CRITERION

John Gilbert, Greta Carbo Are Showing in "Flesh and the Devil"

John Gilbert, the doughboy of "The Big Parade" isn't a one-role actor by any means. His greatest success was as the American soldier—and now he has turned about and scored another success just as great—as a young German.

It proves two things—one of them that John Gilbert is an actor who can essay anything, another, is that young men are young men the world over, and the color of the flag that flies over their native land doesn't have anything to do with the color of the red blood of youth.

All of which is to say that John Gilbert is said to have done one of the greatest pieces of work in his career in "Flesh and the Devil" Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's adaptation of Sudermann's "The Undying Past" now at the Criterion Theater.

This is the first downtown showing of this love film as well as its first time at popular prices.

Gilbert is said to have caught the idealism of the European youth and tinged it with the adventurous susceptibility to feminine charms that the author so graphically painted in word pictures; and from the Sudermann character he has evolved a new triumph. Greto Garbo is the heroine, an exotic siren who charms him almost to doom, a literal modern prototype of Germany's legend of the Lorelei. Miss Garbo establishes a new school of screen vampire in her role in this picture.

Lars Hanson is a compelling figure as the wronged husband, and George Fawcett a dominant character as the old pastor. William Orlamond, Barbara Kent, Eugene Besserer and others appear.

Clarence Brown, the director, has been acclaimed as doing a remarkable thing in this picture: he directed a strictly European story in a strictly European way—but with all the finesse of the American director.

Jan Rubini, conductor of the Criterion orchestra, has arranged a colorful musical interpretation for the showing of "Flesh and the Devil."

Director Takes Vacation After Three Comedies

Victor Potel is passing a month's holiday in New York after finishing three "Sunkist" comedies for Al Nathan. The "Sunkist" pictures are two-reelers, released through the Bray Screen Products, and are shown at the Figueroa and other first-run houses.

Potel wrote, directed, edited and titled the pictures—"One, Two, Three Kick," "Dumb Belles" and "Good Scouts"—besides playing the comedy lead in the last two.

"Most fellows think they are busy when they play a lead, and I thought I was a little busy seeing the stories through from the first inception of the idea to the cut-and-titled product, besides playing the lead. But it's great, and I feel like a proud papa with three lusty children."

Potel will make one more picture in this group immediately upon his return, and will then commence another series for the same producer.

Mlle. Andree Desfontaine, a 16-year-old midinette, has been awarded the title of queen of the Paris dressmakers' apprentices for 1927. With it goes 1400 francs and a silver medal.

PUBLIC HAS GROWN MORE EXACTING, SCENARIST SAYS

Scenario writing has become one of the most expert and highly specialized of the screen arts, and incidentally one of the most lucrative professions in America, it is said. Screen-writing has undergone some revolutionary changes in recent months, and the scenarist now takes his place among the high-salaried craftsmen of the film industry.

Some of Hollywood's foremost scenario writers are receiving $2000 per week, with an average estimated at $1000 to $1500, which triple the salaries of a year or two ago.

Finis Fox, one of the veteran screen writers of Hollywood, and author of the screen play "Resurrection," and now engaged on "Ramona," attributes the growing recognition accorded the film-writing art to the public demand for better stories.

"Producers are at last realizing," he said "that the public is demanding finer stories, just as it is demanding better directors, more natural acting, beautiful photography and realistic settings. Scenario writing, as a result, has undergone, and is constantly undergoing, an evolutionary change just as the motion picture itself has undergone, and is continually undergoing an evolutionary development.

"In the old days a scenario writer dashed off a scenario in a few days. It was merely a rough outline of the story to be filmed. Today, however, on the big, fine costly productions the scenario writer requires weeks and weeks of research work, preparation, concentration of thought, and conferences with the director and technical staff, before finishing the final draft of the scenario. It may be written and rewritten several times, each time bringing it nearer to perfection.

"The scenario of today is written with all the careful thought that the playwright gives to a stage play; that the novelist gives to the best seller."

Continuity of thought and psychology has replaced the mere continuity of action in the well-written modern scenario, according to Fox.

STUDIO INTRODUCES NEW DUO AS COMEDY FEATURES

Recognizing the increasing popularity of feature-length comedies, and pursuing the theory that a pair of mischief makers can produce more laughs for a film audience than a solo comedy artist, producers are teaming up some of the best stars in the business these days for their biggest box-office offerings.

Paramount has been exploiting the comic combination of Wallace Beery and Raymond Hatton, and Chester Conklin and George Bancroft; Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is introducing Karl Dane and George K. Arthur as joint-laugh provokers, and other producers are offering similar combinations.

And now United Artists announces a comedy tie-up which brings together on the screen none other than William Boyd, the De Mille star, and Louis Wolheim, the hard-boiled stage actor, who created the role of Capt. Flagg in the original "What Price Glory."

Boyd and Wolheim are appearing together in the lavish United Artists production, "Two Arabian Knights," from the magazine story of the same name by Donald McGibney. They are presented as a pair of devil-may-care doughboys, who fight, cuss and laugh their way through a riotous series of adventures in Europe and the Orient during and after the war.

It is the first time in his long screen experience that Boyd has been cast as a comedian, and is a rather certain index of the current flair for funny films. His leading lady in this comic opus, which is being made by Caddo Productions, a new United Artists unit, is Mary Astor. She was borrowed from First National to perform in this particular picture, which is being produced under the supervision of John W. Considine, Jr., and under direction of Lewis Milestone. She is screened in a sophisticated role for the first time in her career, being the naughty oriental vampire who creates so much mischief for the curious pair of doughboys.

Considine is producing "Two Arabian Knights" with an extravagant gesture, firm in the belief that the successful comedies of the future will be those produced on a big scale as feature productions, and not those thrown together as mere fillers for more serious and more pretentious buildings.

THREE PLAYS TO FEATURE OUTDOOR INDIAN THEATER

As part of the program for Indian Ceremonial Day at Tahoe Tavern, the 25th inst., Tahoe Tamarack Theater will be dedicated.

The theater has the sky for a roof, tall pines and cedars for pillars and the mountain-rimmed lake for a back-drop. Under the direction of Marion Craig Wentworth, author of "War Brides" and other dramas, three Indian plays will be presented in the natural amphitheater, all of them founded on legends.

"Carved Woman," "The Weeper" and "His Voice Is a Whisper," by Hartley Alexander, have been chosen as especially appropriate for an occasion that brings back to the forest many tribal festivities. These brief dramas are called by the author Indian masks and are pantomime and singing.

Francis Josef Hickson, a native of Californian, who three years ago created an impression as Fray Junipero Serra in the Monterey pageant, will appear in the leading roles. Mr. Hickson is now identified with the professional stage. He will have strong support and the costumes will be the finest examples of Indian attire, it is said.

"Carved Woman" introduces a warrior who talks to the spirit of his beloved as he carves her statue and is healed of grief. The statue comes to life through the magic of the song that the Singing Man sings. "The Weeper" is another saga not unlike a Greek drama, and "His Voice Is a Whisper" is a drama in which Lone Wolf, who has fallen in a victorious battle comes back to make an effort to attract the attention of Listening Woman, his sorrowing wife.

The Indian encampment this year is to be of uncommon interest as the exhibit of aboriginal art and the group of braves and squaws who are seen at Lake Tahoe later will be part of the Indian section of Nevada's Transcontinental Highways Exposition in Reno. Many visitors on the way to this fair, which is less than three hours' motor ride from Lake Tahoe, are planning to be present at the dedication of the outdoor theater.

Miss Marjorie Day will direct all the activities of Indian Ceremonial Day.

Winning Place in Sun Object of Actor Here

Winning a place in the sun through his own efforts is the ambition of Sylvanus Stokes, Jr., or "Syl" as he has always been called. He has not had generations of good business men behind him for nothing. When he came to Hollywood and decided to go into pictures he listened to advice and still listens but has not been swerved from his plan to work his way up as others have done who are now topnotchers.

"The first thing is to handle one's self properly and know what it is all about. To learn camera angles, to absorb what the director is saying and to note other people. One must get the mechanics first," says Stokes.

From the first, directors observing his zeal and his interest and liking his type and good sportsmanship have singled him out for important business which is most gratifying to the young man who came to Hollywood without flourish but with a keen admiration for film favorites who have accomplished things.

His recent pictures have been "Dearie" for Warners, "Azure Shores" for Metropolitan, "We're All Gamblers" for Paramount, and "Sally of Our Alley," which Walter Lang is directing for Columbia.

An unlined wrap of the same fabric is worn with a mousseline dinner frock.

NEW FACES DECLARED BOON TO PROGRESS OF PICTURES

New faces have an advocate in Walter Lang, director, whose pictures keep away from the stereotyped, which promises much to the actor blessed with spontaneity.

"Nothing would fascinate me more," says Lang, "than to make a production in a place that has kept its primitive characteristics and is absolutely untouched by any of the sophistry of the age, and to use the native folk for my actors."

Lang paused to name a director who had set up his cameras in a mountainous region and had actually used untrained people in his cast and frankly admitted he was almost envious.

"The trouble with actors is that they lose their real selves before the cameras and become self-conscious," he argues. "New faces, consequently, are a boon to a production. It is a pity when the budding actor learns the tricks of his trade. If he would only continue to keep that freshness that was his initial charm, realism would be the gainer. But too soon he becomes 'actory.'"

Walter Lang believes thoroughly in technique, but again he argues that art should conceal it. It's only a means to an end, and that end is such art that one is unaware that it is art.

"New faces are as new blood in this motion-picture industry. They mean new habits, new viewpoints, an indisputable freshness that spell progress. I'm for them!" he concludes.

Lang is now busy with "Sally of Our Alley" for Columbia Pictures.

Drama Changed to Comedy Type in Production

Several years ago a Broadway producer began the preparation of what was intended to be a purely dramatic stage production. During the rehearsals so many comedy angles developed that the original script was virtually abandoned and the finished play became a roaring farce. This was "White Collars" by Edith Ellis, which has enjoyed unprecedented success in recent years in leading cities throughout the country.

An interesting parallel to this bit of theatrical history transpired in recent months at the United Artists' studio during the filming of "Two Arabian Knights" by Caddo Productions, a new producing unit headed by Howard Hughes. Hughes and John W. Considine, Jr., co-producer and supervisor of the production, began screening the story as a dramatic spectacle, with William Boyd in the starring role and Louis Wolheim and Mary Astor in support.

The story, which concerns the adventures of two American doughboys during and after the war in Europe and the Orient, developed so many amusing comedy angles that within a week after production was started Director Lewis Milestone abandoned the script entirely and he and his assistants concentrated on making the picture a series of laughs crammed with "gags" and humorous situations.

The result, according to film critics, who have previewed "Two Arabian Knights," is one of the greatest celluloid laugh provokers that has come out of Hollywood. So far as is known these are the only two instances in stage and film history in which drama has been transposed almost entirely to comedy during the preparation of a production for presentation to the public.

Dr. Harriet W. Carmen, now past 90 years of age and a resident of Los Angeles, has the distinction of being the first woman to receive a diploma to practice medicine in Great Britain.

Young Writers Urged Not to Be Discouraged

The legion of struggling young writers who are just trying to "break into the game" should not be discouraged by rejection slips nor the fact that publishers are flooded with manuscripts, according to Raymond L. Schrock, whose careful study of the literary market during the last several months convinces him that good stories are scarce.

"By good stories, I mean those with sufficient dramatic interest and details to make them adaptable to the motion-picture screen," says Schrock. "It is far better to abbreviate them than to endeavor to build them up with incidents that are likely to appear foreign to the motion-picture audience."

Schrock returned to Hollywood not long ago from New York and other large eastern cities, where he reviewed the current stage successes. Of all that he witnessed, the majority lacked the qualities which he previously mentioned, plus a substantial plot structure.

Her Car Stolen as She Works on Land Deal

Laska Winter is willing to vouch for the truth of the adage "Nothing is gained without loss."

Laska recently purchased several acres of land in a spot near Los Angeles known as "Rim of the World." The following day she sold her holdings at a profit of more than $5000 and thought she was "sitting on top of the world." However, when Laska returned to where she had parked her car she found it had been stolen while she was busy closing the deal.

Now she is wondering just what her business acumen profited her.

JUNGLES FILM TO OPEN HERE

Native Cast of 300 Will be Seen in "Chang" at Million Dollar Theater

With the Siamese jungle for a backdrop, with the sickening tropical sun for Kleig lights, with monkeys for comedians, and Changs for villains, with a courageous half-naked native for the hero, Merian Cooper and Ernest Schoedsack, two young Americans, have created a melodrama made in the heart of India with a native cast of 300 people and with thousands of animals.

"Chang" is the Paramount film which will open at the Million Dollar Theater Friday. The picture is of the jungle with its myriads of orchids and passion flowers, with its black magis, with its weird moods and awful terrors.

The meaning of the word "Chang" is not to be divulged according to agreement made between the Paramount studios and the Million Dollar. Incidentally Los Angeles will be the second city in the world to see this film. It is now playing in New York.

Picturization Is Story of Actress's Life

The story of "Senorita," Bebe Daniels's newest starring picture for Paramount, now playing at the Rialto, might well have been the story of the star herself. For Miss Daniels is of South American ancestry and on her mother's side traces her lineage to the grandees of Barcelona, Spain. But for the intervention of fate, Bebe Daniels might well have been a South American senorita. Fate, however ordained it otherwise, and so it came about that the Senorita Eva Guadalupe met and loved George Butler Griffin, American Consul to Bgota.

In the course of events, George Butler Griffin returned to the United States, bringing with him his South American bride. The years rolled on and their daughter married an actor, Daniels by name. Thus to Bebe Daniels's Spanish ancestry was added a heritage of the stage and another brilliant luminary of the screen.

Supporting Miss Daniels in "Senorita" are James Hall, and William Powell. Clarence Badger directed.

Whisker Crop Costs Actor Many Friends

If you want to keep your friends, don't raise whiskers!

Such is the admonition of Herbert Moulton, former newspaper critic, who turned actor three months ago when Clarence Brown offered him a role in the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer special, "The Trail of '98."

Since that time Moulton estimates that he has lost at least two dozen friends—and the fault lies neither with Moulton nor his friends—but with the bristling beard he is required to wear for his part in the picture.

"I didn't realize what an effective disguise a beard could be," he declares. "I've heard of facial foliage, but never thought that one could hide behind it almost as well as he could behind the natural kind."

There's one compensation, however, for the fact that most of Moulton's friends pass him by without recognizing him.

"Yesterday I walked past three creditors," he says, "and they didn't give me a tumble."

Christie Signs Tall Blond of Stage Career

In line with the policy of making a definite and vigorous search for new faces for Christie comedies comes the announcement from Al Christie that Lorraine Eddy, tall and blond young lady from the legitimate stage, has been placed under contract. With work well under way for the new season of production for the Paramount program, fountain pens and contract forms have been much in demand in the offices of the Christie studio. Miss Eddy is the third young lady to be signed in as many weeks, the first two being Jane Manners and Doris Dawson.

It is considered probable that Miss Eddy will be much in evidence as leading lady for Jimmie Adams, but no definite announcement was made whether or not she would appear in the pictures of other Christie comedians, such as Bobby Vernon, Billy Dooley, Neal Burns and Jack Duffy.

Screen tests made by Mr. Christie of Miss Eddy while she was playing in a Los Angeles theater resulted in a contract for the young lady. She is the fourth golden-haired girl at this comedy studio, but even with her addition, the brunettes are still in the majority, although her five feet nine inches indicate a trend toward height in embryonic feminine stars. Jane Manners, one of the two newcomers previously signed, is also quite tall.

DEAN CORNWELL GETS LIBRARY MURAL JOB

Announcement has been made of the selection of Dean Cornwell's proposal for the library murals of the Rotunda, and Albert Herter's plan for the lower lobby and the Hope-street tunnel entrance, the first with a contract for $50,000 to be delivered within a period of three years, and the second with a $10,500 contract to be completed within six months.

The Library Board and the Art Commission, recognizing much merit in the work of other artists submitted, believed that the Cornwell scheme was best adapted to the feeling of the building and the harmonizing of rotunda walls with the dome decoration. Paintings submitted by Cornwell, suggestive of the Brangwyn style, tipped the scales in his favor. The canvases are to be painted in Cornwell's London studio, where he will have the advantage of helpful criticism from Brangwyn, with whom he has been associated for the last two years.

Dean Cornwell has found in the Goodhue Library Building the "spirit of the West, youth and America—a sort of uprightness." He is taking up this opportunity of great murals with all the enthusiasm of youth and an intense admiration of Goodhue's technique. Known among artists as the highest paid illustrator in the world, he is happy to forego for a time the famous salary to seize the opportunity of making a name with these murals for a great public building in the West.

Cornwell was born in Louisville, Ky., in 1892 and when he was 19 years of age went to Chicago, where he became connected with the Chicago Tribune. He studied at the Art Institute and determined to go to New York for further study. Working under Harvey Dunn, a pupil of Howard Pyle's, he secured a contract for illustrating of the Red Book under Ray Long. Later as editor of the Hearst magazines, Ray Long gave Cornwell a free hand in originating vignettes and establishing a "Cornwell" style of magazine illustration. At the height of his career as an illustrator, the young artist gave up all he had achieved in the way of a secure position in New York, to go abroad to study under Brangwyn and to work from his sketches on some of the great panels in Skinner's Hall, London. A number of honors have come to Cornwell of recent months. His exhibit at the Architectural League in New York won considerable attention and he was made a member of the league and of the Grand Central Galleries Association. He has painted panels and murals for Rupert Hughes and for A. M. Andrews of California and his sketches of the streets of Jerusalem are well known.

Albert Herter's plan for the first-floor lobby includes a very beautiful design adapted from Cretan motifs, carried out in gold, turquoise blue and Venetian red. An unbroken line is to be carried from the base of the wall halfway or more into the ceiling to relieve the oppressive low feeling of the room.

The same continued line is to be used in the panels of the tunnel at Hope street, dividing each wall into three sections. These sections will carry murals depicting episodes of California history, the landing of Cabrillo, the building of the mission, the raising of the American flag at Monterey, Father Serra signaling the relief ship, a fiesta at a mission and the finding of gold.

POOR JUDGMENT

My personal reaction to the award is one of disappointment. While I have nothing but good wishes for the artist who is to paint the murals for the great rotunda of our finest building, I feel that an opportunity for a glorious western gesture has been muffed by the Library Board and the Art Commission, and if the decorations are carried out as indicated in the sketches, we shall get just what Dean Cornwell proposes not to give us, i.e., illustration. A casual glance at the sketches should have revealed to people with a broad understanding of art the well meant, but none the less enslaved, imitation of Brangwyn with the inevitable weakening which comes from conscious imitation.

The Library Building itself was a tremendous step forward in local architecture. It imitates no period or no person. It is the work of a great American artist, Bertram Goodhue, who after a lifetime spent in gradually divesting himself of the crust of tradition, emerged at last a free creator, standing on his own legs and with a thorough understanding of the principles, instead of the periods, of architecture. In Lee Lowrie he found a man who could design sculpture in a style harmonious with his scheme. It needed only a man who could create great mural decoration out of a similar fount of creation. Maynard Dixon, native son of California, steeped in the historic spirit of the Golden State, showed in his necessarily rough sketches—the inadequate time allowed only rough sketches—the ability to creat such designs, and he would have painted them here where he could be constantly in touch with his sources of reference.

A creative, stylistic building with imitative, illustrative decorations, that is the incongruity which the Library Board, with the approval of the Art Commission, has given us. One may legitimately wonder whether the Art Commission does not exist to prevent art, just as the Crime Commission exists to prevent crime. After careful examination, on three occasions, of the sketches by the nine competitors, I was satisfied that the Cornwell scheme was particularly unsuitable and out of keeping with the spirit of building.

Albert Herter, a master technician, while not the ideal man to work in harmony with this building, will, however, do a thorough piece of work, mature and original. His own scheme for the large murals had infinitely more dignity and design than the ones chosen. The whole transaction repeats an old story. The science of art, known only to those who create art, was absolutely disregarded by the judges, who were easy victims to their own opinions and sentiments. Their intentions were good, but they should not make such decisions without the expert advice of first-rate painters. In future it would be a good thing to take advice from a jury composed of such men as Arthur B. Davies, Eugene Savage and Childe Hassam, and to call in such discriminating local art collectors and patrons as William Preston Harrison and Dr. Dorothea Moore.

The other designs submitted were, with one possible exception, interesting. As far as color treatment went, the designs by Ray Boynton of San Francisco were the most definitely mural, but to my mind there was a fundamental weakness in giving the large central panel over to purely decorative and figureless landscape.

Albert Herter's designs were the most thoroughly worked out of all, thoughtful as to content, and with great dignity of design. They dealt with the history of printing, as did the somewhat gray but very well-planned murals of Norman Kennedy. Taber Sears took for his theme four great literary works and did a very decorative, but overly romantic group. Agustus Vincent Tack came nearer the square character of the building with his figures from the history of literature. Willy Pogany was frivolous.

Dean Cornwell will undoubtedly put his whole powers into the job, the biggest that has yet come his way. He is an exceedingly skillful designer and painter and will create a series of very interesting decorations that will give great pleasure to a wide audience. If that was the aim of the board and commission, then they may feel they have made a successful selection. But if that was their aim in the first instance they would never have accepted the Library Building itself. Personally my greatest disappointment is that they did not originally stipulate for some form of fresco or encaustic painting to be done right on the wall itself. We shall not see very much great mural painting before the direct method is again practiced.

BRIEF COMMENTS ON LOCAL EXHIBITIONS

The vitality of George Bellows once more enlivens the print room at Cannell & Chaffin's with a group of lithographs, some of which have not been seen here recently. It is a thoroughly representative group of works by an artist whose place among the American elect will only grow more secure as the years following his early death increase.

Among the prints shown are the rich-colored "Life Class," with its unusual textures, the roaring east-side "Street," strong in local flavor, the deliciously humorous "Business Men's Class," a counterpart to the "Business Men's Bath."

"Artist's Evening" contains notable black-and-white portraits of William M. Chase, Robert Henri and, I believe, Joseph Pennell. It should prove a valuable collector's item some time.

A fine little dark piece is "Workman's Kitchen," but it needs time to disclose its beauties to the beholder. There is a remarkably brilliant proof (No. 9) of "Between Rounds," and a print of what is, perhaps, the finest of all Bellows's prize-ring lithographs, "Counted Out."

"Solitude" might illustrate a story by O. Henry, with its lonely male among the dozen spooning couples. Two of the choicest are the little "Pool Player" and "Family;" while old favorites are "In the Park" and the characteristic "Splinter Beach," with its youngsters swimming in the East River.

These lithographs will live as surely as Daumbier's and they are more important for us, because of their direct response to American life. Technically, Bellows had no superior. No other lithographer has so consistently forced the stone to yield these rich blacks and silver grays.

Friday Morning Club

Thimas L. Hunt is exhibiting paintings and Emma Siboni miniatures at the Friday Morning Club this month. Hunt's paintings include marines from the east and west coats; the wharves and fishing fleet of Gloucester, Mass.; yuccas blooming in the desert; woodland scenes; snow-covered hills of New England; a large still-life, finely decorative in reds and grays. In all these Hunt asserts himself as the sensitive but positive artist. His color has that subtle difference that marks a true colorist from an insensitive one, and his patterns are invariably satisfying. He does not bother about "pure" color, but seeks colors in true relations.

Emma Siboni's miniatures have, one feels sure, good qualities as portraits and they are charmingly contained in their frames. The color is delicate and fresh and the drawing sensitive.

Exhibit at Chamber

In the rotunda of the Chamber of Commerce this week paintings by Cris Siemer will be on exhibition. For the last three years Siemer has been engaged on the backgrounds for the dioramas in the rotunda of the Chamber of Commerce, which set forth the nature of Southern California, its homes, cities, industries, harbors, commerce and agriculture. He has kept these scenes at distinctly high level of artistic merit.

This was his job, but his pleasure was to paint landscapes, and these form the present exhibition. His themes include some colorful canvases of the Grand Canyon, cool scenes on San Francisco Bay, and mountain landscapes from Southern California, painted in the full flush of summer.

Siemer's doctrine is to paint nature "as is," first choosing her most colorful aspects. His compositions prove his ability to select good subjects and there is a fidelity to the structure and atmospheric color of these Southland mountains that will elicit nothing but admiration for his mountain paintings.

Siemer has executed murals in San Francisco, a mural in the State Exposition Building Exposition Park, and more recently a portrait of Guy Wiggins, which was presented to the Guy Wiggins Trade School.

Ainslie's

At the Ainslie Galleries is an exhibition of recent paintings by Franz Bischoff, whose work is too well known to need much comment. He would seem to be moving toward greater simplicity and breadth as evinced in his "San Jacinto Mountains." Throughout, his work is decorative and sometimes dramatic. For his subjects he has taken the coast at Laguna and Monterey, the desert, mountains and groves of sycamores.

A mixed exhibit at these galleries contains two of Carl Oscar Borg's well-known Hopi Indian paintings, the spectacular "Festival in Hopi Land," with its rich shadows, and the very good "Loom of the Desert." Other works shown are by Maurice Braun, good characteristic examples of his painting; a lyrical landscape with houses by Dederick Stuber, a decorative treescape by Orrin White, and one of Barse Miller's fishing village scenes.

In still another gallery is a fine work by Willard L. Metcalf, "Gloucester Harbor," in blues and silvers, and it was before a none-too-interesting early Blakelock I heard a lady exclaim, "Oh, my—oh, my—that's worth $1500! Oh, my—o-oh, my-y—I can't get over it!"

Japanese Blocks

Kazue Yamagishi is holding an exhibition of his work as a cutter and printer of wood-blocks at the Olympic Hotel, 117 North San Pedro street, room 408, this week only.

This exhibit is comprised of some 100 prints from wood blocks cut, carved and hand-printed by Yamagishi, who is now in Los Angeles on his world tour of art study.

He has devoted over twenty years, since 1905, to an intensive study of the art of wood carving under a noted master, Suyekichi Muto. At the same time he has studied western oil painting under Count Kiyoteru Kuroda, one of the leading Japanese painters in oil.

Yamagishi has done something new by reproducing oil paintings in woodblock prints, which is unique and remarkable. This new venture has met with great success in Japan and drew the attention of artists, as well as the authorities of the Department of Education, with the result that he is now being sent abroad by the Department of Education to study art in America and Europe.

Many of the original paintings are from the brushes of the leading contemporary artists of Japan, including several by Yamagishi. They comprise Yamato-ye, landscapes and portraits of characters in famous plays by Chikamatsu, who is classed as the Shakespeare of Japan. All of the wood blocks of the prints shown were destroyed in the fire in Tokio following the earthquake of 1923.

We occidentals will be more interested in the fine flowing oriental line than in the attempt to reproduce oil paintings. These blocks are cut with fine craftsmanship and, many of them, printed with exquisite taste. It is good to know that the old craftsmanship is not entirely forgotten in Japan.

Fine Craftsmen

Porter Blanchard and Douglas Donaldson invite the public to an exhibition on Sunday afternoon, the 18th inst., at the Donaldson Studio, 4960 Melrose Hill. The exhibition will include a group of specially designed sterling flatware, plates, bowls and boxes. A number of the pieces combine the use of silver with jewels and enamel. At the close of the exhibition representative pieces will be sent as a traveling exhibition to art centers of the East.

Notes

Herbert Van Blarcom Acker, portrait painter of Pasadena, after a winter in Florence, has returned to his studio in Paris. In Florence he painted a portrait of Miss Burkham of St. Louis, who was living in her parents' Florentine villa.

Daisy M. Hughes of Los Angeles was among the American exhibitors at the Salon des Artistes Francaises this year. Miss Hughes has just returned to France from a painting trip in Corsica and North Africa, and is working in Brittany with a group of artists under George Elmer Browne. Last winter Miss Hughes was elected a member of the National Society of Women Painters and Sculptors.

Buying a Van Dyke

J. P. Morgan, Sr., his acquisitive nerves all a-tingle, had asked for an oppointment with the great art dealer to see the Van Dyke for which the latter had paid $100,000 at Christies. There was delay. The great dealer's secretary was not certain that his master could give Mr. Morgan an audience, but he would do his best. At last it was settled. The king of Wall street entered the palatial lobby. He was greeted by whispering sons of princes in cutaways, morning trousers, spats and monocles, who passed him, whispering in quiet well-bred accents one to another. He waited a moment in this anteroom, a moment in that. He ascended elevators, was conducted down lengthy corridors, still passing from one whispering gentleman to another.

At length he sat in the anteroom itself. The last reigning duke tapped discreetly on the paneled door. He discoursed silently with one who disappeared. Five minutes elapsed. The financier tapped his heavy stick and fumed inwardly. Then the door reopened. Amid more whisperings he was ushered into the presence.

The great dealer half-looked up

Comedian Signs Long Contract With Christie

Billy Engle, who has appeared in many of the Christie comedies during the last season, has signed a long-time contract as a regular featured player in the Christie comedies for Paramount.

Engle will fill the place formerly occupied by Jack Duffy in the Christie releases, Duffy having moved up into a starring position in the Christie series of twelve comedies in which he will alternate with Neal Burns and Anne Cornwall at the head of the cast.

Moving Duffy into stellar position is in line with Christie's policy of developing new comedians in supporting roles in the comedies and when they have caught on with the public as outstanding personalities, moving them up into stellar prominence. It has been pointed out recently by leading executives in the industry that as a rule the most successful comedians do not come from the stage but come up through the pictures, and this is the system under which Christie is developing the stars in his various series of comedies.

San Francisco Locale for New Astor Picture

"Shanghaied" is the title of a new F.B.O. production which has just been finished. Gertrude Astor is the party who does the dirty work.

In "Shanghaied" Miss Astor is given another opportunity to portray a sophisticated gold-digger, not, however, in the formal atmosphere of a drawing-room but as a dance-hall queen in the wildest terpsichorean emporium of San Francisco's erstwhile notorious Barbary Coast.

The object of Miss Astor's machinations is Patsy Ruth Miller, while Ralph Ince is the man in the triangle. In "Shanghaied" Ince is both star and director.

This is Miss Astor's first picture in months away from Universal, which sought to place here under a five-year contract. She prefers to remain a free-lance player and offers to the contrary have thus far been spurned by her.

Comedy to Be Based on Army Aviation Humor

Although he is making elaborate preparations for a comedy based on army aviation, Monty Banks, Pathe feature comedian, assures all and sundry that he will attempt to shatter no world-flight records in the course of making "An Ace in the Hole," nor to fly across either Atlantic or Pacific. The comedy star is simply going out to capture all the laughs that may be up in the air, so he says.

"An Ace in the Hole" will be made from an original story by Charles Horan. The author, Monty and a staff of scenarists which includes Matt Taylor, Norman Stephenson and Sheridan Hall, are now working on the comedy construction for the story.

Faithful portrayal of army life among embryo airmen is assured, incidentally, by the fact that two of the writers, Sheridan Hall and Norman Stephenson, enlisted in the air service soon after the declaration of war in 1917. Both eventually won commissions as officers of aviation. Production of "An Ace in the Hole" will begin within the next ten days.

Thomas Hazelwood of Asfordby, Eng., has just completed fifty years' service as bell ringer at the village church, and has missed but few services since he began his duties when 11 years of age.

Seven Gag Men Aid in Making Langdon Farce

Seven "gag" men had a part in creating the laughs for Harry Langdon's picture, "His First Flame," a Pathe picture, now playing at the Figueroa Theater.

Each one of these "gag" men thought up innumerable funny situations, which Langdon tried out, one by one, in the making of the picture. Only those which stood up under fire of criticism were incorporated in the finished film.

The title of the picture, "The First Flame," has a double meaning. It relates not only to Harry's first love affair, but to his first experiences as a fireman.

Ruth Hiat is the leading lady, who "burns up his heart," and Natalie Kingston is the beauty who tries to lure him away. The picture has more laughs to the reel than any of Mr. Langdon's pictures, it is said.

Five acts of vaudeville, an original organlogue by J. Wesley Lord, organist of the Figueroa, a short comedy and a Fox newsreel are included in the program.

Christmas cracker manufacturers of England have started to make crackers for the next Christmas rush, nearly a twelvemonth production being sold in a few days just before the holidays.

LANE TURNS POET; PENS SAD RHYME

Lupino Lane, star comedian, whose fame is equally known on screen and stage, quaintly voices a plaint concerning the reverse evolution of his dramatic literary effort in the following humorous lines.

EVOLUTION

By Lupino Lane

I once wrote a serious drama
That's long, long ago in the past;
I dreamt of the day I should see it,
I dreamt of its wonderful cast.
To John Barrymore I then read it,
He thought that it lacked sex appeal
And he told me he thought I'd improve it
By cutting the first and last reel.
I took it back home and I cut it,
I worked through the whole of the day;
I took out the two reels he mentioned
And made quite a sexual play.
To Elinor Glyn I then read it,
She listened attentively, too,
She thought if I added some music
It would make quite a decent revue;
I'd never thought of it in that light
So back home I went on the spot
And collected some gags from a budget,
And put them in place of the plot.
I then read it over to Ziegfeld
And waited to hear what he'd say;
He thought it all over, then murmured,
'Twould make a good mystery play.'
So back home I went and worked at it,
And this time I let myself go,
I put back the plot and some mystery
And made it a Lon Chaney show.
Lon Chaney politely returned it.
He didn't let one moment pass,
Back came the script and a letter,
'This surely was meant for a farce.'
I knew he was right so I started,
To write farce I'd always been keen,
So I wrote in some wives and some husbands,
And put some more doors in the scene;
Next morning to Reginald Denny
I sent it, he wrote back to say,
With just a few stunts and some horses,
It would make quite a good western play.
Of course, what a fool not to see it!
I'd wasted my time from the start,
So I sat down at once with a pencil
And wrote in a part for Bill Hart;
But Bill Hart alas wasn't shooting
And said I deserved to be shot,
As he thought with a deal of condensing
It would make a good comedy plot.
Back home I went and condensed it,
I made it quite meaty and strong
And took it to Harold Lloyd;
He said, 'Good, but miles too long.'
I then got it down to a couple of reels
By working until I was ill,
He said, Yes, I think I can place it,
But it's got to be much shorter still.'
I shortened it down to a few hundred feet,
By now I was nearly a rag.
He said, 'Yes, it's good, I'll accept it,
I think it will make a good gag.'
I waited for a week for the verdict,
My mind full of worry and doubt;
At last I went miles to the 'Preview,'
To find that they'd cut the gag out!

France. And before the Inness epoch, Stuart, West and Sully were, in their art, sons of England.

"Among his American contemporaries Guy Rose had French brethren, John H. Twachtman, Theodore Robinson and J. Alden Weir, who preceded him in death, and Childe Hassam, who is still living. These five will rank as America's great exponents of French impressionism. They were no less American for being artistically French. The language of art passes at will over the boundary lines of nations, just as does the language of music, and so the glory of origin rather than the glory of use remains to France. Some of Twachtman's pictures are equal in beauty to those of Monet and some of Guy Rose's landscapes are unsurpassed in the whole range of impressionist painting. And the pictures of Twachtman and Rose have more appeal to Americans than do those of Monet, Sisley or Renoir, for, although the language of their art may have originated in Europe, their spirit was American and the beauty they created is the beauty that thrills the American heart. When he painted in France, Rose saw through the eyes of a Californian, and when he came back home the last time, ripe in technique and rich in the language of his art, he interpreted the beauty of California's mountains and deserts and colorful sea coast as only a Californian could who loved the things he painted with a feeling deeper than that inspired by beauty alone.

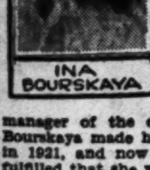
"Guy Rose was at heart a lyric poet whose picture poems had for their schemes certain aspects of nature that were at once the most delicate and the most evanescent—phases to which only the most vibrant and sensitive spirits could become attuned. He sought to show Californians a beauty in their surroundings of which even themselves were not aware, harmonies as rare almost as "the music of the spheres." What wonder is it that, like many another genius, he was meagerly appreciated by his countrymen. All the more credit is due to those who actually did purchase his canvases in the years gone by, and who can pride themselves not so much on having acquired works whose value in money they have seen double and quadruple, but upon having the fineness of vision to recognize mastery in art when that mastery was unperceived by the great majority of picture lovers.

"There can be no doubt now as to Guy Rose's place in art. The last obstacle to his recognition has been removed—the painter is dead. He will become a tradition in California and one of the State's glories. His paintings, once neglected, will become the prized possessions of collectors, and some day, through gifts and bequests, there should be "Guy Rose rooms" in the museums of Los Angeles, San Francisco and San Diego."

OPERA STAR ADDED TO LIST HERE

Ina Bourskaya, Russian Singer, to Join Company in Appearance

Ina Bourskaya, Russian star and favorite of New York opera lovers, has been added to the list of artists engaged for the fall season of the Los Angeles Grand Opera Association, according to Gaetano Merola, general director. Los Angeles opera patrons will remember this artist, who first appeared here as a member of the Russian Opera Company. Since that time she has become a regular member of the greatest operatic institution in America.



INA BOURSKAYA

Merle Armitage of the Los Angeles Grand Opera Association was manager of the company in which Bourskaya made her American debut in 1921, and now sees his prophecy fulfilled that she would become a favorite in Ameria. George Leslie Smith, general manager, is absorbed in the plans and designs which Fritz Kraencke, famous scenic painter from Europe, is executing for the production of "Falstaff," which will star both Antonio Scotti and Lawrence Tibbett.

Typical English settings of modern character will give the most advantageous background for this production. More than 5000 square yards of Chinese silk have been ordered for the production of the spectacle, "Turandot," and on which the painters will start work within the next two weeks. At the ninth meeting of the Women's Committee held last Thursday evening Mrs. R. D. Shepherd reported more than $40,000 worth of season tickets subscribed to date.

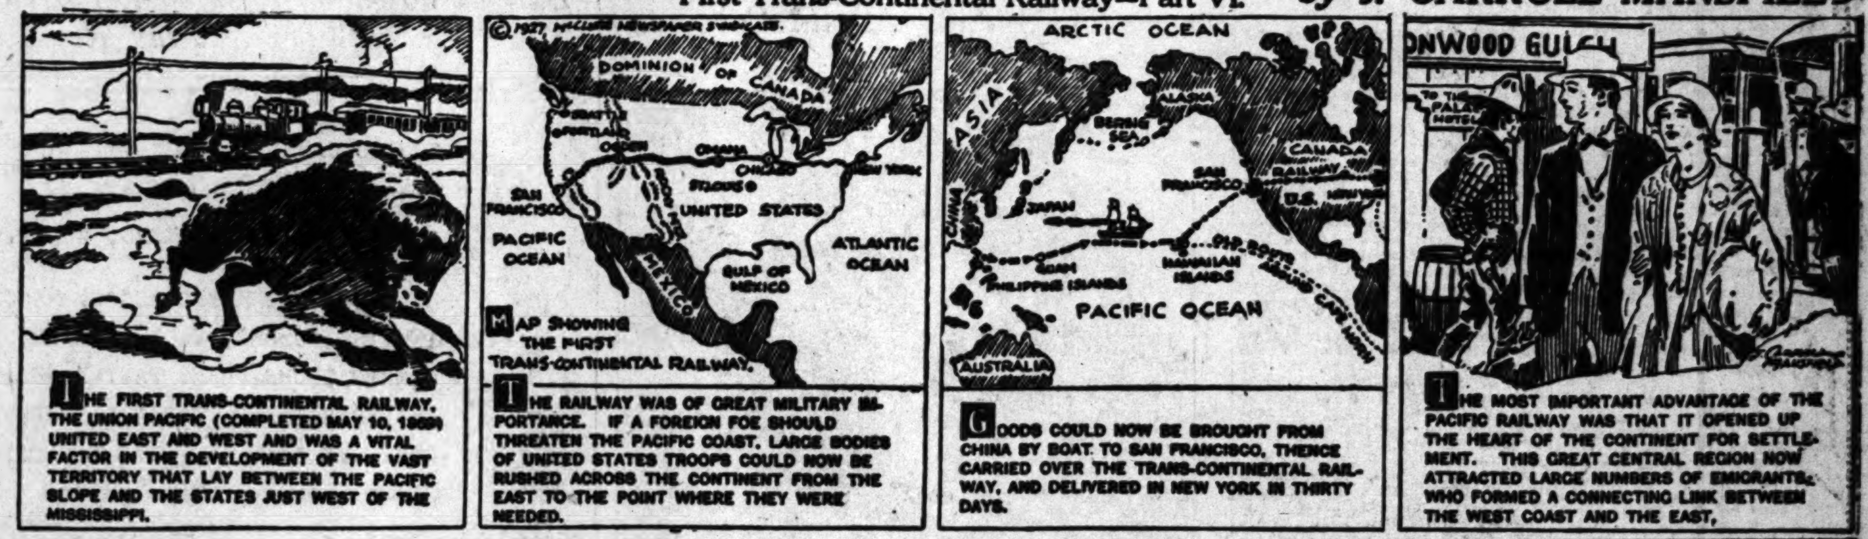
First Trans-Continental Railway—Part VI.

by J. CARROLL MANSFIELD



THE FIRST TRANS-CONTINENTAL RAILWAY, THE UNION PACIFIC (COMPLETED MAY 10, 1869) UNITED EAST AND WEST AND WAS A VITAL FACTOR IN THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE VAST TERRITORY THAT LAY BETWEEN THE PACIFIC SLOPE AND THE STATES JUST WEST OF THE MISSISSIPPI.

THE RAILWAY WAS OF GREAT MILITARY IMPORTANCE. IF A FOREIGN FOE SHOULD THREATEN THE PACIFIC COAST, LARGE BODIES OF UNITED STATES TROOPS COULD NOW BE RUSHED ACROSS THE CONTINENT FROM THE EAST TO THE POINT WHERE THEY WERE NEEDED.

GOODS COULD NOW BE BROUGHT FROM CHINA BY BOAT TO SAN FRANCISCO, THENCE CARRIED OVER THE TRANS-CONTINENTAL RAILWAY, AND DELIVERED IN NEW YORK IN THIRTY DAYS.

THE MOST IMPORTANT ADVANTAGE OF THE PACIFIC RAILWAY WAS THAT IT OPENED UP THE HEART OF THE CONTINENT FOR SETTLEMENT. THIS GREAT CENTRAL REGION NOW ATTRACTED LARGE NUMBERS OF EMIGRANTS, WHO FORMED A CONNECTING LINK BETWEEN THE WEST COAST AND THE EAST,

Scenarist Now Director Gives Writers Advice

A logical route to the coveted position of motion-picture director has been disclosed by the announcement that Pierre Collings, Paramount scenarist, has been signed to direct for F.B.O., and will begin within a few weeks the direction of his first picture, from the H. C. Witwer novel, "Alex the Great," which Collings is now adapting.

Collings began his motion-picture career ten years ago as a cameraman with the Douglas Fairbanks unit. After several years on camera, he became a scenario writer at F.B.O., where he will now be a director. It isn't entirely unprecedented for a cameraman to become a director. The combination of experience on the camera and thorough training in screen writing augurs very well for Collings's success in his new field, it is said. Among Collings's recent works as scenarist are the current "Knockout Reilly," and a number of Paramount pictures starring Pola Negri, Adolphe Menjou and Raymond Griffith, whose forthcoming "Time to Love" was Collings's latest work for Paramount.

Drama Section Will Present Trio of Plays

Three one-act plays, two original, are to be presented on the evenings of Tuesday and Wednesday, by the drama section of the Beverly Hills Woman's Club, at the clubhouse. "The Beach Club" the winning play of the section contest, written by Wanda Davis Phillips, of Beverly Hills "Hurrah for Crime," by Mrs. Hayward Mack of Hollywood, and "The Flattering Word," by George Kelly are the three.

The cast of "The Beach Club," which has its theme the present-day abundance of club memberships and the trials a Beverly Hills family has over them includes, Hazel Landers Hummel, Leona Werner, Gordon Clifford, brother of Ruth Clifford, and Ray C. Kellerman. Irene Hunt Weyman is directing this.

Mrs. Mack's play, "Hurrah for Crime," which is being presented for the first time includes Maurine Gee, who won the national drama prize of the General Federation last year for her play "The Delicate Child." Helen Netz and Edgar Donley are in its cast. W. R. McWade is directing.

"The Flattering Word," directed by Mrs. Randolph Carter, has Betty Kirby and Betty Hooper, Dr. Henry T. Willett and J. Louis White. It was written by George Kelly.

Favorites for Abroad Chosen by Natli Barr

Natli Barr, Hollywood's newest star from Paris, brought with her from Europe a decided predilliction for the films of Gloria Swanson.

"Many of her pictures I saw in Paris three and four times each," confesses Miss Swanson's Russian prototype.

Now the emotional actress, who is under contract to First National, adds to her list the following dozen stars who are, or as she believes, will be reigning favorites abroad. They are Jetta Goudal, Dolores Costello, Charles Farrell, Janet Gaynor, Clara Bow, Jack Holt, Rod LaRocque, Vilma Banky, Pauline Starke, Lillian Gish, Ronald Colman and Lewis Stone.

The qualities which Miss Barr admires in her favorites are emotional and histrionic scope, sincerity and versatility.

Beverly Hills Woman's Club Closes Season

With one of the largest groups of members present that the club has enjoyed this year, reservations for luncheon being about 150, the Beverly Hills Woman's Club closed this club season Friday afternoon. During the luncheon, which preceded the meeting, incidental trio music was enjoyed.

Mrs. Norman Pabst, retiring president, gave her report of the year's work. The financial and membership reports shows considerable growth and activity this past year.

The new officers were seated and these included: Mrs. J. J. Jerome Canavan, president; Mrs. Edmund Locke, first vice-president; Mrs. C. M. Davenport, second vice-president; Mrs. J. B. Millard, third vice-president; Mrs. A. C. Heegard, fourth vice-president; Mrs. G. F. Elmendorf, recording secretary; Mrs. J. Lynn Ironmonger, corresponding secretary; Mrs. H. L. Gee, general curator; Mrs. Norman Pabst, Mrs. Leslie Williams, Mrs. Josiah Kirby and Mrs. H. B. Fargo, directors.

DILLAN PUPILS DISPLAY TALENTS

On Sunday afternoon the advanced pupils of Miss Fannie C. Dillon in piano and musical composition gave a recital of interest. Outstanding was the playing of Almanell Sprong and the work in composition of Porsia Poglin and Elizabeth Phillips.

PICTURE RANKS AS ONE OF YEAR'S BEST

It is fitting that a "war picture" should profit enough money to pay a portion of the national war debt. Paul Sloane's "Corporal Kate," made for the De Mille studios, is proving to be one of the company's biggest money makers, according to auditors' reports from P. D. C. Returns on this picture indicate that it will be one of De Mille's "eight best sellers" this year.

About 50 per cent of the government employees in Washington are women.

Lindbergh Feat Inspires Actor to Harder Work

"I would rather be in Charlie Lindbergh's boots today than be the greatest picture actor in the world," says Grant Withers, young film player. "There's nothing unique in that remark, I admit, as no doubt many others would like to be in those same boots. But I'm not a flyer, I'm an actor.

"I turned down an appointment to Annapolis to become one. Therefore my chances to become an international hero are nil. But my chances to become a good motion-picture actor are better because of Lindbergh. His courageous feat has accomplished one thing that he doesn't know about. It has inspired me to work much more diligently toward my chosen goal—to become a good actor."

Young Withers will soon be seen here in an outstanding role in Buster Keaton's latest picture, "College," in which he is a great hero to his room-mate, Buster.

JANET GAYNOR STARS

Janet Gaynor is starred in "Two Girls Wanted," film version of the Broadway play by Gladys Unger, now being produced at Fox Films west-coast studios under direction of Alfred E. Green.

FRIML MAY WITNESS PRODUCTION OF FILM

Rudolf Friml, famous musical composer and creator of "Rose Marie," one of the world's greatest comic opera successes, may have the unique experience of watching his own music translated into screen action. Friml has been invited by Renee Adoree, a personal friend, to attend the filming of his musical play, in which she will play the title role at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios. Production of the screen version will commence shortly with William Nigh, director of "The Fire Brigade" and "Mr. Wu," at the megaphone.

MODERNS ON CORELLI LIST

Keith Corelli, pianist, will play a recital of modern music Monday evening at his residence studio at 8984 West Eighth street. A feature of the program will be the first performance on the Coast of "Scarlattiana," by Alfredo Casella, for piano and chamber orchestra, based on themes of Scarlatti. In this number Mr. Corelli will have the assistance of the Ton-Kunstler Quartet, a well-known radio organization, composed of Josef Kari, violinist, Lionel Melchior, violinist; Otto Merklein, 'cellist, and George Von Strimple, bass. Mr. Corelli also will play two of his own compositions, "Involution," and concert paraphrases on "La Derniere Valse," by Oscar Strauss.

SOCIETY OF CINEMALAND

BY JUANA NEAL LEVY

While the summer is always the season of out-of-door festivities, this year Society of Cinemaland is celebrating with many delightful affairs, many of them being given at the lovely homes of the hosts, while the beaches and country clubs have their full share as setting for many festivities.

Every now and then Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Carewe plan a little surprise party for those near and dear to their "shop" society.

By "shop" society, we mean those with whom Mr. Carewe comes in daily contact in his work in producing pictures. The "shop folk" include everybody from his stars down to the property men—they're one and all alike and what a great deal of fun is had by all at these parties staged at the beautiful Beverly home of the producer and his charming wife.

This week marked one of these events. It was in the form of a "tacky party" with everybody wearing costumes or old clothes.

Dolores Del Rio and her husband, Senor Jaime Martinez Del Rio, appeared on the scene as little children. Rita Carewe, the pretty blond daughter of the producer who, I understand, is now engaged having screen tests made at the Paramount studios for the role of "Lorelei" in "Gentlemen Prefer Blonds," wore a pair of blue overalls decorated with patches which the little actress asserts she sewed on, herself.

Bert Lytell and Claire Windsor were on hand in a circus clown and ballet dancer outfit. Mr. Carewe wore an Indian garb. (You know, he is partly Indian.) Harry Wilson came dressed as a sheik with his face all tanned and a very serious-looking mustache on his upper lip. Finis Fox, the writer, who in private life is the brother of Edwin Carewe, appeared in a dazzling costume of early California days. According to Finis, he wanted to keep in the atmosphere of "Ramona." Incidentally, he happens to be writing the script for this story which his brother will produce with Dolores Del Rio as the star.

Wallace Fox and Mrs. Fox—yes, another brother of Carewe, appeared in old clothes. Wally, as his friends call him, has just signed a contract for a directorship at one of the Hollywood studios, so he felt able to wear a suit of old clothes and still smile the while.

It was a gala affair and started with an elaborate buffet supper, games, music and loads of laughs throughout the evening.

Kid parties seem to be all the rage nowadays. Only a few nights ago, Dolores Del Rio tendered a "children's party" at the beautiful Beechwood Drive residence which is occupied by the star and her husband. Several dozen of Hollywood's shining lights appeared in the party. Among those who arrived in children's attire were Bert Lytell, Claire Windsor, Rita Carewe, Vivian and Rosetta Duncan, Don Alvarado and Mrs. Alvarado, Nils Aster, Joseph Schildkraut and Mrs. Schildkraut, Johnny Hines and his brother, Charles, who acted as nursemaid to Johnny (dressed as an infant,) Betty Morrison, Harry Crocker, Finis and Mrs. Fox, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Carewe, Raoul Walsh, who directed Dolores Del Rio in "What Price Glory" and "Carmen," and a host of others.

Children's games were played, "charades" were enacted by the guests, and everybody proclaimed it one of the most interesting and humorous parties of the season in Hollywood.

The social calendar of Hollywood these days pays tribute to Vilma Banky and Rod La Rocque, whose wedding will take place Sunday, the 26th inst. at the Church of the Good Shepherd, Beverly Hills, with Father Mullins officiating, Samuel Goldwyn giving the bride away and Cecil B. De Mille serving as best man.

Thursday, the 9th inst., Mr. and Mrs. Sam Behrendt gave a party at Hillcrest Country Club in honor of the young couple, which was largely attended by the elite of the motion-picture colony, while the following evening a dinner and lingerie shower was given Miss Banky by Mrs. Samuel Goldwyn and Mrs. Abraham Lehr at Mrs. Lehr's home. Friday Diana Kane sponsored a hosiery shower at the home of Lois Wilson with Vilma Banky as special honor guest.

A large invitation list included the prominent members of Hollywood society.

And so on—for the merry month of June—until the wedding date.

Sunday-Evening Affairs

A number of the film luminaries are taking advantage of the quiet atmosphere prevailing at Hollywood Montmartre Sunday evenings when a musical program of classical and semi-classical numbers is given by Gino Verdi and his Hungarian orchestra. Among those who entertained with small, intimate dinner parties last Sunday were Mr. and Mrs. Clive Brook. Victor Fleming entertained Mr. and Mrs. Louis Leighton (Hope Loring,) and little daughter. Paul Allison had Mr. and Mrs. Jimmy Starr as his dinner guests. Among others who dined in the cafe last Sunday evening were Mr. and Mrs. Bennie Fineman (Evelyn Brent,) Mr. and Mrs. Sam Warner (Lina Basquette,) and Mr. and Mrs. Tom Wells (Dorothy Dunbar.) Irving Thalberg dined with Norma Shearer.

Hollywood Bachelor Girls

The Hollywood Bachelor Girls, an organization of prominent motion-picture players of the younger set, met this week at the home of Miss Barbara Luddy, 1354 North Serrano avenue. Miss Luddy entertained in her customary gracious manner. The business meeting was devoted to the pledging of new members, after which dinner was served and a reception held.

Sylvia Picker, the president, announced that a special meeting will be held next week at which the work of raising a clubhouse fund will begin. This probably will be done in connection with the formal opening of the new Club LaSalle, to be announced soon.

Those present were Misses Mary K. Reticker, Sylvia Picker, Evelyn Baer, Fern Salyer, Pat Woodhead, Mary Stuart, Sally Phipps, Loretta Young, Sally Blaine, Helene Hill, Frances Hite, Polly Ann Young, Martha Sleeper, Edna Marion, Sally Eilers, Audrey Henderson, Althea Kendall, Ruth Greenberg and Frances Early.

Visiting Here

Mrs. Dorothy Kay, mother of Kathleen Kay, arrived here from her home in Philadelphia the last week and will spend the summer with her daughter. Many pleasant affairs are being arranged in her honor.

Delightful Affair

Mr. and Mrs. B. J. Abrahams (Kathleen Kay) entertained Tuesday evening at a delightful affair in which bridge was the chief divertisement. Their hospitable home at 6325 Warner Drive has been the scene of several pleasant informal affairs of late, the most important being a birthday surprise party which Mr. Abrahams arranged in honor of his talented wife.

Matinee Dansant

Red seems to be quite the popular color for hats, as was evinced by the number of well-known film luminaries appearing in nobby patterns of this hue at Brandstatter's Hollywood Montmartre at the midweek fashion show and matinee dansant Wednesday. Mrs. Monte Blue's auburn hair was well set off by a small red hat. Priscilla Dean, in a gray sports outfit, also wore a very chic, tight-fitting head dress. Sally Blaine wore a red hat, as also did Sally O'Neill, which accentuated her piquant, radiant charm. Others wearing smart-looking crimson hats were Virginia Fox, Edna May Cooper and Ruth Collier.

Among those who entertained with luncheon parties were Bess Meredyth—in a white coat and hat—who entertained Virginia Fox, Margaret Ettinger, Mrs. Jack Warner—who wore a stunning blue frock, and Mrs. Harry Rapf—very charming in a green afternoon dress.

Sally O'Neill lunched with Lois Moran and Blanche Sweet. Miss Sweet wore a close-fitting white sports outfit and red scarf, while Miss Moran was attired in a blue taffeta dress and white hat. Miss Moran has started the innovation in Hollywood among the feminine film folk of not wearing any make-up whatever on the street—either lipstick or rouge. She looked very charming while lunching with Miss Sweet and Miss O'Neill.

Margaret Reid lunched with Mrs. A. J. Wilde, while Evelyn Brent, in a green sports outfit, entertained Dorothy Herzog and Ruth Harriet Louise entertained Mrs. Max Weil, Mrs. Jerry Hoffman, Lily J. Shadur, Blanche Ranch, Goete Ranch and Ruth Waterbury.

Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Hughes lunched together, Mrs. Monte Blue entertained her mother at luncheon and Ruth Collier had Theda Bara—very charming in a gray sports dress and hat to match, and the latter's sister as her guests. Sally Blaine, in a gray afternoon frock, lunched with her sister, Polly Ann Young; Lorraine Eddy was the guest of Harry Crocker and Mrs. John Stahl entertained Mrs. Norman Taurog.

Bridge Party

One of the charming and busy hostesses of the month is Mrs. Julia A. McAvoy, mother of May McAvoy, Warner Brothers star, whose beautiful Hollywood home was the scene of a delightful bridge party yesterday.

Gladioli were used in profusion to decorate the interiors of the home, while prevailing June flowers of blue and gold provided the colorful motif of the bridge tables, which were arranged for the Mmes. Kenly Wilson, H. J. Ernster, T. M. Savage, Dorothy G. Cooper, Consuelo Kirkpatrick, Victor E. Dalton and Henry G. Bodkin. Novel favors and awards for the games further attested to the artistic manner in which the hostess entertained her friends.

Entertains at Benefit

Harry Carey, noted character actor, and Fritz Tidden entertained a group of friends at the Mike Donlin benefit at the Philharmonic. The guests included Mr. and Mrs. Mark Kelley, Clarence Brown, Margaret Reid, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Carey and Mr. and Mrs. Fritz Tidden.

Tea and Bridge

Mrs. Jack Dempsey (Estelle Taylor) was hostess, Tuesday afternoon, at a tea given at her beautiful Hollywood home.

The affair was unique, in that it called together those of Mrs. Dempsey's friends who were able to play bridge. It was their duty to teach their hostess the tricks of the game. And they did.

Among the guests were Helen Louise Walker, Mayme Ober Peake, Ruth Waterbury, Dorothy Herzog, Franc Dillon, Doris Denbo, Eleanor Barnes, Dorothy Manners, Margaret Reid, Dorothy Cartwright, Dorothy Spensley, Mrs. Dan Thomas, Dorothy Wooldridge, Ruth Tildesley, Alice Tildesley, Dorothy Donnell, Alma Whitaker, Constance Chandler, Rosalind Schafer, Elza Schallert, Grace Kingsley, Agnes Crawford, Florence Lawrence and Louella Parsons.

Mrs. Dempsey announced at this time her plans for an eastern trip within the next few weeks.

YOUNG BRIDE OF CINEMALAND

Scores of Friends Attend Ceremony

Mrs. Willard Neco

ONE of the loveliest of the young brides of the month is Mrs. Willard Neco, formerly Miss Monica Catherine Collingwood, only daughter of Joseph A. Collingwood of the Fox studios, and Mrs. Collingwood. The wedding was one of the lovely events of the month and the ceremony took place in St. Sebastian's Church in Sawtelle, with Reverend Father Jacobs officiating in the presence of the immediate relatives of the young couple, while scores of friends in the film colony were also included. Mr. Neco is superintendent of the Allers Film Laboratory of Hollywood.

Mrs. Goodrich, formerly a resident of this city is the new president of the San Joaquin Valley Federation of Women's Clubs. Mrs. Sherwood is vice-president of the Los Angeles district, Mrs. Lorbeer is junior past president and also newly elected vice-president-at-large of the California Federation of Women's Clubs, and Mrs. J. Thayer is chairman of one of the important committees. As president of the largest club in this federation as well as the State, the Friday Morning Club, Mrs. Turner, who for many years have been active in federation work notably serving as president of the Imperial Valley Federation will again assume her activities in the fall

CLUB NOTES

The Woman's City Club

The Woman's City Club will meet tomorrow in the Morosco Theater, 744 South Broadway, with the president, Mrs. G. Edward Winn, presiding.

John William Cooper, State Superintendent of Public Instruction, will address the club. Mrs. Dora A. Stearns, a past president of the club and vice-president of the State Board of Education, will introduce the speaker.

Another interesting speaker of the day will be Clark K. Belknap, representing the Seattle Chamber of Commerce. Mr. Belknap's subject will be "Pacific Coast Unity."

A third speaker, Mrs. Lou LaBlonge Whitcomb, chairman of the business women's committee of the Chamber of Commerce, will speak briefly on the "Value of the Chamber of Commerce from the Woman's Viewpoint."

The business women's section, of which Mrs. J. T. Anderson has been appointed permanent chairman, meets in the lecture room of the Public Library at 7 p.m. tomorrow. The subject to be discussed will be "Reapportionment."

Much interest centers around the appointment, by the new president, Mrs. G. Edward Winn, of committees for the coming year. These names will appear in the annual now being arranged.

Closing Meeting

Ebell Club of Long Beach elected as its president for the ensuing year Mrs. Charles F. Ross. Mrs. Ross has served for the last two years as first vice-president and membership chairman.

Others elected to serve with Mrs. Ross are: Mrs. Dan P. Bone, first vice-president (chairman of membership;) Mrs. George A. Reifsteck, second vice-president (chairman of program;) Mrs. A. J. Langer, third vice-president (chairman of house;) Mrs. John Kyle, fourth vice-president (chairman of ways and means;) Miss Beulah Peck, recording secretary; Mrs. R. Max Kern, corresponding secretary; Mrs. J. Everett Davis, financial secretary; Mrs. Stuart Chapman, federation secretary; Mrs. James K. Reid, treasurer; Mrs. Frank Blair, auditor; Mrs. Irwin R. Hall, parliamentarian; Mrs. Oscar Hauge, curator of departments (member of program committee;) Mrs. Walter Case, general chairman of standing committees (chairman of printing and member of program committee.)

The substantial sum of $11,516.30 was raised by the Ebell of Long Beach during the last year through its nineteen working finance groups. This was applied toward the indebtedness on the clubhouse and toward the establishment of a $500 scholarship fund. The largest single amount was $1125.12, raised by group G, composed of eighty-three members, Mrs. Dan P. Bone, chairman. The club has been so successful in raising money during the last two years that it is felt advisable by the new administration to lighten the burden for the coming year, either by reducing the quota of each group, or by combining some of the smaller groups.

League of Women Voters

Miss Annie Florence Brown, president of the more than 3000 members comprising the Oakland Forum, California League of Women Voters, in a talk before a conference given by the Long Beach unit last Wednesday declared that this great national organization most fully supplies the aid which President Coolidge in his Flag-Day address declared America needs.

RE-ELECT CLUB PRESIDENT

Mrs. Claude W. Kesler was unanimously chosen to serve for a third term as president of the Shakespeare Study and Dramatic Club, at the election recently held. The vote is considered particularly significant, as no ticket was presented, each member being requested to write out her own nominations; officers being then selected from those receiving the most nominations. Mrs. Kesler has been a student of Shakespeare for many years; it was her privilege to study under Kate Tupper Galpin, the founder of the Galpin Club, of which, as well as of Ebell, Mrs. Kesler has been a member for the last seventeen years. She has also appeared on several occasions in Shakespearean and other dramatic offerings before the foremost clubs of the city.

Other officers elected were Eric Mayne, well-known English Shakespearean actor, now making his residence in the South, where he has won his place as both lecturer and actor, vice-president; Mrs. A. B. Wenzell, who was recently elected as president of the MacDowell Club, recording secretary; Miss Helen Montgomery, dramatic student and a favorite among the club's younger set, corresponding secretary; A. S. De Santis, local attorney-at-law, treasurer, while Claude W. Kesler, who for twenty-five years has been a banker in Los Angeles, was chosen as auditor.

The two club directors will be Mrs. C. O. Rouse and Mrs. Dana O'Brien Wells. Both are prominent in club affairs of the city, and have a host of well-wishers among their many club associates. Mrs. Rouse has already demonstrated her interest in this particular organization by acting as recording and also as corresponding secretary; Mrs. O'Brien Wells has acted as director during the last year.

The last meeting of the club year will be held on Thursday evening, at the Wenzell Studios, 2976 Wilshire Boulevard. This gathering will be known as the president's night, and artists who have taken part in the society's programs during the last ten months will be the honored guests of the evening. Aside from these guests, only members of the Shakespeare Study and Dramatic Club will be present.

VISITOR ENTERTAINS IN BEVERLY HILLS TEA

Miss May Edington of London, Eng., was hostess at the Beverly Hills Hotel, Tuesday afternoon. Tea was served and a most enjoyable afternoon spent by the friends of this charming visitor, who came to Hollywood, a stranger, one month ago. NOVEL PROGRAM GIVEN AT EBELL

Poems and Bible Quotations Interpreted at Club

Composer-Pianist and Reader Present Subject

Bridge-Luncheon and Picnic in Announcement

BY HELEN SCOTT

"Life—Sunrise to Sunset" was the subject of the novel program presented by Mary Holmes Daniel, composer-pianist, and Mrs. Fred Selwyn Lang, reader, at the regular meeting of the Los Angeles Ebell Club last Monday afternoon.

The program consisted of a variety of selected poetical works and Mrs. Lang, and a number of original musical compositions by Miss Daniel.

In keeping with the analogy which was drawn between the span of life of an individual and the cycle of a single day in the universe, the main part of the program was divided into three sections, representing morning, mid-day and afternoon.

In the first group, the beautiful "Lullaby," which was read by Mrs. Lang with piano accompaniment by Miss Daniel, and the piano solo, "Laughing," with its light, graceful runs and its lilting waltz rhythm, deserved special mention.

Of the mid-day group, the reading, "The Ancient, Beautiful Things," interpreted by Mrs. Lang, was especially significant.

The afternoon included a piano solo, "Memories," which was both melodically and harmonically effective, and a delightful reading entitled "The Philosopher." Tennyson's poem, "Crossing the Bar," was read at the close of this group.

At the meeting which preceded the program, announcements were made concerning the bridge-luncheon which will be given at the clubhouse the 22nd inst. by the parliamentary law department of Ebell, and which will be cooked and served by the members of the department.

The picnic to be given at the Uplifters' Ranch in Santa Monica Canyon the 24th inst., under the auspices of the ways and means committee of the club, is eliciting much interest among the members. The proceeds from the picnic will be donated to the fund to provide furnishings for the new clubhouse.

Greetings were extended to the club Monday afternoon by Lucille La Verne, noted actress, who is appearing in Lulu Volmer's play, "Sun-Up," at the Egan Theater. Miss La Verne spoke briefly of the means which are being employed to further education among the mountain people of Tennessee and Kentucky, her statements being particularly timely, as the play, "Sun-Up," evolves around characters from the Southern Appalachian Mountains.

The names of the new applicants for membership in Ebell will be read at the regular meeting of the club this week and again next week.

The 27th inst. a musicale will be given for the members by Sylvain Noack, violinist, and May MacDonald Hope, pianist.

Evening of Song Marks Closing of Club Events

An evening of song marked the closing of the Thursday dinner evenings of the Women's University Club. Mrs. Arthur Heineman, the new sectional director of the South Pacific section of the national A.A.U.W., was the honor guest. Mrs. Heineman spoke a few words in response to the recognition of her new office giving something of the import of her work.

Mrs. Irvin J. Muma, who so generously shares her art with the club, gave a program of rare beauty. There were groups of songs from early English, German, Italian, French and English with an aria from the Italian opera, Turandot.

The background of literary interpretation and charming presence of the artist heightened the delight which the groups of songs gave. Joseph Di Tullio, the young cellist, accompanied by his brother, Mario, delighted the dinner guests by the brilliance of his work. In the accompanist, Mrs. Olga Ortt Herd, the artist had one in accord with every mood.

Readings Given at Meeting of LaCanada Club

Miss Margaret Bourne, talented Shakespearean actress, who was for several years with Sothern & Marlowe, gave a delightful afternoon of readings from "The Merchant of Venice," "Macbeth" and "Twelfth Night," at the final program meeting of the year for the La Canada Thursday Club on Thursday afternoon at their clubhouse in Flintridge. Mrs. Frank Lanterman presented to the club a beautiful piece of old tapestry.

Annual committee reports were given by Mrs. Roy S. Lanterman, curator of art and membership chairman, and by Mrs. J. M. Howard, chairman of the building committee.

Hostesses of the day were Mrs. O. O. Clark, Mrs. Dan W. Green, Mrs. P. H. Ducker, Mrs. Thomas F. Ahern, Mrs. Charles F. Adams and Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Nadeau.

Club Women Invited

During the Transcontinental Highway Exposition for the 25th inst., to August 1, the Twentieth Century Club of Reno, Nev., extends an invitation to club women and their friends to make the clubhouse their headquarters. An informal affair each day in the form of a tea at 4 p.m. will be the hospitality extended by Reno club women. Mrs. Frank Ellis Humphrey is the president of the club in Reno.

AMERICAN POETRY AT HIGH TIDE

In "Tristram" Edwin Arlington Robinson Takes a Legend Beloved of Poets and Gives It a New Interpretation and a New History

BY LILLIAN C. FORD

TRISTRAM. By Edwin Arlington Robinson. The Macmillan Company, New York.

In this long narrative poem Edwin Arlington Robinson tells anew the story of the ill-starred love of Tristram and Isolt of Ireland, with the love of that other Isolt for Tristram coming in like a minor refrain in an old song.

Tennyson's is probably the best-known version of this story, with Swinburne's "Tristram of Lyonesse" in second place. Of course, there are many other versions, from Mallory's down. In Tennyson's hands it came forth like a well-mannered and charming jeune fille just fresh from finishing school, where all the arts and graces had been instilled. A finished, alluring work of art, but one in which passion and depth of intellect were alike absent. Swinburne gave the tale a deeper reality and a more dramatic effect by infusing it with passion and using as his vehicle the heroic couplet which he here made to assume "opulent, romantic cadences of which it had hitherto seemed incapable."

It has been left for an American poet to give a new interpretation and a new depth to it. With Robinson the characters, here, as always, are the thing. What manner of man was this Tristram, who, loving one Isolt could submit to separation from her and fall into marriage with another, only to desert the second and to return to his own true love and to the death that awaited him? What was it in Isolt of Ireland that rendered the white beauty of the little maid of Britanny impotent? What more than beauty and more than passion irradiated from that violet-eyed Irish Isolt, so that she died from being too much loved, as well as from too much loving? And what kind of man was Mark, to take and to hold an unwilling wife and to kill the nephew to whom he owed his crown? Was he, in fact, the coarse and cruel and passionate moron of the earlier poets, or was he, possibly, something more—a man duped by fate and tortured by his failure to win the love of his bride?

Crude enough this sounds, when baldly stated. But it is in pondering over such questions as these that Edwin Arlington Robinson has worked out his own interpretation of the old legend. Thus, in "Tristram," he is true to his own nature, in which the intellectual is uppermost.

As Ben Ray Redman says in his little book, reviewed herewith, "His poetry is the product of a thoughtful, enveloping, deeply penetrating mind, that must at times achieve expression in unfamiliar terms and patterns, because it has traveled much alone. He is above all a biographer of souls, who is bound to humanity by the dual bond of sympathy and humor. He is a poet in his rhythmic interpretation of existence, in his conception of the relations of human beings with other human beings and with the universe, and in his ability to marshal thought in language that sustains comparison with the best that has been called poetic."

There is a brooding quality in "Tristram," a quality that reveals Robinson's own immersion in the tragedy of the characters he has created, truly created despite the fact that the story has been so often told before. It is from this immersion of the poet in his creation that the tragic passion is instilled. He knows his characters so well; understands their every impulse and movement; feels so deeply that he hears the very beat of their hearts, sees the blanching of their faces, the stricken look in their eyes. So he is able to place before us a real Tristram, a man driven by fate to his own undoing but happy in his doom because it gives him at last the love that had been denied him. And it is a real Isolt, that dark beauty of Ireland, who can accept nothing less than all from life, and who, like Juliet, chooses death when love is denied her.

"She heard no more.
There was no more for either of them to hear.
Or tell. It was all done. So there they lay.
And her white arms around his head still held him,
Closer than life. They did not hear the sound
Of Andred laughing, and they did not hear
The cry of Brangwaine, who had seen, too late,
Andred ascending stealthily alone.
Like death, and with death shining in his hand,
And in his eyes. They did not hear the steps
Of Mark, or of Gouvernail,
Who followed Mark."

It is to be noted that Robinson puts the shining knife in the hands of the half-mad Andred, instead of following the story as it is usually told, in which Mark kills Tristram when he returns to Isolt, whose heart had wearied of the world.

And that other Isolt, the one whom Tristram had married, moves before us in her gentle determination to shape her own life, to cling to her one love, to work out her own philosophy, a very dear and lovely child stricken in her youth, as Ophelia was in hers. Robinson's lines rise to their supreme beauty when he turns to her, after Tristram's death.

"The dawn has come," she said,
"And wisdom will come with it. If it sinks
Away from me, and into night again
Then I shall be alone, and I shall die.
But I never shall be all alone—not now;
And I shall know there was a fate more swift
Than yours or mine that hurried him farther on
Than we are yet. I would have been the world
And heaven to Tristram, and was nothing to him.
And that was why the night came down so dark
On me when Tristram died. But there was always Attending him an almost visible doom
That I see now; and while he moved and looked
As one too mighty and too secure to die,
He was not mingled and equipped to live
Very long."

EDWIN ARLINGTON ROBINSON. By Ben Ray Redman. Robert M. McBride & Co., New York.

This is one of McBride's series entitled "Modern American Writers," edited by Ernest Boyd. Those that have preceded it are "James Branch Cabell," "Edith Wharton," "Theodore Dreiser," "H. L. Mencken," "Eugene O'Neill," each by a different author.

It is a critical study of Robinson's work and of his development from his first published volume in 1896. There is very little biography in the book, which runs only to ninety-six pages, for it is the poet and not his private life that concerns the critic. Mr. Redman gives his reasons for thinking Robinson the greatest poet this country has as yet produced. His summing up of the qualities of Robinson's poetry that makes for his pre-eminence is quoted above, in the review of "Tristram."

LITERARY GOSSIP

A quarterly review edited and financed by a group of young negro artists and devoted exclusively to the newer negro art has made its appearance. Langston Hughes, the negro poet, whose "Weary Blues" was published by Alfred A. Knopf last spring, is the editor. The new review is called "Fire," and its format is somewhat comparable to that of the Theater Arts Monthly. Its purpose, as set forth by Mr. Hughes, is not only to encourage the art of the younger negroes, but also to give the works of this group a chance to appear.

Dr. Henry Van Dyke, with his usual felicity of phrase, comments that in Miss Underhill's "suggestive and helpful book, 'Concerning the Inner Life,' spiritual common sense aids mysticism to render service." It is a Dutton book.

Among the important new publications on the list of Dodd, Mead & Co. is a complete biographical and critical survey of the life and writings of Anatole France. The author of the outstanding volume of Franciana is Herbert L. Stewart, professor of philosophy in Dalhousie College, Nova Scotia, Can. "Anatole France, Parisian," as the book is entitled, pays especial attention to the French author's anticlerical writings, his connection with the Dreyfus affair and his opinions of Bolshevism, the World War, etc. One of the most interesting sections of the book deals with Anatole France as a literary critics and his probable future position in French literature.

From the age of myth to the age of reason man has sought to understand his place in the scheme of things, has ceaselessly grappled with nature to unlock the mysteries of human life. Woodbridge Riley in "From Myth to Reason," published by Appleton, has traced throughout the centuries his march of mind in the interpretation of nature. To read the story of this progress is to approach an understanding of man's relation to his universe. The story falls into four parts as the author presents it, these being: The Age of Myth, the Age of Magic, the Age of Discovery and the Age of Evolution. From the human mind that conceived nature as swayed by playful gods to the modern intellect, surveying a living natural world with, as it were, a soul of its own, here is the march of the mind.

Rufus King plays a triple role in "Mystery De Luxe" (Doran,) his latest book. King wrote the book and, because much of the action was drawn from personal experience, he saw fit to make himself the hero. Then, in order that the decorations might not be misleading, he elected to draw the design for the jacket.

Little, Brown & Co. has published "A Latin Primer," by Clarence W. Gleason of the Roxbury Latin School, Boston. It contains an appendix in which, among other interesting material, "America" and "I'm Forever Blowing Bubbles" appear translated into Latin, and in which some of the mysteries of medical prescriptions are revealed in a list of translations of medical terms and abbreviations.

Payson & Clarke, Ltd., will publish this autumn the first volume of a comprehensive work entitled "The Decoration of Furniture," by H. P. Shapland, editor of the Cabinet Maker, London. The work will be profusely illustrated and will be published in three volumes, each to be issued approximately three months apart and sold separately.

Who is the greatest American woman poet? She is Emily Dickinson, according to Louis Untermeyer. He says of her: "She never sought fame, yet today not only is she the most famous of American woman poets, but her work has been called 'perhaps the finest by a woman in the English language.' No poet since Blake has packed immensities in such compressed stanzas."

To preserve romantic legend grows increasingly difficult with flivvers supplanting buffaloes and hot-dog stands dotting the country as Indian tepees once did. Now comes an actualist from a western city who speaks of cowboys as "noisy imbeciles who go on dress parade to please tourists." Douglas Branch, however, vouches for the genuineness of the cowboy in his new book, "The Cowboy and His Interpreters" (Appleton,) besides explaining that the famous cowboy dress is not a sort of burlesque show costume, but a garb evolved to meet natural conditions. "Chaps" prevent brush from scratching the legs of the rider. "Shootin' irons" are not mere picturesque properties, but are used against predatory animals. The colored neckerchief had its origin on the Texas trails, where it was used to keep out dust. The high heels aid the rider in keeping his foot in the stirrup, while the enormous hat serves as protection from sun and storm.

WILLIAMSON, NATURE LOVER

BY DAVID STARR JORDAN

THE LONE SWALLOWS. SUN BROTHERS. THE LONE STAG. By Henry Williamson. E. P. Dutton & Co., New York.

In the struggling mass of "best sellers," "problem novels," "sex triangles" and smart cynicism that make up a large part of the literary output of England and America, a new voice has lately arisen, and sometime, if not now, it is sure to be heard. The stories and sketches of Henry Williamson come fresh to our century, though we may find earlier parallels in Gilbert White's "Natural History of Selborne" and to a degree in the master angler, Izaak Walton.

Williamson tells us of the simple joys and little tragedies of animals he knew best, and in direct, simple and understandable language. The heroes and knaves of these stories are wild creatures for the most part, mammals or birds resident in the southwestern counties of England, Devon especially, but straying at times to the great city of London or migrating across the channel from France or Italy. Three volumes of these sketches and stories have been published. All show the same essential qualities. First and foremost the writer records what he knows and with scrupulous and impartial accuracy, although he often endowed his creatures for the time with human personality. Second, the flowers, birds and other animals of which he treats are, we must confess, singularly unfamiliar to the average American reader, by name at least, even when the creature itself would not be wholly unknown. "Seed in Waste Places," the subject of a charming sketch, seems to treat of something like a dandelion but we do not recognize it under the name of "Yellow Goatbeard" nor even the more primitive and at once more poetic "John-go-to-bed-at-noon." The flowers and birds of England differ so widely from those of our Eastern States, familiar to American readers from the pages of John Burroughs, Dallas Lore Sharp, Thoreau, and the best of our "Nature" recorders, as to check somewhat the enthusiasm of those who would naturally delight in Williamson's stories.

Fox Hunts

Among other sketches are a few graphic and accurate accounts of fox hunts, a kind of sport which, to the average outdoor American, seems puerile as well as brutal. We sympathize with the old badger, "Bloody Bill Brock," who defended in his burrow the wary fox, "Fangover lip," who had once before saved his life. But we doubt if such an end to a fox hunt occurs very frequently. A touch of nature lies in a concluding remark about a fox and boar hunt: "He also got very drunk, being a sportsman."

Many of the stories end in the violent death of the hero. They verify the epigram originating, if I remember, with Ernest Thompson Seton, "The life of every wild animal is a tragedy." So it seems at the end, but is not that true of all the rest of us? Death is always of the nature of tragedy. But life is not, and life is with us all, man or beast, normally a time of activity and therefore of joy, for joy is inherent in life and action.

A few stories I may especially notice in the space at my disposal. "Ti Chackamma" is a ghastly account of an attack by men and hounds upon a baboon colony in South Africa. Other sketches find as their hero or villain the peregrine falcon, swiftest of his tribe, most fierce and most courageous, with the havoc he works among swallows, doves and other gentle birds. "The Incoming of Summer," "The London Children," "Wild Flowers" and "Meadow Grasses" sound a gentler note and touch it graciously. "The Change: a Fantasy of White-Foot Lane" is a sympathetic version of a human tragedy, beautifully told. The quaint title of "The Five Lives of the Parson of the Isle of Wight" attracts attention. It treats of the distressing adventures of a cormorant, a bird which, standing alone, black

SHALL INDIA BREAK HER BONDS?

BY M. F. CUMMINGS

MOTHER INDIA. By Katherine Mayo. Harcourt, Brace & Co., New York.

The question that dominates this book is whether India, as well as the world at large, would be in better case if the British were to relinquish their already modified authority upon that country and leave the population of mixed Hindus and Musselmans to manage their own affairs.

The convictions on this subject entertained by Miss Mayo are the result of what she believes to have been a careful and unprejudiced investigation of India's social policies and conditions. To both British and native officials she presented herself as an American citizen seeking the facts in regard to India's social aims and conditions, and she gratefully acknowledges the facilities for investigation accorded her.

Both those whose natural predelictions compels them to agree with Miss Mayo's conclusions, and those who, for similar reasons, are unalterably opposed to them, agree that the Hindus as a class lack initiative and originality; that their self-dedication to the moot cause of national unity and their racial enthusiasms in general, while easily aroused, are soon spent. This, such enlightened Hindus as Ghandi, for instance, attribute to the paralyzing effect of the British presence upon the natives. The psychological malady generated by association with a virile, active and highly efficient race apparently numbs the Hindu's faculties, keeping him weak and depriving him of staying power. The Ghandists admit that there are many social customs which are injurious to the body corporate, to the social whole, as well as to the individual, and that these require drastic revision. "But until Britain has abdicated and gone," says a native spokesman, "we can not turn our minds to the lesser needs of our dear mother India."

In a brief review it is impossible to enumerate all the reasons for Katherine Mayo's conviction that a Hindu commonwealth would not only be short lived, but would be torn by internal dissensions from its first hour, and in the end would be overrun by northern tribes under the pretext of delivering their coreligionists in India from the oppression of a remorseless and virulently hostile majority —a condition foreseen and condemned in advance by the Mulema, the highest Mohammedan authority.

But leaving out of the question the opposition of the Mussulman, Miss Mayo believes the Hindu congenitally unfit for the sole responsibility of the guidance of a nation's destiny. Her reasons for this authoritative dictum, backed by voluminous evidence, are thus stated: "Given men who enter the world physical bankrupts out of bankrupt stock, rear them through childhood in influences and practices that devour their vitality . . . and, as a result of the conditions and practices enumerated, find them at an age when the Anglo-Saxon is just coming into robust manhood, broken, low-spirited, petulant ancients, and need you, while these things remain unchanged, seek for other reasons why they are poor, sick and short-lived, and why their hands are too weak, too fluttering to take or hold the reins of government."

The volume is thoroughly documented, and humanitarian readers will find it quite painfully informative.

LYRICS OF CALIFORNIA

FROM A CALIFORNIA GARDEN. By Bessie Pryor Palmer. Dorrance & Co.

This little book of lyrics, impregnated with the spirit and color of California, is one of those spontaneous tributes to our fair land and clime which cannot but arouse a response in many a heart.

Mrs. Palmer writes easily flowing verse in which the beauty of nature in all its aspects is ever present. There is an underlying note of human love and pity and regret that makes the volume one with its own tender personal appeal.

An idea of the quality of the poetry is best obtained from a selection. Here is one of the lyrics:

Heliotrope

So long have my accustomed eyes beheld
Your rich unfolding at my window here;
So long have I inhaled your rare perfume,
Day after day, throughout the golden year,
I ofttimes grow half-conscious of your charm
And yet forget to praise.
Yet I recall
A day, far overseas, when on my sight
A poor, starved bit of blossom chanced to fall;
And then—I saw you in your distant place,
And straightway longings surged within my soul—
So quick, so keen, I could not thwart their thrall—
And straight I set me toward the homeward goal.

RECENT FICTION

THE STRANGER FROM CHEYENNE. By Joseph B. Ames. The Century Company, New York.

From the moment Buck Devlin set foot in the Del Monte, the heretofore unchallenged supremacy of Morg Branigan began to wane. Morg had lorded it over the region round-about for a long time. He was cruel, treacherous and handy with a gun and absolutely devoid of scruples as to how he got his man, just so he got him.

When Buck arrived he sensed that there was something wrong. He soon learned of Branigan's dominance. Being a bit given to independence in a quiet sort of way, he naturally resented Morg. Of course, this spirit of antagonism between the men was fostered by the fact that Nance Austin, who lived at the Broken Dollar saloon, was attracted to Buck. This enraged Branigan, as he had staked Nance out for his own particular delectation and Buck's horning in somewhat upset his plans and ruffled his temper.

So, when Branigan found that Buck was a bad hombre with a gun, and that he was as fearless as he was quick on the trigger, he set his gang after Buck, determined to get rid of him. The gang succeeded in doping Buck, then attempted to lynch him. Later they trumped up a charge that sent Buck riding hard for temporary safety. But, like all thorough-going heroes, when Nance was threatened he staked all on one throw and in rescuing Nance won her heart as well as her freedom.

It's a good wild western thriller, full of melodrama as a melon is of seeds, but just the kind of yarn that lovers of western stuff eat in hunks and howl for more. Mr. Ames knows his public, and like a wise man he sticks to stuff that they read and buy. Judged for just what the book is intended for, it assays high. It's a special product for a special audience and of its kind tip-top.

THE MARRIAGE BED. By Ernest Pascal. Harcourt, Brace & Co., New York.

A swiftly moving story that shows that marriage is the best of all possible relations between the sexes. The bed in question is an heirloom owned by Mary Boyd. When her husband leaves her and it, Mary shows unusual patience and restraint by refraining from taking divorce proceedings. How she was justified is developed in a story that keeps up the pace to the end.

In the progress of the tale we are given glimpses of various characters, all seeking happiness in their own way. Some of these are experimenters in love as in other phases of life, but there is nothing shocking about the tale except, perhaps, its title.

TWILIGHT. By Count Edouard von Keyserling. The Macauley Company, New York.

The author of this novel of the waning nobility of Germany is cousin to Count Hermann Alexander Keyserling, whose book, "The Travel Diary of a Philosopher," is so well known. Count Edouard has an established place as a novelist and in "Twilight" presents with no little power the picture of the slow decay of the group of nobles that people its pages.

The picture is a gloomy one, Russian in its dismal insistence upon decay, but it is undoubtedly true to life, and so worthy of consideration. Two short stories are included in the volume.

LUD IN THE MIST. By Hope Mirrlees. Alfred A. Knopf, New York.

A charming fantasy by the author of "Counterplot." Only for those who love quiet beauty and enjoy allegorical writing. Such readers will follow with keen pleasure the tale of how Ranulph, son of Master Nathaniel Chantecleer, ate fairy fruit and so opened the door for a strange series of adventures with the wee folk. But it is no juvenile. Instead, it can be recommended to that class of sophisticates who love poetry and revolt against materialism as a part of their heritage.

ONE, TWO, THREE. By Paul Selver. The George H. Doran Company, New York.

"Some of the characters in this story are fictitious," declares Paul Selver, in his introduction to this light comedy novel.

Mr. Selver is the translator of the Karl Capek plays, "R. U. R." and "The Insect Play," which had such a considerable success in the United States.

The hero of "One, Two, Three" is a playwright, who, in order to get his play accepted, pretends that it is a translation from the Polabian. The play is a tremendous success, and its author is soon involved in keeping up the reputation of a man who never existed. Meanwhile, he further complicates his situation by falling in love with three women. The book is Paul Selver's second novel and is being acclaimed in England.

IN A MIST

A silvered mist screens us from each other,
But through the slender shafts of rain
I sense your presence
Like the nearness of God.
And your voice,
Vibrant as a bell,
Calling me to service.
—[Le Baron Cooke in The Spur.

A MUCH MALIGNED PATRIOT

In This Sane and Impartial Life of Thomas Paine Author Gives Us an Account of One of the Outstanding Figures of the Revolution

BY THOMAS F. FORD

THOMAS PAINE, Prophet and Martyr of Democracy. By Mary Agnes Best. Harcourt, Brace & Co., New York.

When most people think of Thomas Paine, if they think of him at all, it is of a man who went about breathing fire and brimstone in the form of atheistic attacks on all believers in the Christian faith. Roosevelt referred to him as "that dirty little atheist," though as a matter of fact he was not a man of unclean habits of mind or body, he was not a little man, either physically or mentally, and last and most important of all, he was not an atheist.

He believed in God and in a life to come. But he believed in one God only. He was a monotheist, as his last will and testament proves, for he wrote: "The last will and testament of me, the subscriber, Thomas Paine, reposing confidence in my Creator, God, and in no other being, for I know no other and believe in no other." Further on in the will, which left the bulk of his small property to Madame Bonneville in trust for her children, he says "that she may bring them well up, give them good and useful learning and instruct them in their duty to God and the practice of morality." If this be the sentiments that are indicative of "atheism," then it's too bad that there are not more of the kind in this Chrisian land of ours.

The tragedy of Paine's life is that his detractors, and they were legion, made it a point to obscure his real services to his country and to mankind through heaping upon his head, by use of every art known to the craft of professional and fanatical detractors, every form of abuse in the Billingsgate calendar. One of his detractors, in writing to a friend about Paine, said: "A man of vast ignorance, but possessed of mother wit and shrewdness," and added later on, "Wesley from the one side and Tom Paine from another forced more serious thoughts upon the age." If we admit that Paine was "deficient in the higher learning," for his opportunities as the son of a poor "stay maker" were limited, we are tempted to believe, nevertheless, that "mother wit and shrewdness," coupled with a high integrity and a deep and abiding faith in God and love of mankind, are qualities that are capable of rendering more service to minkind than vast knowledge minus the other qualities enumerated by his critic.

When his lifelong friend, Franklin, said, "Where liberty is, there is my country," Paine replied: "Where liberty is not, there is mine." And his whole life was a living exemplification of his sincerity in that love of liberty, not only for himself, but for all to whom it was denied.

It is no mean compliment to a man to have Napoleon say: "A statue of gold should be erected to him in every city in the world," and for a man of Lincoln's perspicacity to write to a friend: "I never tire of reading Paine." He had the complete confidence of Washington, Adams and Jefferson, though in later life he and Washington disagreed, largely through Paine's fault.

He played a great part in the American Revolution. His was the pen that seared the British officials, for his answers to their silly proclamations were masterpieces of reasoning, couched in satirical, ironic and at times humorous phrase. He was tireless in his attacks on the Tories, and it was his brilliant pen that buoyed up the American Revolutionary forces with his broadsides; and his duel with Edmund Burke is one of the most interesting series of articles in the history of the period. [illegible] article is a series on Southern California cities being written for The [illegible]

BY JOHN B. WALLACE

[illegible] is one of the numerous Southern California cities [illegible] to be called twice to come and get her hot cakes but [illegible] calling was loud and vigorous enough to bring the [illegible] out of bed with bound. As a result this [illegible]ity has taken its place with Glendale, Burbank, [illegible] and the dozen other Southland cities whose growth [illegible] decade has been nothing short of remarkable.

[illegible] WHITE SETTLEMENT

[illegible] the distinction of be[illegible] white settlement in Southern California. El Monte was the first, and at the time of its beginning Wilmington housed a company of soldiers stationed there to prevent the Mexicans from making an attempt to recover their land. Los Angeles at that period being predominantly Mexican in population, was none too friendly toward the gringos, whose "manana" was today.

Wells were sunk, and the land, found to be wonderfully fertile, increased in value to $100 an acre. In 1888, two years later than Los Angeles, the city of Compton was incorporated. Tracts were laid out and building began, to stop as suddenly as it started. Compton relapsed into a coma, a trance from which it was not to awake until 1920. Its city government was abandoned, and not even the coming of the Pacific Electric in 1906 sufficed to bring the community to life. In 1910 the census taker found 1922 persons within its limits; ten years later 1478 called it home.

But the last seven years, that is something else again, as our friend Perlmutter would remark. Compton has already devoured a full share of its breakfast cakes, and is looking hungrily around for more provender.

BET BEING OVERLOOKED

What happened was that a goodly number of those energetic citizens known popularly as "live wires" simultaneously decided that here was a bet that was being overlooked. With Los Angeles growing down toward the harbor in tremendous strides, and Long Beach moving its limits up toward Los Angeles, with oil fields spouting on all sides and industrial concerns, attracted by cheap fuel and cheap acreage, settling in its vicinity, Compton found itself to be right in the center of an immense and unprecedented development. At last the foresight of its founders was being justified. Farms began to give way to factories, berry patches to rabbitries, and Compton entered upon an era of real prosperity the end of which is not in sight.

The outstanding feature of the new Compton is the remarkable spirit of co-operation among its residents. Perhaps this is due to the fact that the majority of its citizens are newcomers who have been too busy building up their community to waste time in factional or political squabbles. Whatever the cause, Compton is one big family whose community life centers about its live Chamber of Commerce. The chamber acts as a clearinghouse for all community activities and over informal spreads community problems are worked out.

HAD PLENTY OF PROBLEMS

Compton had plenty of problems to solve, among them being the matter of sewers, control of flood-waters and boulevards. It is this community that is credited with being the prime mover in the agitation which resulted in the metropolitan sewer system, of which it is an important factor. The flood situation in exceptionally wet seasons was a source of anxiety as the overflow from Compton Creek caused much property damage, but this also has been relieved through local temporary measures and eventually through the construction of the San Gabriel dam, for which the Compton chamber naturally has been a strong booster.

Compton needed good roads to supplement the rail service of the Southern Pacific and Pacific Electric lines. As a result of the activities of its chamber, it is now served by some fourteen main arteries of which Long Beach Boulevard with its paved width of 100 feet is the gem. The Redondo-Riverside cross-country boulevard is the main street of Compton.

Another feature sponsored by the Chamber of Commerce, which has done much to advertise the city, is its annual industrial and fur rabbit show, now in its third year. This exposition began as an industrial exhibit, but was extended in scope the second year to include the growing fur rabbit industry, of which Compton is a center.

With the vanishing of wild animal life in America, rabbit fur has found an increasingly large market.

Not only is it used as a substitute for the higher-priced skins of trapped animals, but it also is a principal source of felt used in men's and women's hats. Compton supplies from 75,000 to 150,000 skins a month for this purpose and could sell more than double that amount daily if it had the rabbits. The market, therefore, for high grade furs is unlimited and the industry faces a most prosperous future.

However, with more than fifty large manufacturing concerns located at or near Compton, rabbit raising, however large i's proportions, will remain only one of the minor industries.

INDUSTRIAL FUTURE BRIGHT

The industrial future of this region is assured with two of the largest oil fields in the south adjacent to the city and several others only a few miles distant. Cheap fuel oil and natural gas offer a great inducement for the establishment of industries to which power is an important item. Acreage also is reasonably cheap with a considerable amount held in reserve by railway corporations.

One of the largest manufacturers in the district is the Sampson Tire and Rubber Company, the establishment of which factory in 1922 did much to turn the eyes of the industrial world toward Compton.

Other large concerns are Allen and Courtney, manufacturers of heavy oil well machinery; Compton Glass Works, which specializes in water bottles and fruit jars; Parkinson Brothers Manufacturing Company, Coast Radio Manufacturing Company, Spartan Steel Works, Par-Fa Company, Flour Construction Company, California Wood Products Company, Lorraine Corporation and Briggs & Co.

An instance of some of Compton's factories which have grown to good size from nothing within a few years is the Alco Oil Tool Company, which, started in 1922 by the four Allen brothers with the family constituting its full factory and sales force, now employs sixty men and sells its products all over the world where oil is produced.

MODERN STRUCTURES

The change in the condition of Compton has resulted in the building of modern business blocks, homes and civic buildings and one who visited the somewhat squalid town of ten years ago would not recognize it in this clean, progressive little city.

Its social and educational activities have kept pace with its business growth. Six fine grammar schools built in the distinctive California architectural style and a union high school, a polytechnic institution, with well-equipped shops as well as a complete academic course place Compton in the front rank among the schools of the State. In athletics the Compton lads compete with the best in the Southland, their track being one of the fastest in the country.

While Compton is in no sense a "longhair" town, its churches play an important part in its community life and especially exhibit the spirit of co-operation which is such a feature of Compton's social and business life. Several of them have built fine new buildings lately, structures that would be a credit to cities many times the size of Compton.

Fraternal organizations are well represented, but there is less of the "clique" idea here than in most cities of its size, harmony being the keynote with social organizations preferring to merge their ambitions in the larger community interests.

WOMEN LARGE FACTOR

The women of Compton are an important factor in its activities through their women's clubs as well as in the community organizations such as the Chamber of Commerce. Few gatherings of the sterner sex are allowed to go "eatless" and it may be that a large part of the harmony which distinguishes Compton comes from the contented spirit induced by the bountiful spreads set before its citizens by their helpmates.

Compton is not only harmonious in its business and social relations, but it is also harmonious vocally and instrumentally with several singing societies, a fine municipal band and numerous orchestras. Life for its residents is just one sweet song, but don't for one minute think that while the singers are vocalizing they do not keep one eye on the main chance. Their motto, to paraphrase that of Dumas's immortal trio, is "All for Compton and Compton for all."

Corns Lift Off

[illegible] Lift off hard corns, [illegible] between the toes and [illegible] It doesn't hurt a bit! [illegible] Just drop "Freezone" [illegible] touchy corn. Instantly [illegible] then shortly you just lift that old bothersome corn right off with your fingers. It works like a charm, every time.

A tiny bottle of "Freezone" costs only a few cents at any drug store—Try it!—[Advertisement.

Literary Value of Titles Meets New Film Needs

Titles in motion pictures are not only yielding to the movement to reduce them to the number actually required to clarify the drama in the mind of the observer, but their subject matter and literary value are meeting new needs, according to Walter Anthony, editor-in-chief of Universal's titling department.

"It is quite an anomaly," says Anthony, "that though titles are fewer in number, they are being read more carefully and critically by the public. This is not merely because there are less of them.

"A few years ago the captions were so numerous they could not be held on the screen long enough for some persons to read them. It is easy to recall when whole letters or excerpts from them were flashed on the silver screen. The result was that many theatergoers read only part of them—enough to get the gist, as it were.

"Now that titles are both shorter and scarcer, they are being read thoroughly. This has necessitated changes of subject matter and an elevating of their literary merits," Anthony says.

Screen Keeping Horses from Place in Zoo

Motion-picture fans have more than one thing for which they can thank the daring cowboys of photoplays, according to "Hoot" Gibson, Universal's western star, and that is the fact that the celluloid buckaroos are doing their share to prevent the humble beast of burden, the horse, from going to the land of the dodo bird.

"When the first automobile was invented, the extinction of horses began," says Hoot. "A great number of people at that time and even years later had the erroneous idea that power-propelled vehicles couldn't take the place of the quadrupeds, but look at what has happened.

"Lest we forget the faithful horse the public should thank the motion-picture cowboys for keeping him out of the zoo."

TITLE WRITER SIGNED

Al Martin, title writer, has been signed by F.B.O. and his first job will be to title "Helen of Troy, New York," one of the featurettes of the Beauty Parlor series. For the last three seasons Martin has titled all Christie comedies in addition to his work as a free-lance writer. Among the feature productions which Martin has recently titled are included "Gentlemen Preferred," which was directed by Arthur Hotaling, and "No Control," featuring Phyllis Haver and Harrison Ford for P.D.C.

Film to Be Tribute to California

When Edwin Carewe completes the direction of "Ramona," Helen Hunt Jackson's immortal American love story, with Dolores Del Rio in the title role, he will have placed in permanent form a trbuite to California.

No book—no story, dealing with the early history of the Bear State and particularly with the early period of Southern California, has pictured the romantic and historical days of our State with more sincerity and vividness than has this noted authoress in the "Ramona" tale.

Millions of people have read the book. When the film production is completed, countless more will see in living characters and locale, what they had previously heard about through the pages of the historic volume.

Some people term "Ramona" as "America's greatest love story." True, it should be, for "Ramona" engulfs the first Americans and their trials and their tribulations—the Indians themselves. Combined with the hectic period of the Red Man, is one of the most alluring love stories ever placed in the pages of a novel.

Carewe is going to abide by Helen Hunt Jackson's story in the self-same manner that he did when he produced Tolstoy's "Resurrection" and which won him the admiration of critics who were waiting to see just how much of the famous Russian drama he would permit remaining in the celluloid.

Production on "Ramona" will start within several weeks. Meantime the Inspiration Pictures officials and Carewe are busily engaged in initial preparations. United Artists will release the completed special. It marks Dolores's first starring vehicle for that organization.

City Created for Filming of Desert Picture

Magic cities in the desert are old in the annals of mankind, but overnight a new and very real city sprang magically out of the Arizona desert for the filming of Warner Brothers' production of "The Outpost" starring Irene Rich and directed by Michael Curtiz.

Three weeks before the actual filming of the picture began, engineers, advance agents and craftsmen began to pour into the little town of Yuma, from which they transported to the desert spot twenty miles away, the materials from which the city was to rise. It assumed the form of an old Indian fortress in which British troo, were to be quartered, and was so constructed that it would house the company of over 1000 technicians and actors. Every detail of feeding and caring for this movie town which had sprung up more rapidly even than the phantom gold and oil towns of the West was carefully planned out in advance.

Although the work was done in June with the thermometer hovering around 100 deg. every day accidents and sickness were avoided through painstaking precautions.

Two weeks after camera work commenced, the city was again deserted, and all its departments disbanded to become parts in many other screen enterprises. Foremost among the supporting cast of "The Outpost" are William Russell, William Collier, Jr., John Miljan, Douglas Gerrard and Jack Ackroyd.

Original Tales Predicted to Supplant Plays

The original screen story is rapidly coming into its own, and promises to supplant the novel and the stage play as the chief source of motion picture plots, according to Joseph Jackson, screen author, who says that a survey of the story editors of the big studios shows that they give more favorable consideration now to the "original" than they ever have before. Jackson has sold three stories in three months.

"This should not give false hopes to the thousands of amateurs all over the country who flood the studios with their manuscripts," Jackson added. "Most of the studios return these unopened to avoid plagiarism suits. The amateur always suspects that his idea has been stolen. If he had a good lusty murder in his scenario, and a picture comes out later with a good lusty murder in it, he brings suit for damages.

"But the writer, trained in the ways of the studios, can get a considerate hearing. I believe that the time is not far off when the bulk of motion pictures will be made from stories written directly for the screen by men of ability and imagination who know their craft."

Actor Plays Part of Own Life on Screen

Malcolm McGregor, in enacting the role of a graduate of Yale University in "Buck Privates," which Melville Brown is directing for Universal, is playing a part out of his own life.

McGregor portrays John Smith, '17, in the film while in real life he is Yale '14. The picture opens up with McGregor on the football field. This is a slight departure from reality for he was a member of the Yale swimming team and held the metropolitan championship for fancy diving. McGregor was born in Newark, N. J., and "prepped" for Yale at Lawrenceville and Tome, his film career starting in "The Prisoner of Zenda." "Buck Privates" is his first role at Universal since "Smouldering Fires." Appearing with McGregor are Lya De Putti, ZaSu Pitts, James Marcus, Eddie Gribbon, Carey Harrison, Bud Jamison and Les Bates.

JAZZ BAND AT MEALTIME

Jazz, played at mealtime in the nation's restaurants, is as bad a thing as can happen to the national digestion, according to Charles M. Newcomb of Cleveland, former college professor engaged in industrial psychology. He made this statement to a recent convention of the National Restaurant Association.

"Jazz is exciting," he said. "Some of it is fearful and some of it makes people want to fight. It also stimulates the desire to dance. It is unquestionably an irritant at mealtime."

Correct. And we move to amend, in the language of the Congressional Record, by striking out the last two words.—[Lebanon (Ind.) Reporter.

H. WILLIAMSON NATURE LOVER

and erect along the Sussex shore, is locally known as "the Parson."

An Interesting Career

Perhaps as interesting as anything Williamson has written is his own account of how he came to write. This I condense from a private letter of John Macrae, president of E. P. Dutton & Co.

"Williamson," says Macrae, "is, of course, an Englishman and his life has been peculiarly limited, yet he has to me a marvelous appreciation and observation of nature, to which is added the very rhythm of music in his ability to express himself in writing."

Henry Williamson, born in Devonshire in 1897, was a schoolboy on a holiday when war broke out. He enlisted at once, and was sent to a Devon regiment cut to pieces at the front, the places filled by fresh volunteers. He was a fine-grained and sensitive boy, not readily mixing with the hardened soldiers. He served for four years, bringing up finally at Folkestone. On a stormy day, on temporary leave of absence, he entered a bookstore and asked permission to stand and read a book called "Bevis," by Richard Jefferies. Williamson said that this was the first time he actually read a book and that then he woke up, became alive spiritually and mentally. The first volume of his essays, 'The Lone Swallows,' he dedicates to Richard Jefferies, from whom he quotes on his title page: "The beautiful swallows, be kind to them for they symbol all that is best in nature and all that is best in our hearts." The tale of "The Lone Swallows" is a fair type of Williamson's style. The tender story of the return of the loving bird-pair "over uncharted air lines from the southern sun to the land that means love and life to them and love and life and beauty to all of us." After the charming record of arrival and nest building, the story is closed by the beak of the terrible peregrine falcon.

On Northcliffe's Staff

Lord Northcliffe heard of the boy and employed him for "stifling" duties on the Daily Mail. After a drag of nine months an aunt bequeathed to him a workman's cottage in Devonshire. Then with his capital of £5 he walked across from London, "spending part of his money to buy a little iron bed, some army blankets and a mattress, and gave himself up to writing for a living."

Williamson has been fortunate to find in America a publisher who believes in his genius, and who recognizes that he must write of things he knows, and who has faith that such truthful work will sooner or later bring him recognition. He has a message better than that of most writers on the out-of-doors, as well as different. If his stories are often terrifically tragic, so is nature also, and the lesson to us is not to make the tragedy of wild life worse than it is, in a world beset with falcons and owls, and holding also fox hunts and badger baitings.

NEW EXPERIENCE

Since Mary Brian does not wear stiff-bosomed shirtwaists and consequently has had no dealing with Chinese laundrymen, the experience of playing with more than 100 Chinamen in Richard Dix's Paramount picture, "Shanghai Bound," is a new one for her.

MUCH MALIGNED EARLY PATRIOT

his time and effort to the cause of his country he was very meanly compensated and this failure on the part of his countrymen to appreciate his labors made his last years bitter.

But for all the calumny that has been heaped upon him for his honest religious beliefs the sure years will tend to clear his name and his fame will grow brighter and his work loom larger as time, that slow but sure adjuster of men's worthiness, rolls on.

MASEFIELD ON MARCO POLO

Perhaps John Masefield has put his finger upon the secret of the immortality of Marco Polo's great book, of which the Duttons have recently issued an edition illustrated with eleven photogravure plates and twenty drawings in pen and ink by Adrian de Friston. In the introduction to this edition Mr. Masefield writes:

"It is only the wonderful traveler who sees a wonder and only five travelers in the world's history have seen wonders. The others have seen birds and beasts, rivers and wastes, the earth and the (local) fullness thereof . . . They (the two Venetians) did not find the earthly paradise, but they saw the splendors of Kublai, one of the mightiest of earthly kings. The imagination is only healthy when saintly. In Kublai, the reader will find enough images of splendor to make glorious the temple of his mind."

A. CLUTTON-BROCK

In his introduction to A. Clutton-Brock's "Essays on Religion," published by the house of Dutton, Canon B. H. Streeter says: "In form, this book is a collection of essays, any one of which may be read by itself. In fact, they represent a continuous effort, during three years of intermittent illness, of a man haunted by the feeling that the religion by which he had been living had been too cheaply won, to find some solution, more profound than hitherto, of the problem posed by the discord between man's highest values and the facts of the universe revealed by science." The titles of the separate essays are "The Visionaries," "The Religion of the Particular," "The Logic of God," "Pooled Self-Esteem," "Evil and the New Phsychology," "The Nature of Evil" and "The English Bible."

LEWIS BROWNE ON "POWER"

A letter has just been received by the Viking Press from Lewis Browne, author of "This Believing World," in which he says of "Power," by Lion Feuchtwanger: "It is a [illegible]at book. I did not know there was a writer living who could reproduce a past age with such fidelity, richness and glamor. . . . It is a glorious romance woven around one of the wickedest and most fascinating characters in late Jewish history. I congratulate the Muirs (Willa and Edwin) on their almost incredibly good translation."

Australians Like Local Methods for Production

Australians pay homage to American methods of motion-picture production, according to Scott R. Dunlap, megaphone wielder, who was called to the islands recently by the Phillips Company, Ltd., to make a series of pictures embodying the American angle throughout.

One of the first things which impresses itself upon Dunlap during the completing of production plans, he writes, is the spirit of co-operation, which has greatly facilitated the American's efforts to direct pictures as though he were in his "home environment."

For a long time, he relates, the native islanders have desired cinemas made in their own midst but fashioned according to the standard in the United States. That their wishes will be fulfilled is regarded as assured by the fact that Dunlap was at once given full power to proceed with his own plans. Dunlap will remain away several months, the number of pictures to be directed by him not having been announced yet by the Phillips executives.

Landry Dooley Orchestra to Roof Ballroom

A contract under which the Landry-Dooley recording orchestra begins a permanent reign at the Cinderella Roof was signed last week, according to announcement by Manager George T. McCarthy of the Roof, and will open at the downtown ballroom as the Landry-Dooley Cinderella Roof Orchestra Wednesday night. Elaborate plans for receiving the well-known organization are being perfected by Manager McCarthy, the plans including the presence of a host of screen stars and theatrical celebrities, many of whom are friends of the members of the orchestra.

The contract, McCarthy states, was entered into after he had conducted a three-months' search for what he considers the ideal dance orchestra, and was made possible through difficulties arising out of a recording contract held by the Landry-Dooley organization. During his search, the Roof manager has had five different organizations under temporary contract and has listened to ninety others.

Twelve musicians, each capable of playing from two to five instruments, comprise the personnel of the new orchestra, with Eddie Landry and Phil Dooley as codirectors. More than fifty different instruments are used by the combination, which boasts a singing trio and sextette and a dancing director in the person of Dooley. Landry is a brother of Art Landry of recording orchestra fame, and is known among the profession for his base viol "slapping." He played the Orpheum circuit for a number of years with the Three White Kuhns

Dooley is an expert on the drums, the orginator of many of the "jazz licks" now in use by high-class drummers, and is known as a "hot" trumpet player. He varies his dancing with "hokum" and clowning in the direction of the orchestra.

NORTHERN FILM TO RIVAL MOST MAMMOTH PICTURE

With "The Trail of '98," intended by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer to remain forever the criterion of northern epics, more than half filmed the production promises to be all that has been predicted for the picture, it is said.

In magnitude it will rival "Ben Hur," the most mammoth film production ever made, it is said. Already Director Clarence Brown has used more than 12,000 extra players as atmospheric action to set off the roles of forty-five principals of the cast.

Locales of the Klondike, the Yukon, Alaska, Colorado and California are being used and units have already penetrated the heart of the Alaskan wilderness to film scenes in the upper reaches of Copper River. This unit is making its headquarters at Cordova, Alaska, after already filming the rugged coast line from the deck of the Princess Mary, bound northward from Vancouver, B. C.

Other units have crossed White Horse Pass and are now filming the rapids of the Yukon while batteries of cameras have recorded the spring break-up o fthe icebound Yukon in the vicinity of Dawson City.

ALASKAN SCENES

Before the completion of the picture which is based on Robert W. Service's story of the maddest gold rush the world has ever known, scenes will be filmed at Lake Bennett and Lake Linderman as well as at Skagway and Dyes.

Because of inability to cope with housing demands in Alaska and the Yukon, the great Chilkoot Pass and Sheep's Camp scenes, among the most colorful in the screen adaptation of the story, have been filmed at Corona, Colo., on a mountainous location said to be an exact duplicate of Chilkoot.

The making of these scenes occupied more than a month and called for the services of thousands of extra players, as well as a majority of the big cast, including the featured players, Ralph Forbes, Dolores Del Rio and Harry Carey.

The filming of these scenes involved one of the greatest undertakings in the history of motion-picture production and required a special train from California to Colorado, the building of a mile of spur track in the mountains, the right of way at certain hours of the day on the Moffatt line over the ridge of the Continental Divide.

Live stock and dogs were taken to location by the carload and two rotary snow plows were required to keep the line open in order that the location camp would not be cut off from communication with the outside world.

WEATHER EXTREMES

With a wind blowing at an average velocity of more than fifty miles an hour, the thermometer registering from twenty to thirty-five deg. below zero and blizzards every other day, the troupe kept working. Malamute dogs, brought from Canada and Alaska, died of pneumonia. Human blood pressure went up twenty deg. because of the 12,000-foot altitude.

Working against such conditions Director Clarence Brown did not return to the studio until he had filmed every foot called for by the script.

At the studio thousands of people, hundreds of horses and cattle, as well as more than 500 northern dogs have been used in filming interiors. The Monte Carlo saloon and dance hall of Dawson City before the fire has been duplicated at the studio and hundreds of people have worked daily during the last six weeks in the making of these scenes.

Optimistic Note Cited as Essential

Because the American people are generally optimistic, the optimistic note must prevail in motion pictures that are to receive their enthusiastic patronage, according to Edward J. Montagne, editor-in-chief of the Universal Pictures Corporation.

"A good many feel that 'Beau Geste,' for instance, was an unhappy story and will point to this as an example that unhappy endings are sometimes popular," says Montagne. "However, 'Beau Geste' glorified brother love and for this reason is one of the happiest, optimistic documents ever contributed to the screen.

"In 'Seventh Heaven,'" Montagne explains, "the boy returns blind, but what is loss of sight to two people living in such a paradise as Chico and Diane constructed for themselves?

"In 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' Tom dies, but he dies with a smile; he is ready to go and be received and rewarded by his Maker, which puts a strong, spiritual and optimistic note in the story."

Tragedy by no means does not always imply pessimism, according to Montagne. On the contrary, some of the most touching and uplifting stories lack the familiar ending, "and they lived happily ever afterward," he points out, but to offset this, there is a predominating hopeful tenor to the theme which is bound to be popular with American audiences.

Sullivan Hopes to Top Record in Production

C. Gardner Sullivan looks toward "The Fighting Eagle" to top his production record with Cecil B. DeMille.

In his translation of the A. Conan Doyle story, "The Adventures of Brigadier Gerard" to the screen, Sullivan surrounded himself with the most effective staff available, retaining, in himself, Donald Crisp and Douglas Z. Doty, the same triumvirate that produced "Vanity" for Leatrice Joy.

He "discovered" in a comparatively unknown player, Max Barwyn, his ideal Napoleon and for Rod LaRocque invested the role of the Brigadier with all the colorful material which the brain which produced 365 box-office hits could concoct for the artist.

"The Fighting Eagle" will be Sullivan's tenth product for De Mille. With this he will have turned out a record of hits for P.D.C. distribution that ranks with the best of the movie-making executives.

Included in the Sullivan-unit-produced DeMille hits are "White Gold," "Gigolo." "The Yankee Clipper," which is setting up an extraordinary box-office standard, "Vanity" and others.

Realism Cited as Essential to Character Acting

Character actors were formerly symbolic of a type and could produce the desired effects upon the motion-picture audience by more or less artificial methods, but no longer is this true with the modern critical, skeptical photoplay fans, according to Jean Hersholt, Universal's star character thespian.

"They want to be convinced," says Jean, "and one of the first things they notice is whether the character in the picture wears a real mustache, for instance. Also they now take advantage of every close-up to determine whether any tricks of make-up have been used.

"The many technical improvements in film making also have made it harder for the character actor, too," Jean opines, "for defects of any kind are more noticeable to the audience."

Hersholt believes that sincere emotion will be demanded more and more of the character player, just as it is true of the leading man or woman. For this reason he depends as little as possible on make-up and relies on the mobility of his features even to produce grotesque effects.

SCENARIST FINISHES WORK ON COMEDY

Garrett Fort, magazine fictionist and scenarist, now under contract to Warner Brothers, has just completed work on a three-act romantic comedy, "The Last Lover," and the writer has already begun negotiations with a New York producer for the staging of his play next fall. One of the most famous actresses of the modern legitimate stage is to be starred in the production. Fort's first work as a Warner Brothers' writer is "Sailor Izzy Murphy," which he is writing for George Jessel. This is to be followed by "Kid Gloves," also a Jessel starring production.

BY THE WAY

BY EVA G. TAYLOR

There is something to be said on both sides of the recent controversy regarding the censorship of current literature. The Vatican and our Federal government have become alarmed at the spread of immoral books. Boston is waging a war on obscene literature and censorship is already in evidence.

Naturally writers resent censorship, and a committee of authors has been organized in New York for the purpose of suppressing censors. At the best, censorship is not a happy institution. It is so apt to be indiscriminating, based on narrow viewpoints and prejudices.

The authors are not alone in their dread of this power put into the hands of a certain class of people. One shudders at the inhibitions possible.

Yet the present state of literature and art, to say nothing of the drama, is such as to require drastic measures if any degree of purity is to be preserved.

The committee of authors which is waging war on censorship contend the censors "have stifled the true aim of art and artists."

It may be asked here, "What is the true aim of art and artists?" If it is to express the best that is in them, censors will be superfluous. If it is to wallow in dirt and mire—if the coveted freedom of thought includes a perverted imagination, then let the restrictions begin. The sooner the better.

When an author can find nothing better to weave into his romances than startling indecencies, undisguised or subtly veiled, he might find it profitable in the long run to cover up his typewriter and take a long vacation—long enough to have the pollution washed out of his soul. Otherwise the censors will surely get him, or his output.

For the public conscience is aroused and the public mind is very weary and disgusted with the filth scattered in the name of literature and art.

It is revolting even to those who lay no claim to higher ideals. Appealing ony to the basest instincts of the animal-human mind, the real intelligence within detects the fraudulent alliance with artistry. Sensuality should have no place in literature. When introduced there it merely furnishes an avenue of expression to the writer's polluted thought.

When authors realize the sacredness of the gift they hold and the responsibilities it entails they will regard with horror any abuse of it. Thought has such deep and vital results and mental gifts hold such far-reaching powers that writers should be a sort of sacred priesthood. When the gift is profaned they are doubly guilty.

Whether writing with the sacred fire of inspiration or with the trained artistry of intellectual powers, the thoughts sent forth have mighty potentialities for good or evil. Drifting through the ethers they find lodgement in the minds of readers and fire the imagination with lofty purpose or with vile suggestions.

It would seem that the committee of authors banded together to suppress censorship might devote their energies to better purpose. There is so much to be done to raise the standards of present-day literature that intelligent people have no time to waste. If the literary output is vile or dirty the author should be suppressed. If the evil is attacked at the fountainhead there will be no further need of censors.

Neither will there be any need to "stifle the true aim of art and artists." Only "false" aims needs meet that fate.

The freedom of artistry and its true power need not be curtailed. There is unbounded liberty in the field of romance without wading into pollution. Art—literary and pictorial—does not need the latitude which embraces impurity. It can express with limitless freedom on the upcurve toward infinite mysteries. Its only limitations are found in the animal instrincts. When they are expressed through art, the art suffers.

Some of the writers of the period seem to imagine that if the dirt is left out of a story it will fail to interest. They use very poor materials for the thrill which the romance is supposed to impart. They draw from lower instead of higher sources. A sorry comment on the quality of intelligence animating the reading public.

So these writers think and imagine uncleanness and send it out to the world which they evidently imagine is clamoring for the indecencies of life depicted in fiction. Some may need the poison of polluted fancy in order to get what they call "a kick" out of a novel, but they are either too young to know the meaning of what they are imbibing or they are moral perverts. In either case they are in noe sense representative of the reading public.

The better class of readers do not get their thrills in that way and would have no objection to censorship if it could be exercised wisely.

The characteristic that stands out most prominently in our latest American hero, Col. Charles Lindbergh, is modesty. His absolute freedom from self-conceit and self-glorification is the finest thing we have seen in many a day. It is the thing that proclaims his greatness. We have had so many spoiled "heroes," so many prompous ones, who were so puffed up with a sense of their importance when borne on the high tide of popular acclaim that it is refreshing to find one who "wonders if he deserves all this honor."

It is the outstanding feature of the whole performance. His daring flight across the ocean showed high courage, but it was not that which proclaimed his real greatness. It was the splendid poise and modesty under conditions that would have tried the strongest natures, the refusal to take any credit to himself for his triumph, that stamp him as far more than an aviation hero.

After receiving honors that would have dazzled any ordinary mind and that would have turned the head of almost anyone among the masses who so riotously cheered him on his triumphal procession, he remained the simple-hearted boy chiefly interested in his chosen pursuit of its development for the good of the nation.

In his response to the greeting of President Coolidge his modesty was chiefly noticeable. He made no allusion to his aviation feat and the honors which followed. A lesser man would at least have alluded to his recent triumph, even by way of acknowledgement of the honors conferred. The spirt of Charles Lindbergh seemed as detached from the boyish personality that was receiving such a tremendous ovation, as though it looked on from another sphere. It was as though it recognized the emptiness and futility of pomp and pageant and saw the realities of life with unblinded eyes. It was a great and kindly spirit that took note of and shared the troubles and sorrows of others.

So by his inner worth, his true nobility of character, shown in his quiet modesty and gentle kindness, he will be remembered longest.

FACT AND COMMENT

With the records of transfers of property steadily mounting there seems no justification for the complaint among some brokers that business is decreasing, excepting that the decline is personal to the particular office.

During the intense activity a few years ago the spirit of the hour drove brokers as they had never been driven before. They worked on sales night as well as day. They thus made contacts which although they might not have resulted in immediate sales, did help business indirectly.

Since that time, with the decrease in the fever for speculative buying, these contacts have been worked over until there are few available prospects among them. Hence, business is dull. These friendly contacts cannot be interested for they are already loaded with property.

In view of the fact that subdivision busses are leaving the city daily loaded with prospects it would seem that the brokers in deeded property should break through the ring of old contacts and start the formation of a new series. There are many thousands of people who were here during the active days who could not be convinced that the progress made in the last six years would ever be accomplished. There are many other thousands who have arrived since then. These new contacts should be the business of the hour.

NEW HOME FOR NURSES COMPLETED

Building of St. Vincent's Hospital Unit Believed to Set Mark for Speed

Considered a record for speed—especially in the erection of such a large edifice—the new nurses' home and training school for St. Vincent's Hospital has been finished, ninety days from the beginning of work.

Announcement of the $90,000 unit was made by J. M. Close, designer and builder. The realty department of the Close organization handled the deal by which Robert F. Moss, owner of the land, entered into an agreement to put up the structure on a ten-year-lease arrangement with the hospital officials. The building is three stories in height, contains seventy-five roms with bath, in addition to classrooms, and is of stucco in Spanish design.

The new structure is just opposite the great St. Vincent's Hospital on the west side of Lake street near Ocean View.

BOARD JOINS ASSOCIATION

Local Brokers Vote to Unite With California Realty Organization July 1

By unanimous action on the part of its membership, the Los Angeles Realty Board voted to join the California Real Estate Association on July 1, next, the decision to join the State body having been made at a membership meeting of the local board Tuesday.

"The addition of the realty board to the ranks of the State association will augment the roster of the State organization by approximately 1000 members, the Los Angeles board being by far the largest board in the State in point of numbers, and second only to Chicago in size in the country," according to President Harry H. Culver, who made the announcement of the board's action last week.

Several members of the local board are already officers of the State association. W. D. Cochrane is vice-president, and State directors include W. M. Garland, Frank Ryan, C. C. C. Tatum, Robert Baker, John J. Bogardus, W. H. Daum, William C. Keim, E. T. Oakes, G. D. Robertson, Bernard Rosenthal, Guy M. Rush, A. F. Schuler and W. W. Mines.

President Culver served as president of the State association during 1926, being succeeded by Harry B. Allen of San Francisco.

PLANS FOR HIGH SCHOOL ANNOUNCED

Site at Santa Monica Purchased for Catholic Unit Costing $250,000

SANTA MONICA, June 18. (Exclusive)—A plan to build a $250,000 Catholic high school for girls in Santa Monica was revealed yesterday, when Judge George H. Hutton, who stated the plan has the sanction of the Rt. Rev. Bishop J. J. Cantwell of the diocese of Los Angeles and San Diego, applied to the City Council for removal of Class A zone building restrictions from the proposed site, which is five acres at California avenue and Twenty-fifth street. Present restrictions are for single family residences only, and the commissioners granted the request.

Judge Hutton stated he had made the initial payment on the tract, and that the school will be equipped to accommodate pupils from all parishes in Ventura on the north, Redondo Beach on the south and Beverly Hills on the east. The site selected is known as the Herrerra property, and was the proposed site of a municipal park project which was defeated at a bond election last year.

The diocese authorities propose to have the school ready for occupancy a year from next September, Judge Hutton informed the Santa Monica officials, and the teaching staff will be drawn from the order of Sisters of the Holy Names.

Better Financing and Easing of Cash Help

Weekly Report Shows Gains in Deeds Filed

Figures for All City Zones Cited in Records

Distinct strengthening of the city realty market marked the five-day period from the 8th to 13th inst, according to the weekly analysis prepared exclusively for the Los Angeles Times, by the Daily Recorder, the county digest of records, published by the Los Angeles Journal, the official publication.

The record of transfers showed 1396 deeds going to record in city property, as against 1246 the previous period. The total for deeds filed by the other incorporated areas of the county was 992. The result of better financing and easing of cash is shown in the number of satisfactions of mortgages and trust deeds for which no new finance was sought.

The total borrowing on mortgages was $1,881,183, and on trust deeds, $2,928,273, a combined total of $4,809,456. The total was used in the satisfaction of $804,207 owed on mortgages and $611,344 on trust deeds, cleared in the process of transfering property, or in preparing for new building operations as indicated by the filed building contracts. The total of $1,415,551 aggregate of liens thus cleared off, left on hand $3,393,905 in new loan money issued in connection with transfers out of the $4,809,456 total liens recorded.

REPORTS BY DISTRICTS

The analysis for the period begins in the center of the city and shows the number of deeds the mortgages and trust deeds issued, the amount used in refinancing, the amount available for new operations and the number of liens paid off from other sources.

The business district between Alameda and Figueroa, Sunset and Sixteenth, Pico, Central and Fourteenth transferred four titles, issued two mortgages and four trust deeds. It refinanced $56,000 in liens, has a balance of $143,448 on hand. It released one mortgage and four trust deeds without loans.

The district between Figueroa and Vermont, Bellevue to Washington, filed thirty-three deeds, ten mortgages and thirteen trust deeds for a total of $400,535, out of which it paid off $145,000 and had $253,535 left. Eight mortgages and a like number of trust deeds were satisfied without liens.

WILSHIRE DISTRICT

Further west, the Wilshire district filed 150 deeds, forty-five mortgages and 113 trust deeds, borrowing its usual $1,032,547. It satisfiel $168,564 in liens, leaving a balance on the turn-off in new oblizations of $864,983. Tis district paid off eleven mortgages and fifteen trust deeds without loans.

North of Wilshire, the south Hollywood district turned fifty-six pieces of property and filed twenty-one mortgages and thirty-seven trust deeds for a total of $365,160. Out of this it paid off $192,143 liens and had a balance of $173,013 in new liens. Two mortgages were released and ten trust deeds paid without loans.

North Hollywood filed fifty-six deeds, twenty-one mortgages and thirty-seven trust deeds and paid off $97,600 out of a total of $478,107 raised by loans and has a balance of $380,507 new loan money. It satisfied nine mortgages and eight trust deeds without liens.

The district that runs from Culver City east to Main street, Washington to Vernon which has shown latent strength in the market, filed 108 deeds took on forty-four mortgages and sixty-seven trust deeds for a total of $391,357, paid off $128,720 and has a balance of $262,637. The dis-

REALTY BOARD ALTERS BY-LAWS

New Constitution Drafted by Local Group

Bolstering of Ethical Code Aim in Change

Reclassification of Members Also Announced

Adoption of a new constitution and by-laws for the Los Angeles Realty Board is announced by President Harry H. Culver as a result of a vote taken at a membership meeting of the realty body last Tuesday.

"The Los Angeles Realty Board is essentially a business organization," Mr. Culver said, "and many of the changes incorporated in the new constitution have to do directly with the business administration of the board. On the other hand, the National Association of Real Estate Boards, of which the Los Angeles board is the local member, was primarily founded to promote ethical conduct on the part of its members in their dealings with the public and with one another.

"The code of ethics of the national association is a part of the constitution of the local board, and included in the newly adopted regulations is a definite membership pledge which provides that all active, associated and non-resident members shall be required to sign a pledge prescribed by the board of directors, and to abide by the national code of ethics. Legal protection of the real estate buying public is afforded by the State, but it is the aim and intention of the realty board to go a step further and insure that all affairs intrusted to its members shall be dealt with in a strictly ethical manner."

Other changes in the new constitution include a reclassification of members, those designated formerly as "associate members" to be known as "affiliated members," and the classification of salesman members changed to "associate members." Hereafter the members of the governing body of the board will be known as directors, instead of governors, to avoid the confusion as to whether "board of governors" indicated only the directorate, or the board in its entirety, it was stated.

MODESTO ASKS TO FETE MEN

Town Seeks Routing of Special Train Carrying Eastern Realty Delegates

Stanislaus county will seek entertainment of delegates from the East to the national real estate convention at Seattle, according to P. S. Bomberger, realty man of Modesto. Bomberger has advised the California Real Estate Association that Modesto hopes to obtain one of the special trains passing through his city to stop over for a short time and visit Yosemite as well as Modesto.

More special trains have been announced in the East to attend the Seattle convention. North Carolina and Virginia delegates will make a thirty-day coast-to-coast tour in connection with their attendance at the coming convention, returning via Los Angeles, while the Florida association will return via San Francisco and Los Angeles, following the convention. The Washington (D. C.) Real Estate Board also expects to have a special train for its delegates. The New Orleans convention special is due to arrive in Los Angeles August 3, and will visit Hollywood, Pasadena, Culver City, Beverly Hills and Catalina for several days, arriving in San Francisco August 6 and leaving the night of August 7 for Portland and Seattle.

with an entire change of scenery and environment.

It has been suggested that a part of the beach line be set aside for the development of "Pacific District of Columbia" duplicating the offices of the President and the department heads.

It is argued by some realty men that with the advent of nation-wide broadcast facilities, the extension of telephone lines across the country, aviation development and even television the seaboards of both sides of the nation have been brought closer than ever before in the history of the nation.

A Voluntary Bouquet

It was a welcome bunch of posies tossed to Los Angeles a few days ago by the general manager of the Phoenix Chamber of Commerce when he declared that Phoenix and other cities in Arizona had found this city an ideal purchasing center.

The chamber official was not obligated to praise Los Angeles products, and the compliment was quite unsolicited. He said without qualification that "Los Angeles can furnish better goods to us at lower rates than any other city."

Arizona is experiencing rapid progress. This week news has been released of hotels, apartment-houses and theaters being constructed in Phoenix, Prescott, Tucson, Yuma and other cities. The prosperity is reflected in many other lines, and Los Angeles with its accessible markets and reliable products quite naturally is favored.

HIGH QUALITY—HIGH DIVIDE

IF YOU will investigate for yourself, you will find conclusive evidence that the "quality group" of apartment and business buildings is the biggest income producer.

Buildings of the finer type draw tenants from older, less modern, less convenient structures.

The "quality group" shows a much higher occupancy rate—and commands the highest rentals.

The man who wishes to make a permanent investment in a permanent income producing building will not shop for the lowest bidder.

He will insist upon quality construction, and will select a builder who thoroughly knows the amenities of "quality construction."

Luther T. Mayo, specialist in better business, office and apartment buildings, invites a friendly conference with you at any time.

TWO CHURCHES BEING ERECTED

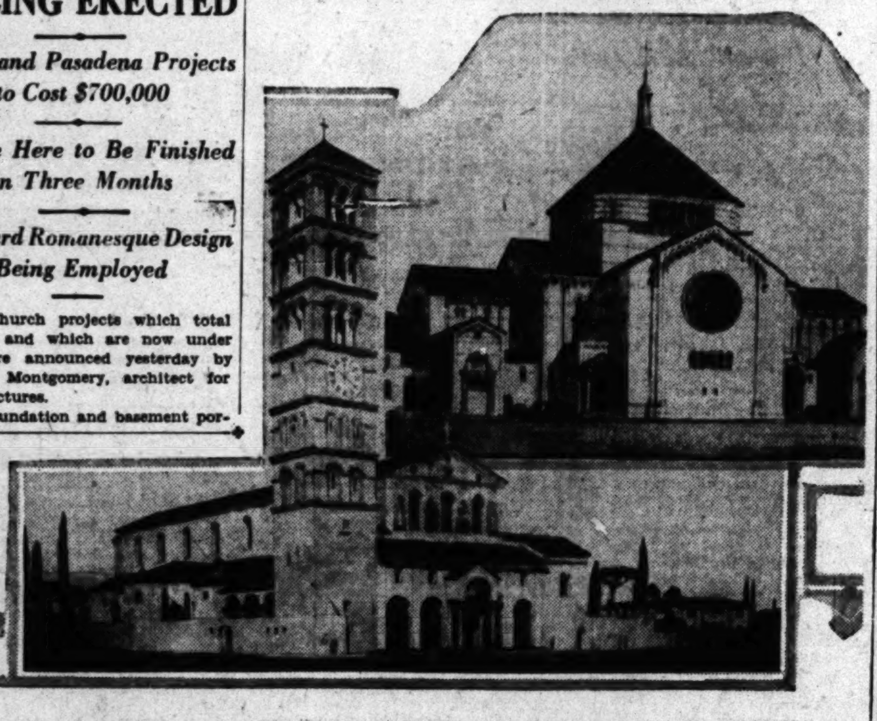
Local and Pasadena Projects to Cost $700,000

Edifice Here to Be Finished in Three Months

Lombard Romanesque Design Being Employed

Two church projects which total $700,000 and which are now under way were announced yesterday by Ross G. Montgomery, architect for the structures.

Religious Centers Under Construction



St. Cecilia's for Los Angeles (above) and Pasadena Church

Being erected at a total expenditure of $700,000, the two churches shown above are now under construction. St. Cecilia's is being erected in Los Angeles at a cost of $200,000, while St. Andrew's is being built at Pasadena for $500,000.

The foundation and basement portions of St. Andrew's Catholic Church at Raymond avenue and Chestnut street, Pasadena, have recently been completed and work on the superstructure is progressing rapidly. The edifice will cost $500,000, and will accommodate 1200 persons. The design is suggestive of sixth century Roman Basilican architecture, and the interior will be a replica of the ancient church of St. Sabina at Rome. The materials used are reinforced concrete and structural steel. Roman-type brick, stone, mosaics and antique plaster will be used on the exterior. The interior will be resplendent in marble, mosaics and carved stone. One especial feature of the interior will be the sanctuary, which will be unusually commodious for the purpose of elaborate ceremonies.

Many chapels besides the main sanctuary will radiate from the aisles and nave of the church. Large sacristies, a baptistry, together with a choir gallery, are embodied in the plans. The companile will be 150 feet high, and will be one of the tallest structures in Pasadena.

St. Cecilia's Roman Catholic Church, now under construction at Forty-third and Normandie, is expected to be complete within the next three months. Inclusive of decorations, the cost will be approximately $200,000.

The structure represents a new departure in church architecture, as the style employed by the architect has not been utilized to any extent in Los Angeles or local communities. The design is Lombard Romanesque, a style developed in Italy during the eleventh century.

The major part of the building is being built of reinforced concrete, and has been so designed as to be earthquakeproof. The seating capacity will be approximately 1000, inclusive of choir and sanctuary. A rectory is being erected simultaneously with the church and will embody all modern conveniences.

Students in Realty Classes Number 1236

Proof positive that the real estate business holds an absorbing interest for people in all walks of life was shown recently by a report issued by Frank C. Colridge, field representative in real estate instruction of the California Real Estate Association and the University of Southern California. Colridge states that a total of 1236 persons took courses in real estate during the year 1926-27, an increase of 140 over the preceding year.

The certificate, which signifies a satisfactory completion of a twenty-six lesson course in the principles of real estate will be awarded this year to a greater percentage of students than in previous years. Elaborate exercises have already been held at Long Beach, Monrovia, Riverside, Santa Rosa, South Pasadena, and West Hollywood with similar events scheduled for Fresno, Pasadena, Huntington Park, and San Diego.

Among those learning the real estate profession were bankers, title men, ranchers, druggists, school teachers, lawyers, dentists, physicians, merchants, investors, retired business men, auto salesmen, railroad employees, barbers, retired ministers, contractors, building material salesmen, hotel men, vineyardists, orange growers, and many others.

COMPLETE SEWER WORK

HUNTINGTON BEACH, June 18. (Exclusive)—The Lana Construction Company of Los Angeles is completing work this week on the $10,500 sewer system on the east side of town. The contract was let to the company in April. City Trustees authorized the work after many homes were moved from the oil district in the western section of town, into the eastern district.

MILLION IN NEW HOMES

Evidence of the unusually rapid pace with which the southern portion of Westwood Hills is developing is shown in a survey, just completed, which registers an increase of 122 new homes in the area south of Wilshire Boulevard during the last ninety days. This figure includes homes completed and put under construction during that period. The total value of these improvements is estimated at $976,000.

The southern area of Westwood Hills, according to Janss Investment Company, has been the scene of unusually heavy activity during recent months, including the installation of an electrolier system, work on sewer improvements, the building of a new high school adjoining Fox Hills and starting of work on a new pay-as-you-play golf course. In addition to this, both the William Fox and Harold Lloyd Film Companies have announced additional plans for the improvement of their holdings which should give lot values in this district an added stimulus.

FIGHT ON ELECTION FORECAST

Laguna Beach to Vote on Incorporation Plans Next Wednesday

LAGUNA BEACH, June 18. (Exclusive)—A bitter fight looms in this city next Wednesday, when citizens will vote on the question of incorporation. Laguna Beach has enjoyed a phenomenal growth during the past two years, springing from a village of a few hundred inhabitants to a town with nearly 3000 inhabitants and with a registration of more than 1000. There are approximately 1500 inhabitants in the district to be incorporated, it is reported.

Rapid strides in the progress of the town have caused the incorporation step. Streets in the town are being paved, and $1,000,000 water system was recently completed. Gas is also being brought into the town for the first time. Real estate has been changing hands rapidly, many big business deals being completed in the town during the past few months.

The incorporation election will be held Wednesday, the 22nd inst. The date of the election was set recently by County Supervisors. Attorney L. A. West of Santa Ana represents those in favor of the incorporation movement.

Arch Beach residents disapprove the incorporation movement because they declare it will mean the end of Laguna's Beach's fame as a scenic artistic colony and will change the town from a village into a city with too many modern improvements. Artists themselves and business men are said to favor the incorporation, declaring that the march of progress cannot be halted in the town.

Voters will cast their ballots at the Laguna Beach Chamber of Commerce Building. Polls will open at 6 a.m. and close at 7 p.m.

LOWERING OF TRACKS SOUGHT BY BOARD

In view of the fact that the streets are paved on both sides of the car tracks of the Los Angeles Railway on Vermont avenue and Broadway, from Manchester avenue south to One Hundred and Twentieth street, the Los Angeles Realty Board, Southwest Branch, unanimously adopted a resolution requiring the secretary to write letters asking that the railway company give immediate attention to lowering their tracks at those points to the street grade. Further resolutions were adopted and letters sent to the City Engineer Shaw, asking that immediate steps be taken to repair the cross-drains on Normandie avenue, south of Slauson avenue, so as to permit safer travel on that boulevard.

TO DISCUSS ANNEXATION

COSTA MESA, June 18. (Exclusive)—The possibility of annexing this community to Newport Beach will be discussed at a mass meeting of chambers of commerce of Newport Beach Balboa and Costa Mesa next Friday, it was announced here today. Newport Beach, now an incorporated city, includes the districts of Newport Beach, Balboa, Balboa Island and Corona Del Mar.

STREET WIDTH LIMIT FAVORED

Commission Considers Roads of Thirty-four Feet

Would Make Parkways Seven and One-half Feet

Space Would Make Possible Beautification Plans

Standard widths of streets in purely residential districts, so as to provide space for beautification and tree planting in the parkways, is now under consideration by the major traffic conference, composed of city and county officials and representatives of the traffic commission.

The plan in brief, is to standardize the width of pavements on residential streets to permit plenty of room for the passage, parking and turning of motor vehicles, but eliminate all waste space.

Hugh Pomeroy, regional planning director, said that the county has made some experiments with street widths. The amount of pavement needed should be enough to allow two moving automobiles to pass each other between two parked cars at the curbs.

The width of the average automobile is slightly in excess of six feet, and the maximum width under the law is eight feet. As vehicles must be parked within a foot of the curb, a total of fourteen feet is needed for parked machines. Allowing ten feet each for the lanes for moving traffic the total width of the pavement would then be thirty-four feet. By limiting the width of the pavement to thirty-four feet, the cost of paving to property owners will be greatly reduced and additional space would be available for parkways.

It was pointed out that parkways four and one-half feet wide such as are common now, do not allow sufficient space for the planting of shade trees. The varieties of trees that may be safety planted in a parkway only four and one-half feet wide are limited. A much larger group may be planted in parkways that are seven and one-half feet wide. While the matter has not yet been definitely determined, it was the stated opinion of a number of members of the conference, that the standard roadway in residential districts should be thirty-four feet wide, flanked by parkways seven and one-half feet wide.

NEW ICE PLANT UNIT

LEMOORE, June 18. (Exclusive)—The Home Ice and Storage Company will soon open up a factory and begin sales here. Articles of incorporation have just been filed, its purpose being to manufacture ice for the wholesale and retail trade. The directors are Louis Decker, Cecil Friend and Grace L. Friend, all of Lemoore.

HOUSING TREND GREATEST HERE

Three Times More Spent in West Coast Cities

Total of $1200 Per Capita in New Structures

The people of Los Angeles have invested nearly three times as much money, per capita, as have the citizens of eastern cities of comparable population, in their effort to provide new housing for the adequate accommodation of the newcomers to this city during the last five years. This is shown by an analysis of the building operations of the years 1922 to 1926, inclusive, in twenty-five Pacific Coast cities and forty-five eastern cities of greatest importance, just completed by S. W. Straus & Co.

During this period Los Angeles has increased in population nearly nine times as fast as have the comparable eastern cities, according to the most reliable population estimates obtainable from United States census reports, public utility service reports and other sources used in the survey. To this is chiefly ascribed the fact that 'the average investment in new building per newcomer is more than three times as great in the eastern cities.

BUILDING COST GREATER

The average construction cost per building project is nearly one-third greater in the eastern cities, as shown by a comparison of the reports of building permits issued during 1926 published in the National Monthly Building Survey of S. W. Straus & Co. This is due in part to favorable local climatic conditions and in part to the relatively greater number of major projects undertaken in the older eastern cities on account of the factors of building obsolescence and commercial district congestion and which are not so important in the status of the newer cities of the West.

Los Angeles, on the basis of its 1922 population, has invested $1200 per capita in new buildings during the last five years, while the average for comparable eastern cities is $453.

COMPARISON CITED

For every premanent resident newcomer to the city during this period, Los Angeles has expended $1102 in new buildings, while the comparable eastern figure is $3593. During 1926, the local building permits issued called for an average construction cost of $3209 while the average cost in the comparable eastern cities was $4[illegible]5.

An analysis of the five years' record of building activity and population increases, for the twenty-five biggest Pacific Coast cities and the forty-five leading cities of the Eastern United States, shows an average western population gain of 56.1 per cent as compared with 11.9 per cent in the East, a new building investment per newcomer amounting to $1212 in the West and $4235 in the East, and an average investment per capita of $[illegible]85 by Pacific Coast people and of $505 by those of the eastern cities.

TO BE ESTABLISHED

SAN JUAN CAPISTRANO, June 18. This city is soon to have a telephone exchange, it was announced today by E. S. Morrow, district manager of the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company. Although Capistrano is one of the oldest, if not the oldest town in Orange county, it has never had a telephone exchange, a pay station and a few private phones being the only ones in town. Recent growth of the San Clemente, San Juan Beach and Dana Point districts has made it imperative that the exchange be established.

CONTRACT AWARDED

REDLANDS, June 18. (Exclusive) A. E. Taylor & Sons have received the contract for the new store building on Cajon street just opposite the City Hall to be built by Harry P. Wheaton. Work has been started on the building which will have fine attractive shop rooms. These will be twenty feet wide and sixty feet deep, with most modern styles of display windows and finest interior finishing with a stucco exterior. The building is to cost about $25,000.

San Clemente Sales to Total Four Million

Sales at San Clemente will be more than $4,000,000 in a period of nineteen months when the present sales contest closes on July 5, according to Ole Hanson, founder and builder of the Spanish village located on the Coast highway six miles south of Mission San Juan Capistrano.

The San Clemente Riding Academy will be completed within a few days, according to E. R. Bartlett, who is building the structure in the third unit on El Camino Real. Work of beautifying the grounds is under way.

E. S. Morrow, manager of the Santa Ana office of the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company, was recently in San Clemente preparing the installation of telephones in homes of the Spanish village. A telephone exchange is being installed, and installation of phones is expected to be completed by the end of July.

FRESNO REALTY BOARD TO GRADUATE CLASS

The annual meeting and graduation exercises of the Fresno Realty Board will be held at the Sunnyside Country Club the 21st inst., according to announcement made by O. O. Reed, chairman of the educational class at Fresno. Stephen Barnson, State Real Estate Commissioner, will be on the program.

Plans for the San Gabriel dam are being checked by the State Engineer, under authorization of the Supervisors.

Boulevard Aids Development of New Property

The progress being experienced at Bush Garden Heights is attributed to the development of Avenue 64 as a boulevard, according to Higgs-Romney, brokers, who are active in the neighborhood.

Ninety per cent of inquiries are being received from professional people, it is declared. Although a few sales have been recorded at Bush Heights already, formal opening of the new tract is scheduled for the 26th inst.

Among these hills on the west side of the Arroyo Seco, where is located some of the finest old estates in Southern California, there has been more development in the last eighteen months than in fifty years before. All utilities are now available in this district and the pavement of the Pasadena end of Avenue 64 has just been completed, as well as the sidewalks and curbs. The steam shovel has reached the top of Bush Garden Heights, located on Avenue 64 and adjoining the Church of the Angels.

PRICES FOR MATERIALS AT LOW EBB

Survey Shows Present as Time to Build; Shortage of Shingle Homes Prevails

Lumber and cement prices at the warehouses are approximately one-third less than they were in 1923; common-lumber prices, with discounts, are about 30 per cent less than they were in that year; cement prices are lower than at any time since the World War; brick and tile prices have dropped, and sand and crushed rock prices are remaining steady.

Therefore, the present is the time to build, because there is no guarantee that the present prices will remain at their low level.

That is the advice of Alfred T. Pelton, president of the Interstate Mortgage and Investment Company, which has just completed a survey of building conditions throughout the country. The advice applies to both the individual home builder and the builder of single dwellings for rental purposes, the survey showing that there still is an urgent need in the close-in residential districts of Los Angeles for single-family dwellings.

Mr. Pelton points out, however, that the building public appears to be aware of the fact that there is a single-family-home shortage, the first six months of this year indicating that there has been a substantial increase in the number of such structures erected. In the last few years there has been a decided change in the demand for single residences, the investment head added. Several years ago everyone was building homes costing $15,000 and up or the cheapest types of dwellings, but at present the greatest demand is for modest and comfortable small residences.

Hair Company Acquires New Quarters Here

With the leasing of the third floor of the Isaacs Building at 730 South Broadway, involving a total consideration of $100,000, the Paris Hair Company, wholesalers to the beauty profession, is placing contracts for the installation of partitions and display accessories.

The new quarters, representing 9000 square feet, will be ready for occupancy on August 1, at which time a formal reception will be given to patrons, according to Dave Myerson and Dave Benjamin, copartners. These two men established the Paris Hair Company just twelve years ago on a capital of $210, and the rent originally paid was $10 per month for occupying a tiny room in the Columbia Building on West Third street. Eleven road salesmen are regularly employed by the company.

SURVEY TO AFFECT POSTOFFICE ISSUE

NEWPORT BEACH, June 11. (Exclusive)—A survey is to be conducted here at once by Chamber of Commerce officials to determine the sentiment of local persons regarding the incorporation of four postoffices in this city into one office. Several interested citizens have pointed out that the incorporation of the four offices would give the Newport Beach a much higher class rating and would give it no little power in postal matters. At present there are four offices, one each in Newport Beach, Balboa, Balboa Island and Corona Del Mar. It is expected that petitions will be circulated soon to settle the matter.

Mr. Van Newkirk spoke in favor of the adoption, in principle, of the new constitution and by-laws of the main body which, among other important features, provides for the expenditure of $2 monthly per member for advertising the pledge of security and honest dealing conveyed in the word realtor, and educating the public to demand realtor service.

COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT

FONTANA READY TO BUILD CITY

Huge Development Drive to Open on July 2

Company's Head Sees 15,000 Population by 1930

Surrounding Area Settled; Improvements In

FONTANA, June 18.—Announcement was made today that July 2 has been decided on as the date when this community will start work on the building of a city. For more than twelve years the Fontana Farms Company has been developing and colonizing an irrigated tract of 14,000 acres in the heart of Southern California's orange belt, and near the center of this area A. B. Miller, president of the company, set aside 850 acres on which to build the city of Fontana.

But instead of pushing the sale of city property, the usual order was reversed and the development of the surrounding farming area which now supports a productive population of 5000 persons was concentrated on.

TIME HAS ARRIVED

Now the time has arrived to stimulate the growth of the city of Fontana and to increase the number of merchants, builders, industrial enterprises, homeseekers and investors, according to Mr. Miller, and the way is open for the first time for the acquisition of business and close-in residential properties. Excepting on a few lots, however, no immediate building requirement exists. An architectural standard and style has been set, on the other hand, with a view to establishing here an ideally laid out city which will conform in beauty to the surrounding territory. The proposal is to make Fontana the "perfect" city of Southern California and the West.

A survey just completed for Mr. Miller reveals that at the present time the 5000 producers in the Fontana area spend more than $2,000,000 annually for food, clothing, household necessities, luxuries, etc., not considering the trade arising out of the conduct of the poultry and fruit business or out of the activities of several hundred new settlers building their homes and poultry plants on Fontana acreage every year. At the rate of growth maintained for the past three years, it is pointed out in the survey report that the city of Fontana should have a population of 15,000 by 1930 and 30,000 by 1940.

LOTS HELD BACK

During the development period of the farming area here lots were not sold in the Fontana townsite excepting to persons who agreed to build within a short specified period, this policy creating the groundwork for the methodical building of a city. The townsite occupies almost the center of the longest gap between important cities in the orange belt, and is on or near three east-and-west boulevards, the Foothill, the Valley and the Arrow Highway, the latter traversing the heart of the city. The principal north-and-south street, Sierra avenue and formerly known as Magnolia avenue, begins at the mouth of Lytle Creek and runs to the foot of the Jurupa Hills, across which a short connection will make it the direct route from Riverside to the Cajon Pass and beyond. The community is also served by the Santa Fe and Pacific Electric railroads, both maintaining attractive passenger stations. Stage transportation also is available.

Streets, with some exceptions, have a width of 80 feet and abut on 20 foot alleys. Sierra avenue has just been widened to 100 feet through the business section, and two other business streets are 100 feet wide. Arrow Boulevard, destined to be the shortest route between Los Angeles and San Bernardino, is 100 feet wide in the business district with trees and parking in the center. All streets through the subdivided area are graded and improved with concrete curbs. Domestic water mains pass every lot, and gas, electricity and telephones are available.

TOWNSITE ZONED

The entire townsite has been zoned with reasonable restrictions both as to minimum improvement costs and to architecture.

Business lots have a frontage of 30 feet with double this size on corners, and a depth averaging 120 feet. Fifty to 60 feet is the width of the residential lots, many of them being more than 170 feet deep.

At Fontana, Mr. Miller said today, the size of the average holding is less than five acres per owner. On February 1, last, the records showed 10,600 Fontana acres in the hands of 2300 private owners, an average of 4.64 acres per owner. The average of subsequent sales of almost 1000 acres was slightly lower. Up to May 1, last, about 1100 families had established productive homes here. More than 600 had poultry plants with a total capacity of almost 600,000 hens. The output of eggs, live stock, fruit and vegetables and approaching $250,000 a month, the total for 1926 exceeding $2,500,000, yet thousands of acres in young trees and vines were just beginning to yield, few of the poultrymen had reached capacity and less than half of the present 2300 owners of acreage had become residents, although they are joining the community fast.

EXTENSION OF BEACH ROAD CONTEMPLATED

HUNTINGTON BEACH, June 18. (Exclusive)—Extension of Hampshire avenue from Frankfort street to Ocean avenue may be accomplished in the near future if plans outlined by the realty board and the local Chamber of Commerce are successful. The matter of opening the street has long been under consideration. The road would open a direct route for residents of the east side of town to reach the beach. At present it is necessary for east-side residents to detour for several blocks to reach the ocean front.

RIVERSIDE TO HAVE NEW BANK

Ground to Be Broken in July for Branch Unit Costing $150,000

RIVERSIDE, June 18. (Exclusive)—Early in July ground will be broken here for the new home of the Security Title Insurance and Guarantee Company, and construction work on the building, which will rank as one of the most attractive and modern structures in Riverside will be rushed to completion as rapidly as possible.

The new home of the company will be located at the southwest corner of Eighth and Orange streets, and will be built at a cost of $150,000. Designed by Architects Walker & Eisen of Los Angeles, it will be of Spanish architecture, and of Class A construction. An unusual feature of the building will be the arcades over the sidewalks, these arcades extending along both frontages of the building.

The entire ground floor will be occupied by the Security Title Insurance and Guarantee Company, and will contain a series of conference, title and escrow rooms as well as general departmental headquarters. The second floor will contain seventeen offices, and arrangements are being made for the installation of a blue-print room on the roof of the building. Provision has also been made in the plans for the addition of several more floors to the building, when required, Mr. Chapman stated.

Inclined Bridge to Span Gap for Power Company

An inclined bridge 250 feet long and eight feet wide has solved the problem confronting the Southern California Edison Company in trying to transport several large generators, transformers and heavy machinery up the side of a mountain and across a stream in the Sierra Nevada Mountains. Difficulty was experienced in taking the equipment to Big Creek powerhouse No. 3, located seventy-two miles northeast of Fresno.

The machinery will be pulled up on the bridge. One end of the bridge is to be fixed and the other end to be on rollers. This design is necessary on account of the extremes of temperature, to allow for expansion and contraction.

The bridge will contain 100 tons of galvanized structural steel and the Baker Iron Works, which has the contract, has promised to fabricate and deliver the bridge within twenty days.

Flour Company Sets Record in May Production

The southwestern division of the Sperry Flour Company during May handled the largest volume of business in its history, according to J. L. Eichelberger, division sales manager.

Working on the principle that the success of its customers will be reflected in its own success, the company bought the copyrights to several authoritative treatises in such lines as poultry and dairy feeding and husbandry written by the foremost experts in each field. These practical helps were printed in booklet form and distributed free to users of poultry and dairy feeds.

Coupled with the distribution of these booklets, bakery shop experts were sent to bake shops for the purpose of demonstrating baking principles and methods to insure more tasteful products or decrease costs without reducing quality.

PAVING ACTION STARTED

ESCONDIDO, June 18. (Exclusive) A movement has been started for the paving of sections of North Lime street and Till avenue. They are two of the most important thoroughfares in the valley.

Swede Making Glue Out of Discarded Films

Another of the fast vanishing pleasures of the small boy is to be taken from him, for still another use has been found for discarded motion-picture film. The foul-smelling barrage raised by slowly burning film has given way to the manufacture of glue from this product, according to R. D. Sangster, manager of the industrial department of the Chamber of Commerce.

Six months ago A. Karlson came to Hollywood from Sweden where he had been making glue out of discarded film. Moved by a desire to live in California and thus be near his source of supply, Karlson established a temporary factory in a garage of his home at 1403 Dominion avenue, Pasadena. The initial capacity of the plant was 360 tubes of glue a day. In Sweden his plant turned out several million tubes a year. The glue, according to Karlson, is meeting with such great success among local merchants, that a national campaign of distribution and advertising is contemplated, as well as a new plant in Los Angeles.

Rock Used in Roof Material Sent to Alaska

Shipping rock from the Yosemite National Park in California to the rock-bound shores of Alaska is a new wrinkle in coastal trade, according to J. H. Plunkett, general manager of the Pioneer Paper Company of Los Angeles.

The rock, however, is not shipped in bulk only as rock, but has gone forward to Sitka in the form of a weatherproof, fireproof surfacing for 65,000 square feet of Pioneer shingles which will be used in reroofing the Sheldon-Jackson Presbyterian School at the far northern port.

In such extreme climates as that which prevails in Alaska, where the temperature often drops to 40 deg. below zero in winter, fire is an ever-present menace to the inhabitants, the executive pointed out. Hydrants freeze solid and the problem of protection is further complicated by the sparks and embers which result from the burning of vast quantities of wood fuel required for life-giving warmth. This is the primary consideration which has caused the heads of the mission, which shelters more than 500 little orphans, to switch from wood shingles to the Los Angeles product.

SHOW RESIDENCE IN COUNTY COMPLETED

TUSTIN, June 18. (Exclusive)—What is said to be Orange county's most beautiful and elaborate home was completed this week. It is the $100,000 Spanish-type hillside residence of C. E. Utt, located on Lemon Heights. The house was started last September. It occupies an eight-acre site and although twelve miles from the sea it commands a view of the Pacific, San Pedro Harbor and Santa Catalina Island on a clear day. The house contains eleven large rooms, numerous halls and a large patio in the center. W. Clifford Truesdale of Los Angeles was the architect. Bowman & Preble, Santa Ana contractors, were the builders. The house is constructed of reinforced concrete, set off with Spanish tile.

BUILDER'S BOND USE EXPLAINED

Exchange Points Way to Protection Against Loss in Matter of Liens

Broadening the scope of its public service, the Builders' Exchange of Los Angeles, in co-operation with similar exchanges located in nine other leading cities of Southern California, has undertaken to advise home builders as to the kind of bonds that may be written to safeguard against financial loss and the nature of the building contract that should be entered into to give full protection under the California lien law.

Under the California lien law, it is explained, the home owner is responsible for the payment of bills for materials furnished and labor performed. If the contractor fails to pay the bills, they become liens against the property and must be paid by the home owner even though he previously may have paid the contractor in full. The exchanges now, in their efforts to foster the best standards of the industry, urge insertion in the building contract of a clause under which the contractor receives money from the owner only as a trustee or bailee of the owner and has no title to it until all bills have been paid. Misuse of the money then makes the contractor an embezzler and liable under the criminal as well as the civil law.

In the matter of bonding a job, the exchange advises that three kinds of bonds may be written. They are described as follows: The statutory labor and material bond, which inures directly to the benefit of labor and material and affords specific protection; the faithful performance bond, which protects the owner, but not the subcontractor or material men; the indemnity bond, which protects only the lender of money for the improvement. Lack of proper understanding of the purpose of the bonds, it is said, has caused much confusion and considerable grief.

Dominguez Site Recommended for Airport

Purchase of the Dominguez tract on Avalon Boulevard at Riverside-Redondo Boulevard, for the site of the proposed municipal airport, was asked in resolutions adopted at the recent meeting of the southwest branch, Los Angeles Realty Board.

Investigation shows, board officials stated, that in the matter of price, area, location and general suitability, the Dominguez property is by far the best purchase from the standpoint of taxpayers for the city to make at this time.

Not the least important of these advantages, it is said, are its accessibility, both to Los Angeles and to the harbor, and the price, which is about half that demanded by interests owning the land favored in the majority report of the City Council committee. The minority report of that committee was declared by various members to be more favorable to the true interests of the people.

Real Estate and Building Law

[This department, which is conducted through the courtesy of the Legal Department of the W. Ross Campbell Company, is at the service of Times readers. Questions, however, should be addressed to the Publicity Department of the above-mentioned firm at its offices at 712 South Spring street and not to The Times.—Editor's note.]

Question: I purchased gas heaters and due to type and design, all my walls were damaged. The company selling has not offered to change them or pay for damage. What can I do?

Answer: If, in fact, the damage was caused by faulty design or construction of the heaters, and not by your negligent operation or placing of same, you may recover from the heater company upon their implied warranty of fitness.

Q.: "A" sells house to "B" and takes back trust deed for $4000. "A" borrows $2000 from "C" and assigns trust deed as collateral security. "B" defaults and "C" forecloses trust deed and bids in property at time of sale. "C" has never started action on "A's" note. Does "C" have good title or is he only holding property as trustee for "A"?

A.: Unless "C" has acquired title to the trust deed note executed by "B" to "A," by means of a sale of the same as pledged collateral, "C" only holds the property for benefit of "A," who by tender of the amount due "C" can compel conveyance to "A."

Q.: Wife and husband living apart, but not divorced. Mother of wife dies, leaving no will. Is husband entitled to any of property and would he have to sign any conveyances?

A.: The property acquired by the wife by gift, descent or devise, in this case from her mother by descent, is her separate property in which the husband has no interest. His signature to any conveyance is not necessary.

Q.: What form should title be taken on community property that will permit either husband or wife to mortgage their one-half interest?

A.: The property might be acquired as tenants in common, but in the absence of an agreement between the husband and wife, it is doubtful if the husband could mortgage his interest without the wife joining in same. The wife could place a mortgage on her interest without signature of the husband.

CREEK PROJECT SURVEYED

Buena Park, Fullerton and Los Angeles and Orange county officials have combined at a meeting during the week to survey the Coyote Creek with a view to uniform flood control, as a result of the floods a few months ago. The feasibility of dredging the creek and cementing the sides and bottom is considered.

CANNERIES' BY-PRODUCT $1,000,000

Fish Meal and Oil Bring Large Revenues to Eight Companies at Harbor

By-products valued at close to $1,000,000 were produced by the eight canneries operating in the San Pedro district during the sardine season which has just ended, according to figures compiled by Karl Stromsen, general superintendent of the Van Camp Sea Food Company, Inc.

These figures cover only the fish meal and oil derived from the spoiled fish and portions of the fish left over after cleaning, and take no account of the millions of dollars worth of sardines canned by the several firms. More than 60,000 tons were caught in the district during the season, said Stromsen.

According to the United States Fisheries investigation of the three types of dryers used in producing the fish meal, the steam jacket batch type is by far the most efficient. A great many of the dryers used in the Fish Harbor canneries are manufactured by the Standard Boiler and Steel Works of Los Angeles which, incidentally, is the only firm in the Southwest manufacturing this type of machinery.

Fish Harbor is now making preparations for the tuna season which is to begin in about three weeks.

26 YEARS OF RESPONSIBILITY BEHIND EACH SALE

INTRODUCING—Señor Avocado—the First Alcalde of Buena Vista Estates

WHERE EVERY MONTH IS JUNE

SENOR AVOCADO says, "We first came to Southern California in 1859. At first we did not feel at home here but since 1910 we have won a host of friends and have settled in the very few districts where soil and climate are to our liking.

"We are now on a well established basis and making money. Our production is heavy and of a high quality. Growing markets threaten our ability to supply increasing demands. Our products go to market the year around and we can put a new plant on a paying basis in four years."

"To me BUENA VISTA ESTATES, in Northern San Diego County, is the ideal location, perhaps the most favored in all California. It has a perfect semi-tropical climate, freedom from low winter temperatures, moderate sea breezes but no high winds."

"It is a delightful place to live, beautiful homesites, wonderful scenery, splendid soil, good paved highways, ample transportation, abundance of water under pressure in all steel pipes, nearby seashore for recreation and metropolitan cities close enough for convenient shopping."

"Our neighbors, the Vegetable Family and the Citrus Fruit Family are prosperous too, and even our old countryman, the Banana seems contented at Buena Vista Estates."

"Oh! you will like Buena Vista Estates, everybody is happy here. Why don't you come down and see us? You will be entertained pleasantly at our guest house and we will bring you here in private autos."

"If you decide to locate here, land prices are extremely reasonable, terms easy, 25% down, balance in ten years, and a deed goes with the first payment. See the motion pictures of my home in our Los Angeles office, shown any time by appointment."

"The man with five acres of four year old Avocados is a wealthy man."

Construction Program Leans to Residences

Hotel, Breakwter Projects Involve $1,650,000

Four Major Undertakings in Town Limelight

SANTA BARBARA, June 18. (Exclusive)—Santa Barbara is just ending a period of public building and is starting on home building and more than $3,000,000 in buildings now under construction, and with much more work to be started before the end of summer.

With the dumping this week of the first rock for the Santa Barbara breakwater, a project totaling $400,000 will be launched. Discounting all promises for new buildings, the best indication of what actually is being done is a summary of jobs now under construction. They are as follows:

Biltmore Hotel, 30 per cent complete, $1,250,000.

Courthouse, 50 per cent complete, $1,000,000.

Junior high school, 60 per cent complete, $400,000.

Harding school, 70 per cent complete, $150,000.

High school shops, 80 per cent complete, $50,000.

Administration building, State College, excavation complete, foundations started, $160,000.

Science building, State College, construction authorized, plans complete, $175,000.

Kress building, 50 per cent complete, $100,000.

Methodist church, 10 per cent complete, $154,000.

Logan & Bryan building, excavation started, $15,000.

Mannings, Inc., building, remodeling, started, $16,000.

HEALTHY CONDITIONS AHEAD

Realtors and builders look forward to the healthiest business and building conditions before the end of summer. Business is good, and building could not be much improved, but owing to the fact that misleading reports have been given out in Los Angeles regarding the condition of the highway north, the number of automobile parties has been reduced, with a corresponding reflection in business and building.

It is a generally accepted fact in Santa Barbara that a ready market for subdivision lots is not always the best barometer of the rate a town is growing, but the ready sale of lots in Santa Barbara is a sure indication of one thing—and that is the faith of a great majority of citizens in Santa Barbara real estate. Thousands of lots are being bought and paid for by wage-earners, most of them having no intention to build, but all of them confident that before the end of another summer Santa Barbara will astonish California by its growth.

To bring about ideal conditions Santa Barbara looks to four projects, now all assured, namely, opening of the wide boulevard between Los Angeles and Santa Barbara on September 1; construction of the breakwater and yacht anchorage; rebuilding of the East Cabrillo Boulevard on the water front, for which bonds already have been voted to the extent of $450,000, and the completion of the new Biltmore Hotel.

SMALL TOWNS THRIVE

In mentioning Santa Barbara city something should be said of the territory immediately surrounding the city, largely devoted to farming. Carpinteria is building a $15,000 addition to its school; Summerland has voted $17,000 for a modern school; Hope is spending $35,000 for the same purpose; Goleta is completing an $85,000 union elementary school building; Vista Del Mar (Gaviota) is spending $18,500 for a new building and many smaller districts are doing as well.

At the end of the present school-building campaign Santa Barbara county, out of fifty-six rural institutions, will have but one building that still stands in the class of the little red schoolhouse, and that soon will be razed for a modern structure if plans materialize.

CHAMBER'S NEW HOME

One of the buildings recently completed in Santa Barbara is the $150,000 home for the Chamber of Commerce, replacing a building destroyed in the earthquake. Most of the churches destroyed in the earthquake have been, or are being, rebuilt, with the exception of the old mission. Construction work has been dropped, with the towers not yet complete, because of lack of funds. The Catholic Church, Our Lady of Sorrows, has not been rebuilt, but it has constructed a large parochial school, the auditorium of which, for the time being, is answering the purpose of a school.

BUILDING IN HOLLYWOOD ON UPGRADE

Permits for First Two Weeks of June Total $1,500,000

Building permits granted in the Hollywood area during the first two weeks of June totaled nearly $1,500,000, according to statistics compiled by the Hollywood branch, Los Angeles Realty Board.

Of this amount $721,600 covered permits for apartment houses, among these being: permit to Guardian Holding Corporation for seven-story 187-room apartment at 5211 Hollywood Boulevard, $280,000; H. D. Garrison, four-story, eighty-two-room brick at 1516 North Hobart Boulevard, $100,000; Rudolph and Doris Polakoff, four-story, seventy-eight-room brick at 1516 North Normandie, $60,000; H. Webb Keedy, four-story, 162-room at 1031 North Serrano, $110,000; W. R. Adams, three-story, fifty-seven-room at 648 North Hobart Boulevard, $50,000. Permit was granted the Roman Catholic Bishop of Los Angeles for Church of the Blessed Sacrament at 6655 Sunset Boulevard, $256,000, and Chamberlain & Proctor have a permit for a two-story store and office building at 6632-38 Hollywood Boulevard, $55,000.

Two Theaters at Phoenix to Cost Million

PHOENIX, June 18. (Exclusive)—Two $500,000 theaters have been assured for Phoenix.

Work has been started on construction of the first, at Second avenue and Adams street, by Rickards & Nace. The ground was purchased mainly from the Phoenix Lodge of Elks, which now is planning extensive improvement of its theater and lodge building on West Washington street. The second new show building is to be at First and East Washington streets, to be erected by the West Coast Theaters, Inc.

CO.. RACT FOR WAREHOUSE

PHOENIX, June 18. (Exclusive)—Blake, Moffit & Towne, Los Angeles paper dealers, have awarded a contract for erection here of a Central Arizona warehouse and agency. The building will be at East Buchanan and South First streets, will be of reinforced concrete, with basement, and will cost $25,000.

COMPANY OBSERVES BIRTHDAY

Guaranty Concern Now Six Years of Age, With Record of Expansion

Special significance attached to the week just closed, in the eyes of the Guaranty Building and Loan Association staff, due to the fact that it marked the sixth anniversary of the founding of the organization in Hollywood.

Within that short period of six years the institution has grown from a small concern with total resources of $25,000 to nearly $4,500,000 at the present time. In an address to members of the firm yesterday, Gilbert H. Beesemyer, one of the founders of the association and its present secretary-manager, stated that the first little office was about twenty feet square and was located at 6405 Hollywood Boulevard, near Cahuenga. There were only four members on the staff at the time, but the place was so small that there was barely room to turn around. This office, he added, had since disappeared, the building which housed it having been converted into the new Santa Fe ticket offices.

By February 2, 1922, the firm had outgrown the quarters and moved across the street into offices now occupied by the Hollywood Citizen, Beesemyer stated. Plans were launched for a height-limit structure and the result was the present Guaranty Building. During the six years that have elapsed since its establishment, the Guaranty staff has grown from four to more than fifty trained personnel.

Directors Hear Addresses by Leading Brokers

Members of the board of directors of the California Real Estate Association met yesterday at the Biltmore in the last meeting of this summer. Harry B. Allen, president of the organization, was chairman of the session, at which many matters of importance relative to the association were taken up.

Among those who addressed the directors were: State Real Estate Commissioner Stephen Barnson; President Harry H. Culver of the Los Angeles Realty Board; Chairman H. P. D. Kingsbury of the educational council of the association; Louis J Pfau, Jr., vice-president of the San Francisco Real Estate Board; J. B. Clayton of San Jose, chairman of the farm lands division; W. H. Daum of Los Angeles, chairman of the industrial division; Frank C. Nye of Riverside, chairman of the presidents' division; G. D. Robertson, chairman of the salesmen's advisory committee; Guy M. Rush, chairman of the home-builders and subdividers division; Hazel M. Grant of Pasadena, chairman of the woman's conference at the Seattle convention; President W. H. Fitchmiller and Chairman Fred S. Wilson of the Santa Monica Realty Board State Convention Committee.

Coast Realty Concern Picks Division Head

Harry T. Hudson, for many years a sales executive in Southern California real estate, this week joined the Dana Point sales organization as division manager under John M. Lyle.

HARRY T. HUDSON

"In joining the Dana Point sales force," said Hudson, "I feel that I am becoming part of a great civic movement which is to create on the south coast between Laguna Beach and San Juan Capistrano a marvelous new city, answering the demand for a community which offers the recreational and sports advantages of the land and sea, combined with the delightful climate and environment for which the south coast is noted.

"We contemplate a sales force which will serve the entire Southland. There will be branch offices in every city of Southern California and several branches in Los Angeles and Hollywood. These sales offices will be established for the convenience of those who are interested in studying this property and getting investment information. We plan a sales force in excess of 500 members.

Salesmen Will Have Divisional Conference Meet

Steps toward a real estate salesman's program at the 1927 California real estate convention to be conducted in Santa Monica next October were taken at a recent meeting of the executive committee of the salesmen's division held here.

G. D. Robertson, chairman of the advisory committee, named a subcommittee to confer with a like body from the salesmen's division and frame a program for the convention. The subcommittee consists of M. C. H. Clinch, chairman; Howard Tackabury, Frank Baker, A. C. Hastings and Ed Lowe.

A letter from Stephen Barnson, State Real Estate Commissioner, was read at the meeting. Mr. Barnson stated that one of his proposals in regard to real estate salesmen in California was to seek an amendment to the real estate act in 1929 requiring every salesman who obtains a license to take an examination. The present act requires brokers to pass an examination before they can secure a license. The salesmen's examination is already required in one Eastern State where it has worked successfully for several years.

Manager Named to New Post of Vice-President

Murray Morgan, for the past several years general manager of the Harold G. Ferguson Corporation, has recently been elected to the newly created office of vice-president of that organization, according to announcement by that realty firm.

MURRAY MORGAN

Simultaneously with this announcement comes the news that the Ferguson Corporation has opened an office in Boston for the purpose of interesting eastern capital in Southern California real-estate investments. Maj. Walter G. Smith, who has had many years of experience in financial, real estate and investment fields, has been placed in charge of the eastern office, says Morgan.

The growth of the Harold G. Ferguson Corporation, which now conducts separate departments for subdivisions, general sales, leasing and syndicate investments, has made necessary the creation of several additional executive offices, of which the vice-presidency is the most important.

BROKERS' PROGRESS PRAISED

Barnson Points Out Civic Interest Taken by Realty Men

Realtors are taking the lead in everything that has to do with city and community building, according to Commissioner Stephen Barneson, who addressed the Hollywood branch, Los Angeles Realty Board, at a recent meeting.

"I feel we are now entering a new era of realty activity in California, and that more will be expected of real estate men five or ten years hence than today," the commissioner said. "A fine class of men who have completed real estate courses in the University of California or elsewhere, are now entering the profession, and I am urging every applicant for a broker's license to ally himself with a realty board in his home city."

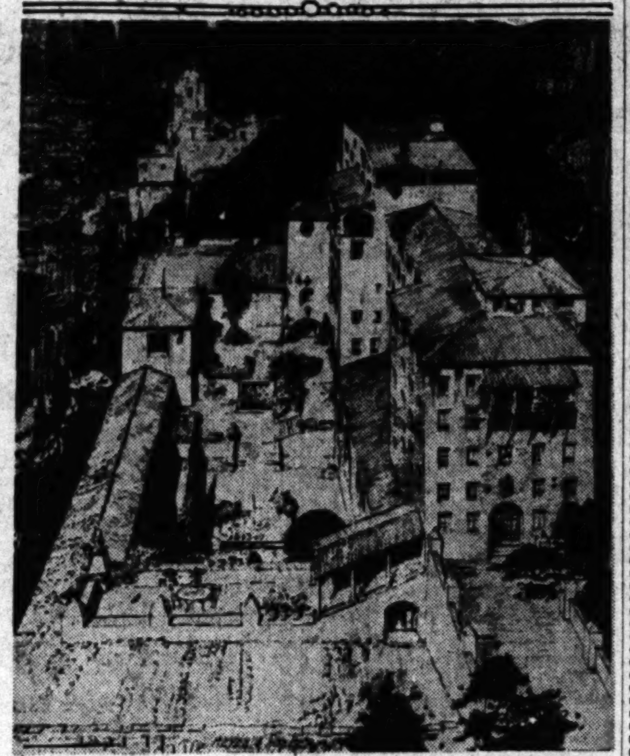
Commissioner Barnson spoke of the effort his department was making to raise the standard of the entire real estate business by divesting the licenses of those who prove unworthy. "For the protection of the earnest, high class real estate salesman," he said, "it would be well if salesmen, as well as brokers, were required to pass a reasonable examination as to their fitness to sell real estate. No distinction between a salesman or broker is made by the public," he explained, "they are both real estate men, but about 80 per cent of all the complaints that come to my department are against salesmen."

ELECTION ORDERED

An election to decide the question of a fire district has been ordered for the Moneta-Gardena neighborhood, by the Supervisors for the 21st inst.

CLUBHOUSE PLANS ANNOUNCED

Structure Will Cost More Than Million



For Franklin and Whitley Avenues

PLANS for a $1,250,000 clubhouse for La Morada del Arte, to be constructed at the southeast corner of Whitley and Franklin avenues, were announced today by L. E. Behymer, president of the organization.

Rising two to ten stories in height, the structure will occupy the entire space, which is 150x328 feet, it was stated. No date was set for launching of construction.

In addition to a theater of 800 capacity, the clubhouse will be equipped with dining-room and a grill room for luncheons and after-theater parties. The dining-room could be converted into a ballroom. A large lobby and lounge room will occupy the lower floor, with card rooms and gymnasium adjacent. With easy access to the main lounge and with elevator connections from sleeping quarters to the basement, a plunge will be built. A beauty parlor, roof garden, barber shop and Turkish bath are included in the plans also.

Industrialists Here to Attend Highways Meet

Nevada's highway celebration, opening in Reno on the 25th inst., will prove a mecca for many of Los Angeles' most prominent industrialists, according to advices reaching Martin Madsen, president of the Madsen Iron Works, of Huntington Park.

The Reno transcontinental highways exposition, organized with the active co-operation of California, Nevada, Ntah and Idaho, will commemorate completion of the last gaps in the Lincoln-Victory coast-to-coast highways, considered one of the most important events in the history of the West since the driving of the golden spike which riveted East and West with bands of steel.

The fair, occupying a site of 100 acres in Reno, will include five large exhibition palaces, State and county buildings and exhibits of practically all western industries and resources. It will be opened with ceremonies appropriate to the historic significance of the occasion, in which Federal representatives and the governors of neighboring States will participate.

CALIFORNIANS TO BE ACTIVE IN SESSION

Advices from Seattle indicate that several well-known members of the California Real Estate Association will participate in the program of the annual convention of the Pacific Northwest Real Estate Association to be held in Seattle, August 8 and 9, preceding the national convention, also scheduled for Seattle. Among the Californians selected to speak are Fred E. Reed, Oakland chairman of the City Planning Division of the California Real Estate Association, and Peter Hanson of Glendale and Pasadena, chairman of the State Association committee on uniform realty board appraisals.

DISTRICT'S NEW SCHOOL COMPLETED

Unit Costing $400,000 to Serve Brea-Olinda Area Beginning Next Fall

BREA, June 18. (Exclusive) — A worthy addition to the Orange county educational system is declared the new plant of the Brea-Olinda Union High School district just completed at a cost of $400,000, including the price of the property on which the institution stands. Work on the school has been in progress ten months.

There are three buildings in the school plant, the administrative building, the manual training building and the gymnasium. The site of the new school is on the paved highway connecting Brea with Olinda, which communities joined in the formation of the new union high school district.

The auditorium will seat 1106 persons and has been equipped with a motion-picture projection room and pipe organ loft. The auditorium stage is 91x30 feet. Ample room for dressing quarters and scenery storage purposes has been provided back of the big stage. On the second floor of the main building are the science department, the cooking and sewing rooms, the banking and commercial rooms and the lecture room, designed to seat sixty students, and equipped with motion-picture apparatus. The gymnasium has a floor space of 60x200 feet and is equipped with seats for 700 spectators.

When school opens in the fall an enrollment of about 200 students is expected. A teaching corps of sixteen has been employed. I. W. Barnett is the principal. A. H. Brown is president of the school board. Upper class students of this district have been attending the Fullerton Union High School, but in the fall they will enter their own school.

New Telephone Exchange Going in at Fontana

FONTANA, June 18.—Construction work was started this week on the new exchange of the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company at Perris and Nuevo avenues here, plans calling for completion of the building in time for the system to be put into operation during the late summer or early fall, District Manager G. G. Draper announced today.

The latest dial type of central office equipment will be installed. Initial plans provide for the serving of 340 subscribers, but adequate provision has been made for development during the next few years. A total investment of about $20,000 will be represented in the land, building and equipment. An additional $9400 is being spent for 10,000 feet of telephone cable, now being installed in preparation for the cutover to the new exchange.

The building will be of Spanish design, conforming to the architecture of other structures in the townsite. The site is on the north side of Perris avenue, 150 feet west of Nuevo avenue.

CITY ZONING LEGALITY ENFORCED BY COURT

The right of a municipality to enact zoning regulations for construction of buildings has been upheld by the Supreme Court of the United States in a decision handed down recently in the case of Hector M. Zahn and A. W. Ross vs. the Board of Public Works of the City of Los Angeles. The city had refused the plaintiffs permission to erect a building on a piece of property zoned as residential.

PAVING AWARDED

ESCONDIDO, June 18.—The City Trustees have awarded the contract to N. Blumenkrantz, Los Angeles, for the paving of Nutmeg street and Ohio avenue for $44,945, which was considerably under the estimate of City Engineer Freeman Witt. There were six other bidders for the work.

Chamber Committees Inspect Foundry

Pictures above show a trainload of Chamber of Commerce committee members and executive hosts who inspected the new $1,000,000 plant just completed by the Union Iron Works. The committee members were the guests of the foundry company as they had luncheon at the plant and viewed every detail of the iron works.

BAKERSFIELD IRON WORKS TO EXPAND

Hopper Machine Company Buys Plant From Oil Concern for $100,000

BAKERSFIELD, June 18. (Exclusive)—Plans for immediate expansion of the Bakersfield Iron Works and creation of a world market for foundry products manufactured here, were announced today by F. A. Hopper, owner of the Hopper Machine Works in the Kern River oil fields, who has purchased the Bakersfield Iron Works from the Associated Oil Company.

The Hopper Machine and Bakersfield Iron Works will be incorporated with an actual book value of $300,000, with $150,000 in stock covering both concerns, of which $50,000 has been placed on the market. Approximately 65 per cent of the market stock already has been purchased or received.

The field shop of the Pierce Petroleum lease in the Kern River oil fields will be maintained as a service shop for oil companies of the Kern River, West Front, Poso and Pround Mountain fields.

Immediately following confirmation of the sale by the New York office of the Associated Oil Company, the deal will be completed, and operations at the Bakersfield Iron Works, located at Twenty-fourth and M streets, will be accelerated. San Francisco officials of the Associated already have confirmed the sale. It is reported that the purchase price is approximately $100,000.

ICE-BOX MARKET WIDENED

Local Refrigerator Concern to Increase Plant Size to Meet Demands of Foreign Fields

Marking the entrance of another Los Angeles industrial concern into the export field, negotiations were closed yesterday by the Ward Refrigerator and Manufacturing Company, operating the largest exclusive refrigerator plant west of the Mississippi River, for the expansion of its trade to South America, New Zealand, Australia and the Hawaiian Islands.

Shipments will be started immediately to those countries and indications are that this will add considerable volume to the export trade passing through Los Angeles Harbor, according to Dwight A. Ward, official of the concern. Household, ice boxes, butcher refrigerators, cold-storage equipment and hotel refrigerators will be exported.

Business of the Ward company has been increasing steadily since its plant on South Alameda street at Sixty-fifth street was established fifteen years ago, Mr. Ward said yesterday. Particularly has this been the case in the past four years, since the company started the manufacture of ice boxes for the home, there having been a marked gain in that period in the use of ice here for the preservation of foods.

The Ward plant now covers six acres and represents a total investment of approximately $350,000. It consists of two buildings, one 100x300 feet and the other 46x310 feet. This latter structure was added on account of increased business only one year ago after the first building was erected. Plans are being formulated now for the construction of a $50,000 addition, 45x310 feet in size, to take care of the enlarged trade that is expected from foreign countries, according to Mr. Ward. It also is planned in the near future to enlarge the working force, which now includes more than 100 men, to approximately 500.

Brokers Buy Property at Beverly Hills

A deal involving property valued at $100,000 was consummated this week whereby George H. Prindle, Jr., and Clifton R. Bassell became the owners of the business block located at 1243-47 Wilshire Boulevard, Beverly Hills. It joins the corner of Canon Drive, which business artery is the first business street leading from Wilshire through the triangle to Santa Monica Boulevard.

Developments have already started to take place on Wilshire Boulevard and the fact that that boulevard with its roadway of eighty feet leading from the city to the sea, through high-class residential and business districts is declared destined to become the Fifth avenue of Los Angeles.

The building is of English architecture and so constructed that additional stories may be built. The structure now is occupied by Rickershauser-Miller Nash Agency, John R. L. Burton, broker, and Prindle-Bassell Company, brokers.

PROTESTS DENIED

Protests against the improvement of Atwater avenue between Fletcher Drive and Silver Lake Boulevard have been denied by the City Council. The City Clerk was instructed to withhold final presentation of the ordinance for further advice. The ordinance was referred to the Public Works Committee.

Superstructure Work to Start for Beach Club

With the setting of the concrete pilings for the base of the main structure of the Gables Beach Club officials of Trewhitt-Shields, construction managers, have started work on the superstructure of the building.

One of the first features to be finished will be the garage, with a housing capacity of several hundred machines. This, it is pointed out, will greatly relieve the heavy traffic conditions which prevail at the beach.

Another feature just completed is the water slide, starting from the life guards' tower and extending into the water. The slide is copper lined. Preliminary preparations also have been completed by the city of Santa Monica for the condemning and improvement of the beach highway. This thoroughfare, when completed, will furnish a wide, finely paved approach to the Gables, offering additional parking place.

LONG BEACH BOARD IN NATIONAL CONTEST

The Long Beach Realty Board has entered the national appraising contest to be held in connection with the national convention in Seattle August 10 to 13, according to announcement made by Chairman T. F. Merrick, who has sent for data on the building that is to be selected and the board's committee will determine its value and submit the result to some of the delegates attending.

INDUSTRIAL UNIT FOR HOLLYWOOD

Plumbing Supply House Under Way on Highland

Plant of Crane Company Will Cost $150,000

Two-Story Building for New Factory Tract

With the building already under construction and scheduled to be completed within ninety days, the Crane Company, manufacturers and jobbers in plumbing supplies and fixtures, has made arrangements for occupying a two-story structure at Highland and Romaine avenues at an expenditure of $150,000.

The plumbing concern's new home will be located directly opposite the height-limit Hollywood Storage Company building in the newly opened Hollywood industrial tract. Negotiations for establishment of the branch were handled by E. C. Woodward of the W. I. Hollingsworth & Co. The Crane Company, it is declared, has units in many principal cities of the country, with headquarters in Chicago. The concern has been located here many years, at present having a unit at Third and San Pedro streets.

The property selected has a frontage of 156 feet on the east side of Highland avenue and 145 feet on the south side of Romaine avenue. The building, designed by Howard H. Wells, is to be full two stories high, having a frontage of 140 feet on Highland avenue, by a depth of 100 feet on Romaine avenue. The balance of the property will be used as a yard and private driveway, all of which will be heavily concreted.

The exterior of the building will be of tapestry brick, while the interior will be equipped with the latest devices for the handling of Crane Company products. It is expected the building will be completed in ninety days, according to an official of the La Brea Securities Company, builders.

Industrial Hollywood, the name of the new tract, is bounded by Highland avenue on the east, La Brea avenue on the west, Romaine avenue on the north and Willoughby street on the south, and forms what is said to be the last remaining tract of land in Hollywood to be zoned to this class of building.

EAST SIDE PROGRESS OUTLINED

Construction of Two Large Factories Will Start Soon

Stabilization of property values on Los Angeles' fast-expanding East Side is now an assured fact as a result of recent industrial developments. Construction work on the new $4,000,000 western plant of B. F. Goodrich Tire and Rubber Company, on the recently purchased forty-five-acre site adjoining Montebello Park, will begin before July 15. Preliminary work on the erection of the new $500,000 P. & M. Department Store, to be erected at the corner of Whittier Boulevard and Concourse, Montebello Park, will start Monday.

J. B. RANSOM.

These were the East Side announcements made last night at a dinner and reception tendered J. B. Ransom, president of the J. B. Ransom Corporation, by executives, sales and branch managers of the organization, on the occasion of Mr. Ransom's return to Los Angeles from a combined business and pleasure trip to the Hawaiian Islands. The event was held in the banquet hall of the Central Manufacturing District Club.

The speakers were O. Nicholas Gabriel, associated with Ransom in the development of Montebello Park, Bandini and the Montebello Park Country Club and golf course; H. H. Townsend, general manager of the Ransom Corporation's East Side properties; Charles M. Hamilton, sales manager, and C. E. Gillett, Bandini division manager.

SPEAKER FOR SESSION

Harry B. Allen, San Francisco, president of the California Real Estate Association, will be one of the speakers at the California Land Title Association convention to be held at Lake Tahoe, the 23rd to 25th inst., according to announcement made on the program this week.

AWARDS EXCEL LAST YEAR

BY DON PARTRIDGE,
Associate Editor, "Iron Trade Review"

Iron Trade Review in summarizing the condition of the Pacific Coast iron and steel markets this week, will say: "Demand was not heavy this week and few large awards were noted. Despite the fact that many projects are being figured and much new work is on the boards, lettings have fallen off during the last few weeks. Prices, on the other hand, are holding firm to the prevailing levels. Awards for the first half of this year, as regards concrete bars, plates, shapes and cast iron pipe, are considerably in excess of the booking for the first half of 1926.

"Demand for reinforcing bars has fallen off and for the first time this year no awards of over 100 tons were reported. Awards this year to date aggregate 23,801 tons, compared with 15,046 tons for the corresponding period last year. Pending business calls for over 10,000 tons, new inquiries including 2500 tons for the Coolidge Dam in Arizona.

"Awards of plate material totaled 700 tons, bringing the aggregate for the year to 46,871 tons compared with 44,915 tons for the same period in 1926. Outstanding among the awards of the week were 537 tons for a thirty-inch pipe-line and 191 tons for an eighteen-inch pipeline for Spokane, booked by the Steel Tank & Pipe Company and the Beall Tank and Pipe Company respectively. Bids were opened this week on a 500-ton pipe-line for Grass Valley, on which the Steel Tank and Pipe Company were low bidders. Pending business exceeds 10,000 tons. Prices are firm at $2.35 c.i.f.

"More structural shape awards were placed this week than was the case last week, the total being in excess of 1500 tons, bringing the aggregate for the year to 76,864 tons compared with 65,205 tons for the corresponding period last year. Among the larger lots placed were 800 tons for the Kress Building in Portland, secured by Poole and McGonigle. Considerable new work is being figured on but contracts are slow in coming forth. Pending business calls for over 10,000 tons. New inquiries include 800 tons of sheet piling for a dam at Lovelock, Nev. Prices are strong at $2.35 c.i.f.

"Demand for cast iron pipe has fallen off somewhat during the past few weeks, awards totaling 950 tons this week, bringing the aggregate for the year to 46,869 tons, compared with 33,869 tons for the same period in 1926. The largest award called for 431 tons for Harvard-avenue improvement in Seattle and was secured by J. L. Smith. Pending business exceeds 4800 tons, new inquiries including 880 tons for San Diego."

TRUCK BUILDING WILL RISE HERE

Albertson Motor Company to Construct Block

Structure to be Placed in Commercial Area

History of Site Told in Old Title Abstract

Construction will begin this week on a one-story structure covering the entire block on the north side of Seventh street between Crocker and Towne. The site, with 220 feet frontage on Seventh street by 155 feet deep, has been purchased by the Albertson Motor Company, dealers here for Dodge Brothers' cars and Graham Brothers' trucks. The new building, involving an outlay approximating $275,000 without equipment, will be used exclusively as a sales and service headquarters for Graham Brothers' trucks.

According to F. S. Albertson of the Albertson Motor Company, this is the first exclusively Graham Brothers' truck sales and service building in the United States. In other cities, truck salesrooms have been connected with Dodge Brothers' car-selling headquarters. The structure has been designed by Harry L. Pierce. It will be ready for use by fall of the current year.

The truck department of the local company is in charge of James Canavan. Mr. Canavan pointed out yesterday that the growing demand for trucks necessitated the new structure, and that it was being built in a section of the city easily accessible to the large commercial enterprises of Los Angeles.

The property was purchased through S. G. Ries of the J. W. Lewis Company, realty brokers, from the Sabichi Estate. An abstract of title turned over to the motor company shows that the land has an interesting history. It originally was part of a larger tract granted to Francisco and Nepomuceno Alvarado in 1836, and later abandoned by them as worthless.

It was then granted to Isaac Julian Williams in 1839. Williams later sold the land to Bruno Avila for a band of brood mares. The property later came into the hands of Madelaina Sabichi.

TAMPICO WILL BE ADVERTISED

Port City to Air Advantages to All World

Move Induced by Progress Shown in "Times"

Importers and Exporters to be Attracted

BY LEE R. SHIPPEY
"Times" Staff Correspondent

TAMPICO (Mex.) June 18. (Exclusive)—The business men of Mexico are wide awake to the value of advertising. The Camara Nacional de Commercio, or Mexican Chamber of Commerce of this city, is backing a plan to advertise Tampico throughout Mexico, especially in Mexico City and other big distribution centers, as "Mexico's leading seaport," calling attention to the facilities and advantages offered both importers and exporters.

Heretofore all efforts to advertise the port have been left to those in lines directly affected, such as steamship agents, forwarding agents and ship chandlers. For years Fred V. Burns, an American forwarding agent, has been making annual trips to all the mining and commercial centers of Mexico and every time he got an important importer or exporter interested in Tampico has ordered the weekly Tampico Tribune sent to that "prospect" as a weekly reminder. As the Tribune makes shipping news and oil news its chief features, many American and English mining men have been interested by Burns and other forwarding agents. Never before, however, have business men even thought of digging into their own pockets to raise funds to advertise the steadily improving port facilities. The idea of community advertising is brand-new here.

But progressive Mexico—or, maybe, filmstruck Mexico—has been reading The Los Angeles Times. The things which have impressed Mexican journalists most are the full-page advertisements for Santa Monica, Long Beach, San Diego and other Southern California communities which, largely through the power of advertising, are becoming known not only nationally but internationally. And so when the editor of El Mundo proposed that Tampico's business men go in for community advertising the plan went through unanimously.

In addition to oil exports, 370 carloads of export freight arrived in Tampico from the interior last week, of which 321 carloads were ore. Zinc ores led with 215 cars, followed by 108 cars of lead bars, including silver; 14 cars of ixtle fiber, 13 cars of cottonseed cake, 8 cars of cotton, 8 cars of copper, 3 cars of henequen fiber and 2 cars of crude rubber. About 1,500,000 barrels of oil also were exported.

It is noticeable that agriculture ranks far below mining as a source of exports. It is true that most agriculture exports go to the United States, through border gateways; but even at them mine products far outrank farm products. The only reason for that, the Tampico business men believe, is that mining is organized commercially while most of the farming of Mexico still is unorganized and planned only to meet the needs of home uses and local markets. One of the aims of Tampico's new advertising campaign will be to encourage co-operative marketing and farming with a view to the export trade.

PICNICKERS PICK ON SALE SIGNS

Wooden Ones Used as Kindling Metal Posters go as Frying Pans at Newport

NEWPORT BEACH, June 18. (Exclusive)—Real estate dealers here are confronted with a unique problem. They want to know what to do to save their "for sale" signs.

Signs placed on property along the ocean front, and almost all lots here are either on the ocean front or close to the ocean, as the town is only about three blocks wide, disappear.

Campers on the beach break up the wooden signs for firewood. Real estate dealers have tried metal signs, but they also disappear. The real estate men say the campers on the beach use the metal signs to barbecue steaks. A city ordinance setting a fine of $25 for destroying the signs, is being considered.

SEVERAL COMPANIES CHANGE QUARTERS

Several local firms have obtained new locations during the last week, according to an announcement by S. G. Ries of the J. W. Lewis Company, wholesale and manufacturing property brokers. The E. L. Hoffman Company, druggists, has taken a long-term lease on the second floor of the building at 243 South Los Angeles street. Negotiations were also handled by Ries on the building at 1223 South San Pedro street owned by Mrs. Kate Van Nuys Page, which was leased to H. C. Curtis & Co., wholesalers of poultry, eggs and grocery specialties.

NEW STORM DRAIN MAY BE RUSHED

Plans for Construction of Alhambra Project Now Being Prepared

ALHAMBRA, June 18. (Exclusive) Plans for the construction of a permanent storm drain in San Pasqual Wash from Alhambra Road to Mission Road are being prepared by the city engineering department acting upon instructions from the City Commission. If the project is carried out the improvement will be one of the most important to be undertaken here in some time.

The San Pasqual Wash extends north and south through a residential section of the city and during the rainy season a large volume of water is carried down through Alhambra from Pasadena and other territory to the north causing, at times, a serious menace to adjacent property. The drain has been a matter of discussion for several years.

City officials intend to rush plans for the work so that it may be started early this fall. Interested property owners will be given an opportunity to approve or protest the work wrich would be paid for on a district assessment basis.

It is planned to build an arched cement concrete drain which will completely cover the wash in the district affected.

Although offers are flowing in on Lindbergh thick and fast, this is the first of its kind to come from Los Angeles.

MERCURY ATHLETES LEAVE

Maxwell, Carter and Lunney Among Those on Their Way to National A. A. U. Track Meet at Lincoln

Six athletes of the Los Angeles Athletic Club, accompanied by their trainer, Pete Poole, departed today in the van of the rest of the Mercury team, headed for Lincoln, Neb., where they will compete in the National A.A.U. track-and-field championships, July 2, 4 and 5. The athletes are Nick Carter, Lunney and Breeding, milers; Tom Humphries, six-mile runner; Bob Maxwell, star hurdler of the L.A.A.C., and Levi Casey, the Mercury Club's American hop, step and jump champion.

BOB MAXWELL

Coach Boyd Comstock sent the men ahead of the rest of the team to let them become acclimated and to permit them to become more familiar with the track in Lincoln. Of these six athletes, it is hoped that they will return with five titles, senior and junior mile, junior six-mile, senior low hurdle and hop, step and jump. The rest of the L.A.A.C. squad will leave a week from today.

Hydromel was not the favorite. Whitney's Whiskery carried that honor.

The winner, rated as probably the best 3-year-old in the West, was bred and owned by former Senator Johnson N. Camden of Versailles, Ky.,

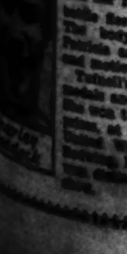
SPEEDSTER TWICE AS AST AS CHARLEY PADDOCK



[illegible] MONICA, June 18. (Exclusive)—"Patricia," the prized [illegible] belonging to Thomas J. Tufnell of 2239 Bundy Drive, is [illegible] as speedy as Charles Paddock, the movie star and playwright often alluded to by sports scribes as the "world's swiftest human."

The fleet canine proved this recently over a 100-yard course, when she galloped the distance in 11s. When Patricia is all wound up in action her features are no more discernible than a battle fleet sneaking up behind a smoke screen. The body and flying feet of the speeding Patricia are lost in one great whirlpool of dust and motion.

Tufnell's gem of the racing track has more medals and insignias than Col. Charlie Lindbergh. She won twenty-seven ribbons, including two first prizes, at the recent dog show sponsored by the United West Coast Kennel Club at Southgate. Nonscouting Grid Elevens Gain Support

PRINCETON (N. J.) June 18. (AP)—The crusade to eliminate scouting in eastern college grid circles, sponsored last fall by Princeton and Yale universities, gained new impetus today with the announcement that their pact had been renewed for another year and four other elevens on the Tiger schedule had joined the nonscouting movement.

'Tad' Jones

Dean Henry B. Fine, acting chairman of the Princeton board of athletic control, in disclosing extension of the agreement to Amherst, Lehigh, Washington and Lee, and William and Mary, said the proposal had been submitted to all elevens meeting the Tigers this fall. Although four responded favorably, Cornell asked that the matter be held in abeyance and Ohio State did not reply.

The Ohio eleven probably felt that the agreement would handicap the Buckeyes in their intersectional struggle with the Tigers next fall, it was thought at Princeton. While Coach Bob Roper, coauthor of the scoutless principle along with Tad Jones of Yale, saw Ohio State in action last fall, coaches of the midwestern university have had no opportunity to observe Princeton tactics for several years.

The Yale-Princeton agreement, barring coaches or trained observers from preliminary games for the purpose of learning the opponent's style of play, raised a storm of controversy among coaches and critics when first announced. Several smaller New England institutions adopted the same principle.

DUKE KAHANAMOKU EXPLAINS TECHNIQUE OF SUCCESSFULLY RIDING SKIDDING SURF BOARD

BY DUKE P. KAHANAMOKU

(Note: Duke Kahanamoku, long recognized as one of the world's greatest swimmers and now a motiin-picture actor for Paramount, is considered one of the foremost exponents of the surfboard in the world. Not only did he do much to introduce the sport in this country but he is also the originator of practically all surf-board stunt riding. But a few years ago he was instrumental in saving the lives of eight men with his surfboard when the boat in which they were riding capsized in the Balboa Channel, Newport Bay. In the following article he explains the fundamentals of the art of surf riding that the most inexperienced amateur may become an expert.)

Riding a giant breaker at express train speed is perhaps the most invigorating and thrilling sport in the world. It combines thrills with endurance, skill with strength. I know of no other pastime which supplies such a variety of sensations nor which assists more in promoting sound health, cast-iron muscles and perfect mind coordination.

Let us take for granted that you've never ridden a surf-board in your life. That will give me some definite object at which to shoot and I will be certain not to overlook anything.

A surf-board is a flat plank, ten or twelve or fourteen feet long planed that it comes to a point at one end. Good seasoned redwood is the best material. It is neither too light nor too heavy and is slow to absorb water.

The length of the board depends largely upon one's own weight and preference. The one I am using is twelve feet long. I consider this the correct size for a man of my build—204 pounds. The thickness of the board should be about three inches and the width about two feet. The back part of the board, the corners, should be slightly rounded to avoid harp edges.

Before being put into the water, it is imperative that it be given at least four coats of Valspar or some other reliable water-proof varnish. I do not consider hollow surf-boards practical although many prefer them to the solid wooden ones.

With the board made—or purchased as the case may be—we are ready for our first lesson. The manner of carrying the board is largely a matter of personal preference. When out of the water I prefer to carry it with the center of the board resting in the crotch of my left arm and the hand steadying it at the top.

Arriving at the water's edge, hold the board upright in front of you—just off the ground—with one hand

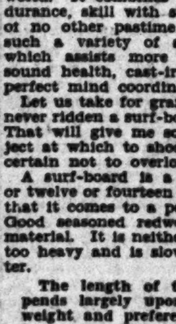
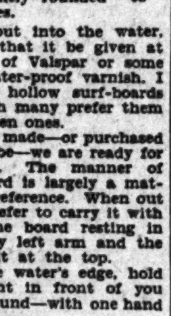
WHITE DEVELOPER OF GREAT BASEBALL TEAMS AT L. A. HIGH

BY BRAVEN DYER

It has been chirped about for some years that "You can't beat L. A. High" and in looking over the record of the Romans in baseball this ditty appears highly significant. Under the expert coaching of Herbert White the Wilshire district institution has turned out some surprising teams during the past seven years. Perhaps the most astonishing single achievement connected with the feats of these Romans is the establishment of a winning streak of twenty straight games.



HERBERT WHITE.



LOUIE ALMADA

Back in 1924 White's charges got bumped off near the close of the season. Beginning with 1925 and continuing on through 1926 and the present season the Romans have maintained an unblemished escutcheon, at the same time chalking up twenty consecutive wins. And what's more the boys maintain that they'll increase it to thirty next year for this season was supposed to be the lean year at L. A. High.

Winning streaks of such magnitude are as rare as blond Pullman

BORAH SHOWS GREATEST SPEED EVER IN ARIZONA

PHOENIX (Ariz.) June 18. Borah was surprised to find that a fast track had been prepared for him inside the inclosure of the baseball park and was also surprised to find in Eddie Baker of Phoenix Junior College, and Bert Goodrich of Tempe State Teachers' College, two opponents worthy of competing against the greatest sprinter in America.

ST. LOUIS, June 18. (AP)—The Cardinals raised their world championship flag this afternoon with Col. Lindbergh looking on and then celebrated the day further by defeating the Giants in the third game of the series by 6 to 4.

Rules Moguls Ruin Football Rockne Claim

DALLAS (Tex.) June 18. (AP)—The national football rules committee is attempting to change football from a "he-man's" game to a silk-stocking contest, Knute Rockne, famous Notre Dame coach, said here last night.

KNUTE ROCKNE

The charge was made at a banquet given by the athletic committee of the Dallas Chamber of Commerce in honor of Mr. Rockne and Dr. Walter Meanwell, University of Wisconsin basketball coach, who are conducting a summer school for coaches at Southern Methodist University here.

Mr. Rockne said the rules committee is dominated by eastern football representatives and scored the recent ruling on various plays.

"If football is left in the hands of this committee, which seemingly is attempting to turn the game into an imitation of Canadian rugby, where they have no blocking and tackling, it will be but a few years until the effete East will be in full control of the changed game," said Rockne.

Four members of the committee, a distinct minority, are the only representatives of the Middle West, Far West and Southwest, Rockne said.

GUS WILSON LOOKING FOR CAMP FOR DEMPSEY

CHICAGO, June 18. (AP)—Gus Wilson, advance guard for Jack Dempsey, left here today for New York to pick out a training camp where the former champion will condition for his match with Jack Sharkey, July 21.

Wilson said Dempsey favors Saratoga Springs, but one or two other spots are under consideration.

The former titleholder will be in camp within a week, Wilson said.

BASEBALL FEUD CULMINATES IN FIST FIGHT AT PITTSBURGH

PITTSBURGH, June 18. (AP)—A baseball feud of long standing between Dave Bancroft, manager of the Boston Nationals, and Earl Smith, Pittsburgh catcher, flared to white heat at Forbes Field today when the husky Pirate backstop sent his fist crashing into Banny's jow. Bancroft was knocked out by the blow. Three stitches were required to close the cut in his face.

Baseball experts said Bancroft and Smith had been at odds dating back to the days when the scrappy catcher was with the Braves. In the seventh inning of today's game between the Pirates and Boston, Bancroft came to bat and was given a walk. As he strolled to first Bancroft halted and said something to Smith, who retorted. Later Banny scored. As he crossed the plate he halted and spoke to Umpire McCormick. It was the general belief that he complained

LEFTY PETERS UPSETS SEALS

Averill Opens Tussle With Drive Into Bleachers

Seraph Hurler Twirls Shut Out Ball After That

Cherubs Land on Mails for Four Runs in Third

BY BOB RAY

Wilbur Peters, the youthful southpaw whom the Angels picked up after Red Killefer had given him the air, gave the Angels a 3-to-2 bulge on the series by hurling them to a 4-to-1 triumph in yesterday's shindy at Wrigley Field.

MARTY KRUG

Earl Averill, the Seals' home-run smashing centerfielder and lead-off man, slammed one of Lefty's slants into the right-field stands to open the contest, but after that Peters took charge of the situation and Nick Williams's outfit never succeeded in getting a man past second base. The Seals got six hits in all off Lefty, but they were as scattered as the remains of the guy who lit a match to see how much gas was in the tank, so consequently they didn't do the San Francisco cause much good.

Arrayed against Mr. Peters on the mound was the Great Mails, the celebrated southpaw who makes the stands sound like a flock of a certain type of clock striking twelve. Mails suffered one bad inning, the third, and that caused his downfall. In this round the Angels bunched three doubles, an infield hit and a couple of walks for all four of their runs. Mails retired for a pinch-hitter in the eighth so Dick Turpin pitched against the Angels in their last time at bat. The Angels filled the sacks at Turpin's expense, but were unable to shove over a run.

HEMINGWAY HITS 'EM

Ed Hemingway kept up his heavy stickwork, banging out two doubles and a single to lead the Angel attack. In the five games against the Seals this week Hemingway has clicked out a total of fourteen hits, which is quite some considerable swatting and will do no harm to the batting average of the Seraphs' combination first-sacker and insurance salesman.

After Averill hit his home run in the first inning, the Seals had but one chance to score off the Seraph southpaw and that opportunity presented itself in the fifth, which Dittmar started with a double. However, the Seals heeded not Opportunity's knock, in fact, they even went so far as to knock right back, knocking the celebrated one-rap individual clear out of knocking distance. After Dittmar had doubled, Mishkin hit to Peters and Dittmar was caught between second and third. At this instance Dittmar made the mistake of thinking, so common among ball players, and his thought was that it would be a good idea if he could keep the Angels chasing him until Mishkin had made his way to second. Anyhow, Mishkin listened to Dittmar's pleas for him to take second and Solly was put out there, Peters to Jacobs. In the meantime Dittmar was still between second and third and was doubled at the far corner, Jacobs to Brazill.

Mails found himself in difficulty in the Angel second, but a

FANS MAKE HELEN WILLS AND TILDEN WIMBLEDON FAVORITES

HELEN WILLS.

WIMBLEDON, June 18. (AP)—Helen Wills and William T. Tilden are the popular choices to win the singles championships in their respective events at the Wimbledon tournament which begins Monday.

Tennis fans, reversing the verdict of the special seeding committee which placed Rene LaCoste, French ace, ahead of Tilden in their ranking have installed "Big Bill" as favorite. Jean Borotra and Henri Cochet, French players, also are being warmly supported, with Borotra favored above Cochet.

In the women's singles, Mrs. Kitty McKane Godfree is second choice to Miss Wills with Senorita De Alverez of Spain the third choice. Miss Kea Bouman of Holland, Mrs. Molla Mallory and Miss Elizabeth Ryan rank next.

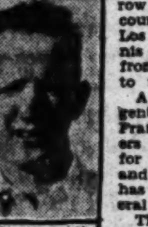
San Francisco Sends Strong Array of Talent

Leading Court Stars Entered in Titular Event

First of Three Tournaments Attracts Leaders

With one of the biggest lists of entries in the history of the club, the Southern California championship tournament will open tomorrow on the courts of the Los Angeles Tennis Club, to run from the 20th to the 26th.



BILL JOHNSTON

A big contingent of San Francisco players is in town for the matches and San Diego has sent up several teams.

The tournament is the first of three tournament events to be staged on the courts of the Los Angeles Tennis Club between the 20th inst., and October 9. Immediately following the Southern California championship event will come the Pacific Coast doubles tournament from July 1 to the 4th and this will be followed by the third and largest tournament from October 3 to the 9th, for the Pacific-Southwest championship.

President Cliff Herd of the club believes the Southern California championship matches which open Monday will bring out some of the best playing of the season. The event includes men's singles, women's singles, men's doubles and mixed doubles.

Entries for the men's singles include T. C. Bundy, Paul Greene, E. D. Berry, E. A. Warren, Ralph Sindorf, H. L. Godshall, Perry T. Jones, Paul Hardeman, R. Rivierre, James K. Buscher, Robert Muench. The following are entered in the women's singles: May Bundy, Doris Doeg, Violet Doeg, Gladys L. Patz, Marion Williams, Louise McFarland, Josephine Cruickshank. For the men's doubles, C. B. Herd will be paired with Tom Bundy, E. A. Warren with Ralph Sindorf, A. A. Bennett with Jack Phillips, E. D. Berry with Paul Hardeman. In the mixed doubles, Herd will play with May Bundy, James Buscher with Louise McFarland and Marion Williams with a partner still to be selected.

A strong invasion is expected from San Francisco for this tournament headed by Gerald Stratford, runner-up to Little Bill Johnston in the Pacific Coast singles championship. Alan Herrington of Stanford University is expected down for the tournament as well as Ray Casey and Neil Brown, and San Diego is expected to send Dolf Meuhleisen, Bob Muench and Alan Blade.

Work is now progressing rapidly on the seven new courts being constructed at the Los Angeles Tennis Club, which with the ten already in use will give the organization a total of seventeen cement courts, giving the club the largest cement tennis court plant in the country, including the club swimming pool, 75x30 feet, with a 105,000-gallon capacity.

MERCURY TRACK MEN GO EAST

teams ever to come out of the West will represent the Los Angeles Athletic Club in the relay races held during the national meet.

The Mercury organization is out after relay records as well as the junior championship. Coach Boyd Comstock is centering his attention on these two in preference to the senior track championship.

The Mercury club will enter teams in four of the five relay races. Comstock figures that he has three teams that have great chances to set new world records. These teams are the 440-yard, 880-yard and four-mile relays.

The four-man mile team will be another one that will be hard to beat, but it is doubtful whether or not they will be able to set a new mark for that race.

However, the Mercury stars have great chances to lower the 440-yard and 880-yard records. Comstock has a great assortment of sprinters to select from in these races. Charley Paddock, Murray Schultz, Frank Wykoff and Slocum, the Glendale stars; Keith Lloyd and the two Darling boys, Bert of U.S.C. frosh and Dick, Caltech sprint star.

All of these men are good relay artists and Comstock has been drill-Schultz and Wykoff should be able ing them on baton-passing. Paddock, to negotiate the 110 yards in an average of 10.2s., and that would leave it for Keith Lloyd to run the distance in better than 11s. flat to set a new record. The old record is held jointly by U.S.C. and Newark A.C. of 41.6s. The L.A.A.C. quartet looms as an outfit that can clip considerable time off that record

Paddock and Schultz will also run in the 880 relay with the two Darling boys running the other legs of the race. This aggregation has a good chance to lower the new record for the half-mile relay, which is 1m. 26.4s., set recently by the U.S.C. relay team.

The four-man four-mile relay will depend on the other two lads who run with Nick Carter and Hank Lunney, the great milers of the Mercury. Harold Breeding, the sensational Santa Ana miler, will be one of the lads, with Cummings, another L.A.A.C. miler, as the other. In order to set a new record for this event, Lunney and Carter will have to run 4m. 16s. miles, while the other two lads can not run their laps in less than 4m. 25s. The old record of 17m. 21.4s. was set by a great collection of milers in Ray Buker, Ray Watson, E. Krogh and Joie Ray, for the I.A.C.

Carter and Lunney are both capable of doing 4m. 16s., or better. They proved this in their race with Edvin Wide last month, while Breeding has not done much better than 4m. 29s., it is not unlikely that Comstock will get the lad to running in around 4m. 25s. and then it will be up to Lunney and Carter to lower their time to set a new record. Cummings has not been in action since the A.A.U. relays here early this season. He went east, but is in good shape now and he can run the mile in better than 4m. 28s.

VETERANS ENTER SOUTHERN NET CHAMPIONSHIP

Here are Ralph Sindorf (top.) and Tom Bundy, who are two of the home guard vets expected to aid materially in repelling the invasion of the net stars from San Francisco and environs. Bundy, with Maury McLoughlin, was once three-time national doubles champion. Play in the local tourney opens on the courts of the Los Angeles Tennis Club tomorrow.

Hudkins May Tackle Baker in Ring Again

NEW YORK, June 18. (Exclusive) Unless they demand more money than Promoter Humbert J. Fugazy figures they are capable of drawing at the gate, Ace Hudkins of Omaha and Sergt. Sammy Baker of Mitchel Field, aviators' helper, will meet in a return bout of ten rounds at Ebbetts Field, Brooklyn, about three weeks hence. Fugazy had a conference with the managers of both fighters today, but no contracts were signed. It is expected this will be attended to Monday.

Hudkins and Baker put on a sensational fight a few nights ago at the Polo Grounds. Sammy won on a technical knockout when the fight was stopped in the seventh round because the Nebraskan was severely handicapped by a gash under the right eye.

TILDEN AND HUNTER MAKE CLEAN SWEEP

MANCHESTER (Eng.) June 18. (AP) William T. Tilden and Francis T. Hunter, Americans, made a clean sweep of their intercountry tennis tournament against English stars, by taking the two final singles matches today.

Tilden defeated Edward Higgs in straight sets at 6-4, 6-3, 6-2; while Hunter vanquished D. M. Greig at 6-1, 7-5, 6-8, 6-6. On Thursday, the opening day, Hunter defeated Higgs and Tilden beat Greig. Yesterday the Americans took the doubles from G. R. O. Crole-Rees and C. G. Eames in straight sets.

Tilden again appeared in superb form today and Higgs was powerless before his attacks. Both Americans are returning to London tomorrow in preparation for the Wimbledon championships, which open Monday.

WILLIAMS WINS OVER SPANIARD

Davis Cup Captain Downs Alonso to Retain Eastern States Singles Title

HAVERFORD (Pa.) June 18.—Richard Norris Williams, former American Davis Cup captain, captured the Pennsylvania and Eastern States men's singles championship here this afternoon, when he administered Manuel Alonso, Spanish Cup ace, a decisive defeat by scores of 6-3, 6-3, 8-10, 6-2.

Williams made short work of his rival in the first two sets, winning easily, with severe back-hand and forehand vollies and deep-court drives. With the score well in his favor in the third set Williams fell down in his accuracy and allowed the count to be tied at 5-5, after he held a three-game lead. At point match an easy volley just missed the back line and later gave Alonso the third set at 10-8.

The Spaniard fought a game uphill fight at this interval. After a short rest, America's cup leader came back to make short work of Alonso, 6-2.

Miss Milly Thayer captured the women's title by trimming Mrs. Huff, 6-1, 6-3. The win gave Miss Thayer permanent possession of the Pennsylvania Challenge trophy, her victories in 1920 and 1924 making three wins.

Miss Isabella Munford and Miss Ann Townsend waltzed off the courts easy victors over Mrs. Thompson and Mrs. Smith, 6-2, 6-1, incidentally winning the women's doubles throne. The men's doubles title fell in the hands of Wallace Johnson and Fred Mercur, who defeated Norris Williams and Teizo Toba, the Japanese cup star, 6-8, 6-2, 3-6, 6-4, 8-6. The match was a hectic battle with the volleying of Mercur and Williams featuring and the sensational returns of Toba drawing steady applause from a huge gallery that crowded the Merion Cricket Club courts.

MACK HOUSE TAKES ON HAWKINS AGAIN

Mack House of Los Angeles and Long Tom Hawkins, the San Diego negro giant, have been rematched by Manager Morris Cohan of the Pasadena arena for his ten-round main event next Thursday night. In a previous fight Hawkins fought House to a standstill until the fifth round when he unintentionally committed a foul that lost him the bout and cost him a month's suspension.

The winner is to get a crack at Neil Clisby, who pulled a big upset at the opening of the new Pasadena arena three weeks ago when he hung a knockout on House. Previously House had been regarded as the greatest negro sensation in the country, having won twenty-one fights with first-round kayoes. House is wild to get another crack at Clisby.

Cy Young, regarded by many as the greatest pitcher of all time, won 508 major-league games during his career, which included three no-hit performances.

porters. Back in 1916 the New York Giants set a record of twenty-six straight victories while the fast traveling of the Chicago Cubs at the present time is worthy of comment. But for a high-school team to set such a record is indeed a novelty, at least in these parts.

White started coaching at L. A. High in 1920 and has had championship teams five out of the seven years he has been mentoring the Roman tossers. He is a quiet fellow and probably gets less sport page publicity than any coach in the City League. White has a way of instilling confidence into his boys and it is this trait which has made him the success that he is.

Take this season for instance—it was noised about that the Romans would drop out of the league, particularly without the services of Louie Almada and Smith, the star battery. Added to the loss of these boys White was greeted by the return of but two veterans—not an imposing nucleus for another championship team. But White went to work in that quiet way of his and presto—the Romans wound up the year without a defeat, climaxing their season by thumping Manual, 1 to 0.

White has turned out some corking players in his seven years of coaching, many of whom have gone on to pro baseball. Almada, who went to the New York Giants this spring, is probably the best known of the lot. John McGraw has farmed the southpaw pitcher out and Louie is now with Albany in the Eastern League.

Fred Pfahler is with Denver, playing short, having shifted to that berth from second, which was his post while playing at L. A. High. Lester Berry, who caught Almada for two years, is now in the Southern League. Ralph Lane, a third sacker, is with Idaho Falls, while O'Shea, an outfielder, is also playing in the Northwest.

White has two splendid big league prospects this year in Harry Danning, catcher and Bevilaqua, shortstop. Danning is a brother of Ike Danning, the former Poly boy who caught some Coast League ball. White declares that Harry is the best pinch hitter he ever had and that the boy is a cinch to make good. Bevilaqua is a fielding sensation and in addition can paste the onion lustily.

Years ago White's work as grid mentor at L. A. High made him famous, but he lets Ed Rich coach the footballers now.

Those who are fearful that the national pastime is dying out among the school kids should lamp the crowds that watch the Roman nine in action. White has made baseball almost as popular as football from the spectators' standpoint and needless to say L. A. High rooters are thankful that City League principals didn't carry out their threat to cross baseball off the prep sport calendar.

Glendon was far from satisfied with the performance.

The big Navy squad will arrive here tomorrow evening and their first workout will be on Monday morning. The Navy, by virtue of its unbeaten record this year, rules favorites in both the freshman and varsity events but there is no overwhelming favorite.

California and Washington are each figured to stand an excellent chance and this year there is more talk of "dark horses" than in several seasons past.

The favorite "dark horse" to date appears to be Cornell with its rugged and powerful varsity combination.

Mad Bull is Still Leading in Long Run

SCOTIA (Cal.) June 18. (AP)—Chochee, the 48-year-old Zuni Indian in the 480 Redwood Highway marathon from San Francisco to Grant's Pass, Or., was reported held this afternoon at Pepperwood, eight miles south of Scotia and about ten miles behind Mad Bull, Karook, Or., leader in the race. A physician was called to examine Chochee and reports were that he was not considered in good condition.

Mad Bull left Fortuna for Eureka at 5:52. At 7:06 he passed through Loleta, having covered five miles in one hour and sixteen minutes. He was running strongly.

Chochee, Zuni Indian, and Falcon, Karook Indian, were resting at Pepperwood, sixteen miles south of Fortuna, at 4:15 and were expected to leave there at 5 p.m. Chochee was reported ill but able to continue the run.

More than an hour before the expected arrival in Eureka of Mad Bull crowds were beginning to line the route of the Redwood Highway to welcome the leader of the marathon. An unusual number of Indians were in evidence, drawn from the mountains by their curiosity to see the members of their race who are attracting such wide attention.

FURRELL AND ALBIN IN DRAW RING BOUT

Benny Furrell and Freddy Albin fought a speedy eight-round draw in the main event at the Main Street Athletic Club last night. Carl Bennett won from Albert Romo in the six-round semifinal. Jack Mandell stopped Robert Rodriguez in the first round of a six-round go when the latter sprained his ankle. Joe Bitto beat Joel Lopez, while Carl Hansen knocked out Gus Bennett in the second round. Joe Rivers refereed.

VICTORIA (B. C.) June 18. (AP)—Walter Pursey, Seattle professional, won the Pacific Northwest open golf championship with a four-stroke margin over Mortie Dutra of Tacoma, when he finished today with a brilliant 70, the first card to equal par on the deceptive course here, for a 297 total for the seventy-two holes.

PITTSBURGH, June 18. (AP)—Miss Louise Fordyce of Youngstown, O., today captured the two-day woman's medal-play golf tournament at the Allegheny Country Club, scoring 165 for the thirty-six holes. A stroke behind the leader was Miss Virginia Van Wie of Chicago, who turned in a 77 for the last eighteen holes, a new course record for women.

BARROOM CHANNEL SWIMMERS FREQUENTLY BREAK RECORDS DECLARES WESTBROOK PEGLER

BY WESTBROOK PEGLER

NEW YORK, June 18.—I wonder if Mr. Venceslas Spacek, the Czecho-Slovakian swimmer who took a five-minute dip at Calais a few days ago and then announced he had swum the English Channel in ten hours and forty-five minutes could have done so in the bar of Mr. Rene Blondieaux's hotel of the lighthouse at Cape Cris Nez. It would be a tremendous thing for a swimmer to swim the Sleeve by water in ten hours and forty-five minutes, but it has been done in Mr. Blondieaux's bar in less time than that on many occasions.

NOT SO FAST

In fact, it has been done in the Cafe of the Golden Rooster, just down the road a piece, in something like six hours and the swimmers don't work up half the speed in the Cafe of the Golden Rooster that they do in the bar of the Hotel of the Lighthouse.

The conditions in the bar of the Hotel of the Lighthouse are ideal for barroom channel swimming. For onething, it is the only Piggly Wiggly that I ever have discovered in a rather long and earnest exploration for that happy land where sloe gin-rickeys grow on the trees and highballs roll on the ground.

Mr. Blondieaux himself is always tinkering with his automobile, an authentic relic of Gen. Gallieni's taxicab army, not to see what is the matter with it, but to discover, if possible, what miracle of perpetual motion makes it run after all these years. And his good wife generally is engaged with problems of discipline needed by their four-year-old son, five by now, Robert. Bottles stand unguarded on the back bar and nobody in that locality, nor any other that I ever have frequented, needs to be told how to pour himself a drink, having done which it is the honorable custom of the establishment to drop the money or a memorandum in the drawer. There is an element of enticement in this, as a gentleman naturally makes opportunities to show how honorable he is.

MADE MISTAKE

The only barroom channel swimmer who ever forgot himself so far as to swim the channel by water was a tall, garrulous photographer who became so sure of his might one moonlit night last summer that he tore out of the place yelling, "Meet me in England," and plunged into the surf without removing his coat, shoes or trousers. Brave comrades immediately manned the boat, drawn up on the beach, to row beside him, but there was some confusion at the helm and they found themselves taking divots with their sweeps and rowing an overland course in the direction of Paris.

The gallant swimmer was out of his element in the water and he soon reappeared, but disaster attended his attempt for when he walked out of the water it was seen that he had lost that possession which every man holds more precious than life itself. The gentleman had lost his pants, with his expense money in the flask pocket.

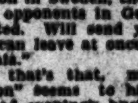
There was another great barroom swimmer at the Hotel of the Lighthouse, but he was an elderly man and did his swimming vicariously. That is, he had a beautiful young wife and he used to boast of how she would some day swim the Sleeve in better time than any other human being.

"She trains all the time," he would say. "When I go to bed at night she goes out and when I wake up in the morning she is just coming in. And when I ask her, 'Dearies, where have you been?' she says, 'Daddy, I've been out practicing in the channel.'"

RABBIT PUNCHES

By

PAUL LOWRY



LOCAL matchmakers who have been scratching their heads about George Godfrey can worry about something else now. Hayden Walliams can refrain from smiling every time he thinks of a new guy to come to the Coast and fight the "Black Shadow." Dick Donald can pay his next year's taxes on what he saves in retrieved telegrams. And the small club promoters can stop figuring on those packed houses "if I can only line up Godfrey."

It's a sad tale, boys, but black George is going to Europe. With cane and monocle and everything. His manager, Jimmy Dougherty, dumped a wire in Los Angeles spreading the news of plans for George to visit England, France and Germany and show the natives over there just what a real fighting son of old Ethiopia can do in the prize ring.

As an appetizer for the trip aboard the "Black Shadow" is billed to fight some eastern heavy on the Dempsey-Sharkey card July 21 and Jimmy Maloney in Philadelphia later. Then as an entree three matches in Europe, the first with Harry Persson in Sweden. Here's the dope, as spilled by the "Baron" in his wire to Godfrey yesterday:

"Take no more fights. Have you booked on the Dempsey-Sharkey card July 21. You are matched with Maloney in the Philadelphia Stadium later, and also have you signed for three matches in Europe. First one with Persson in Sweden, the other two with opponents in Germany not selected. Will send you tickets. You can leave at once for Philadelphia."

So that's that, mates. The "Baron" seems to have done a spirited evening's business. And if he ever gets the lust of battle in that giant frame of his ebony-hued warrior, the whole heavyweight delegation can start looking out.

Mister Donald Hutchinson is always interested in fights and fighters, but at present he finds little else to talk about than mutt dogs. The metamorphosis is due to the fact that Donald is about to become a proud promoter.

He is going to stage a mutt dog show at Ascot July 9, and if you don't think it's going to be a success ask Donald. He has something like 500 purps of one kind and another, all mutts, entered, and he expects an aggregation totaling up in the many thousands before he closes the lists. And there's not a pedigree among 'em; they're barred. This show is going to be a Ziegfeld show. It glorifies something. In this case it's the mutt-dog—the property of the everyday American kid. And best of all the muttiest-loking dog of the batch wins the first prize. If that doesn't bring a laugh nothing will and Mister Hutchinson is a very optimistic person.

about Smith's general attitude. Smith put in a hot sentence or two, while Banny and the arbiter stood at the plate. Then, as Bancroft turned toward Smith, the latter flung the catching mitt from his hand and shot his fist into the Boston manager's jaw.

Bancroft was carried from the field, and the Pirates' physician sewed the cut in his face. He then went to his hotel. Smith was banished from the game.

Later Bancroft said Smith had been "riding" him for some time. Asked what he intended to do about today's incident, he replied: "I'll put the thing up to President Heydler. Let him dispose of it."

Donie Bush, Pirate manager, seemed to think that both Smith and Bancroft were to blame for the flare-up. He did not seek to excuse Smith, saying he would "sit tight" and await Heydler's ruling.

The Smith-Bancroft clash caused a tense feeling on the field and resulted in several close calls. While Bancroft was being carried out Smith and Coach Dick Rudolph of the Braves came close to a clash. Smith started after Rudolph, but other players stepped between them. A little later Pie Traynor, Pittsburgh captain, who has been out of the game with an injured thumb, became involved in an exchange of words with Pitcher Joe Genewich of Boston. They cooled down quickly and retired to their respective benches.

The umpires, McCormick, Klem and McLaughlin, had a busy day keeping the would-be battlers apart. They aided in quelling the clashes and said they would report to President Heydler.

CLEANERS DECIDE TITLE

BOWLING

REDLANDS, June 18.—The third annual Southern California Lawn Bowling tournament is to be held on the Redlands greens at Sylvan Park starting Monday morning at 10 o'clock, when Mayor Allen Wheaton will be on hand to extend a word of greeting to the out-of-town bowlers.

Among them will be men from the following clubs: Angelus, Los Angeles, Pasadena, Claremont, Riverside, Wilshire and Redlands, of course.

There will be valuable prizes for the four competitions, rinks, singles, doubles and points. There will also be a ladies' singles tournament. On Wednesday evening the Ladies' Lawn Bowling Club will entertain with a picnic dinner at Sylvan Park at 5:30 and plans have been made to take the visitors for a drive over Redlands one morning.

C. E. Broderson, president, and Melvin Hooper are planning to make this the best tournament ever held and the greens are in wonderful shape for it.

Lindbergh shook hands with K. M. Landis, baseball commissioner. The spectators remained on their feet and cheered lustily.

HANFORD STANDARDS LEADING IN LEAGUE

HANFORD, June 18.—In the San Joaquin Valley League the first half of this year's series will wind up the 27th inst., two weeks hence. The Standards of this city last Sunday cinched first place, winning ten straight games. The Coalinga Calpets, who were their closest competitors, lost all chance last Sunday when the Fresno Firemen, at Firemen's Park in Fresno, pulled them down the ladder by a score of 11 to 4. The other teams in the league are the Fresno Generals, Madera Coyotes and Dinuba Merchants. The Calpets seem certain to finish in second place.

DENVER SENDS MEN TO MEET

DENVER, June 18. (AP)—The Rocky Mountain Conference will send six representatives to the A.A.U. national field-and-track championships at Lincoln, Neb., July 1, 2, 3 and 4. All but Albers and Mullins hold conference records. Haynes participated in the recent national collegiate meet at Chicago, placing in the two events in which he entered.

Pilling, Utah University, who won the javelin throw at the Chicago meet, is not expected to participate in the Lincoln championships.

VETERAN LEADER RESIGNS

Martin Abernethy Drops Reigns at Indian Hills After Many Years

Martin Abernethy, one of the veteran golf enthusiasts of Southern California, has retired with flying colors and the acclaim of the golfing fraternity after winning the 1927 Twelve Winners Tournament at the Indian Hill Golf Club, north of Claremont, and has announced that he has retired from further tournament play other than single 18-hole events.

During the thirteen and a half years since the founding of the club, Abernethy has won many tournaments at Indian Hill and trophies at Annandale, Griffith Park, Midwick and Del Monte. He has been president of the Indian Hill Club since its organization in the fall of 1913.

Indian Hill is one of the pioneer clubs in Southern California, being formed under the leadership of Mr. Abernethy and several other San Gabriel Valley men. On this course the founders and organizers of the Red Hill and Mountain Meadow clubs learned their first golf.

In comparatively few years this pioneer club has grown from a few first members into an organization numbering a membership of more than 150. The club is noted throughout the West for its economy of dues and initiation fees due to the expert guidance of club finance under Mr. Abernethy's reign.

But the story of the club is not nearly as interesting as the story of the golfer who has served as its president—a man who never had a golf club in his hands until he was 60 years of age, and since that time has been a consistent winner of club and other championships.

One of the most remarkable features of Martin Abernethy's game is his extreme accuracy from tee to the cup. The only thing that has kept him from rating as a par golfer is his lack of power.

His fine game which has consistently beaten others of younger years has not been the result of professional training. Instead he has intelligently studied golf books and magazines, has tried out all of the theories and has adopted those that seem to him to produce the best results.

ROACH AND EVANS CLASH AT SEASIDE

Matchmaker Cy Saenz of the Ocean Park Athletic Club announces a middleweight battle as the main event for next Wednesday night. Chick Roach and Battling Evans are the pair of 160-pounders who are booked for eight rounds. It should be a rough battle with either lad a possible winner with a knockout. In the semi-wind-up Billy Clark and Sailor Atkinson will travel six rounds at 145 pounds, in a grudge scrap that should decide which is the best of these two lads.

KERR FAST ON BAGS

Johnny Kerr, Hollywood second baseman, stole another base on Friday and joined Frank O'Doul for the league leadership with sixteen each. Pid Purdy pilfered two sacks and is right behind with fourteen to his credit.

grasping each side at the center, place the board flat in the water, lie on it stomach down, feet close together, and extend one arm on each side to paddle out.

Considerable difficulty may be experienced in this first operation. If the sea is running high one is certain to have several upsets before reaching the breaker line. When you see a big breaker approaching it is simpler to meet it if one slides into the water at the back of the board and lifts the rear of it high enough so that the nose dips into the water. In this manner the wave will wash over it. Then, when the breaker has passed, climb back and continue to paddle.

Once outside the breaker line, turn the board shoreward and straddle it in the center, treading water with your feet. This will give you an opportunity to rest a moment. When you spot a big breaker, lie upon your stomach again, legs together, and paddle toward it with your hands. It is possible to steer the board by shifting the position of one's feet or body.

When you are on top of the wave the most difficult part of the entire operation is encountered—that of crawling to a standing position without upsetting. The movements are as follows:

First, with a quick motion, jump from your flat position to your hands and knees. Second, with all the speed possible, get to one's feet. By this time you are probably traveling thirty-five miles an hour and the utmost caution must be exercised that you do not upset.

LIKE FIGHTER

One should stand close to the rear of the board with the leg position much the same as that of a prizefighter about to deliver a blow. The right foot should be on the right side of the board and a little forward while the left foot should favor the left side about eighteen inches to the rear of the right foot. In this way you are perfectly braced. Do not, under any circumstances, keep your feet together. You will be caught off balance and the result will be disastrous.

The best location to ride surf is, of course, where the waves are largest and where they break far out at sea. An eighth of a mile is considered a fair distance. During the filming of Paramount's "Old Ironsides" among the channel islands of the Pacific, we discovered several spots where the surf extended more than a mile into the ocean. The longest surf I know is at the northwest end of the Hawaiian Islands—off the Island of Niihau. Here the breakers run a good five miles at lightning speed.

If you are proficient on skiis you will make a good surf-board rider. The two sports are very similar. Women, as a rule, make better surf board artists than men. In my experience as an instructor, this has proven to be true on almost every occasion. While for actual strength and endurance, men are far superior, women, it seems, have a better sense of balance.

APT PUPILS

Among the people I have assisted in learning the past two years are such notables as Esther Ralston, Wallace Beery, George Bancroft, Florence Vidor and Bebe Daniels. Miss Daniels, by the way, learned more rapidly than any other pupil I have ever encountered. Her sense of balance is perfect.

After one becomes more accustomed to the surf board and the tumbles grow fewer, one can experiment in trick riding — riding backwards, standing on your hands, riding with someone perched on your shoulders. There is always some new idea.

CLOSE BATTING RACE

Never has the Coast League witnessed a prettier race for batting honors than the one going on at the present time. Including games of Friday, Paul Strand and Elmer Smith of Portland had both been charged with 281 times at bat. Smith had batted out 110 hits and Strand 109 hits. The one more safe hit credited to Smith gave him a lead of three points in the batting averages.

LIFEGUARDS SHOW PROWESS TODAY

OCEAN PARK, June 18. (Exclusive)—More than 30,000 people are expected to assemble on the sands adjacent to the Lick Pier tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock, when the second annual Santa Monica Bay district life guard demonstration is held, with approximately seventy guards participating with forty life boats, under the auspices of the Los Angeles Playground Department assisted by thirty bath houses, swimming clubs, Red Cross corps and volunteer life saving bodies.

Last year's demonstration, much smaller in point of program and number of persons taking part, was witnessed by 20,000 people crowded about the Ocean Park live-saving station.

Special provisions have been made this season to handle a considerably larger crowd by the committee in charge: Chief of Police Clarence Webb of Santa Monica; W. W. Madge and Rick Richards, president of the Los Angeles American Red Cross Volunteer Corps.

The purpose of the demonstration is to give bay residents and visitors a correct impression of the measures taken by Los Angeles, local and private authorities toward the welfare of bathers, and to also educate those interested as to the latest and most efficient means for rescuing and resuscitating near-drowned victims.

A perpetual trophy has been subscribed by the Ocean Park Realty Corporation, to be awarded to the life boat crew scoring the most points in a series of contest events. The crews will compete in resuscitation, taking boats through the surf and return, rescue of sea victim with "life can," and rescue without aid of either can or boat.

George A. White, the American Red Cross examiner for Los Angeles county, will conclude the program with a comprehensive demonstration of methods for producing artificial respiration and an exhibition of other devices required of life guards. He will be assisted by American Volunteer Red Cross guards. The judges will hold their consultation on the contest events during the demonstration and reward the winning crew with the perpetual trophy following the completion of White's performance.

PEANUTS FIRST IN BROOKLYN

Midget Horse Proves Best in Historic Stake; Crusader is Unplaced

AQUEDUCT (N. Y.) June 18. (AP)—Peanuts, speedy little thoroughbred of the Aknusti stable, won the Brooklyn Handicap, valued at $13,150, by half a length from the Arden farm's Chance Play in the feature at Aqueduct track today. Display was third. Peanuts ran the mile and an eighth in 1m. 48 4-5s. Crusader, odds-on favorite, was unplaced.

The Brooklyn Handicap is one of the oldest stakes in the history of the American turf, and is an annual feature of the Brooklyn meeting. Peanuts, an unusually small horse, has been a consistent winner on the Metropolitan, frequently cutbattling his larger rivals, and is immensely popular with the eastern turf fans.

Crusader, considered by many the best of Man o' War's sons, and the champion 3-year-old of his season, evidently was not in his best form today, and turf experts predict he will do better with this hard race under his belt.

Beverly Hills Dog Show Due Next Saturday

Evidence of the growing popularity of the fox terrier breeds of dogs is seen in the fact that there will be a gala dog show for smooth and wire-haired fox terriers at the Beverly Hills Hotel next Saturday with an expected record-breaking entry list of the most famous thoroughbreds of these classes on the Pacific Coast.

The specialty show, which is to be staged by the Western Fox Terrier Breeders' Association, will be the first of its kind to be staged here for several years, the last one having been in connection with the Hollywood dog show of 1924.

W. W. Stettheimer of San Francisco, who is said to be one of the greatest authorities of the United States on fox terriers, will judge the show at Beverly. Claude Hill, show secretary, is taking entries now for the competition which is already attracting many of the famous terriers from all over the Pacific Coast. The bench show committee for this unusual specialty event is composed of Charles H. Christie, chairman; Irving C. Ackerman, J. C. Netz, Kyle Onstott and Frank P. Crook.

Ratings for the fox terrier show have been received from the American Kennel Club of which the Western Fox Terrier Breeders' Association is a member, and winners' points acquired in this show will be recorded by the American Kennel Club toward national championships.

president of the Kentucky Jockey Club. He is a son of Light Brigade-Honeydew and has been out of the money only once in his last eleven stars. That was when he ran a good fourth in the Kentucky Derby, two days after a spell of illness.

The race was worth $28,000 with $22,000 of the purse going to the winner.

The victory of Hydromel was a joyride for Larry McDermott, the little jockey perched on his back. McDermott was looking back over his shoulder watching the beaten field as Hydromel dashed under the wire with his commanding lead.

McDermott rode a masterly race, holding his mount back of the early pace set by Buddy Bauer and Whiskery. Buddy Bauer broke in front at the start, closely followed by Whiskery and Hydromel, with Dolan and Handy Mandy trailing. The five horses ran the first mile without changing position. Going into the turn for the last half the real race began with Hydromel quickly closing up the two lengths behind the leading Buddy Bauer.

Whiskery then dropped back and was out of it. Buddy Bauer offered a challenge for a few strides, but McDermott simply let Hydromel have his head and the Camden colt bounded away from his field as if they were all tied down.

SEVEN-MAN SOCCER TEAM LOOP PROPOSED

NEW YORK, June 18.—Seven-a-side soccer football is to be played indoors at night in the new garden next winter. A league has been formed, with Nathan Agar as its head, as he was the prime mover in the plan, which will comprise eight teams, the four American soccer league elevens of Greater New York, and Irish, Latin, German and American teams sponsored by the garden officials.

Seven dates already have been set aside for the games, which will be on a round-robin basis, all the eight teams playing two nights in December, two in January, two in February and one in March.

ANGELS, STARS TO TANGLE

The two local clubs, Los Angeles and Hollywood will tangle in a seven-game series at Wrigley Field this week. Special interest is always attracted to a series between these two clubs.

Dreyfuss Victim of "Joe McCarthy Surprise" When Cubs Bought Carlson From Ph

STAR HURLER MAY BRING PENNANT TO CHICAGOANS

Acquisition of Carlson and Pick Puts Bruins in Line for Top Honors With Bucs, Cards

BY JOHN P. GALLAGHER

CHICAGO, June 18. (Exclusive)—With the New York Yankees in the American League plowing their way pennantward practically undisturbed, the race for honors in the National League becomes more interesting as the second third of the season gets under way. The real battles for the 1927 flag will be between the Pittsburgh Pirates, the Chicago Cubs and the St. Louis Cardinals.

HAL CARLSON

The New York Giants seem to have only an outside chance at this writing. The first three teams are strong, powerful aggregations capable of a concerted drive at any time, and, barring accidents and injuries, possess the ability to hold their gains for a considerable length of time. The pennant, we think, will be won by the one of these teams, which, during the closing days of the season, smashes its way to the top, consolidates the ground and throws into the breach every available ounce of energy it has to maintain the position until relieved by the end of the schedule.

Two weeks ago it was the writer's opinion, based upon a survey of the National League teams while they played here, that the Pittsburgh Pirates had the edge in the race. The Freebooters showed some impressive potential and actual strength in six games against the Cubs. Traynor and Wright, the two stars on the left side of the infield, never looked better, while George Grantham is playing a far better game at second base for the Pirates than he did for the Cubs. Old Joe Harris, who starred for the Washington Americans during the 1924 world series, will win no medals with his fielding, but he still swings a mean stick. There is a lot of speed and dash to the Buccaneer's outfield with "Kiki" Cuyler surrounded by the speedy and slugging Waner boys. The vulnerable spot in the team, however, is the pitching staff. And therein lies the subject of this story.

DREYFUSS SURPRISED

Joseph V. McCarthy, vigilant and capable manager of the Chicago Cubs, who surprised the baseball world last year in a score of ways, is still on the job. Joe is such a quiet sort of fellow that baseball men are likely to overlook the fact that his brain cells work continuously and efficiently. Mr. Barney Dreyfuss president and owner of the Pirates, seems to be the latest victim of one of Joe's recent surprises, and Mr. Dreyfuss's lapse of memory may cost his outfit the flag.

It happened this way: President William F. Baker of the Phillies, according to word from Pittsburgh, was willing to talk to President Dreyfuss about a deal for Hal Carlson, the Pittsburgh club owner having made overtures for the Phillie star pitcher during last winter with a view to bolstering the Corsairs' hurling corps for this season. McCarthy was aware of the proposed dicker. Joe knew that President Baker has a weakness for deals involving cash. Eager to strengthen his own team on the mound McCarthy made the Phillies' owner an alluring offer, and, while Dreyfuss was thinking over the matter, Joe closed the deal with Baker. Immeditely the trade was announced, Dreyfuss saw his mistake and "blew up." And hammers began to fly thick and fast in the Smoky City. The ire of the Pittsburghers was directed against Baker, who, the Pittsburgh scribes declared, "let Carlson follow Bancroft, Alexander, Killefer, Meusel and Stengel for cash to make winning clubs in other cities, while Philadelphia holds the bag."

However that may be McCarthy put the deal over, and then secured Eddie Pick, star third sacker of the Kansas City Blues of the American Association. These two deals lift the Bruins from merely a pennant possibility to a real pennant contender over the remainder of the 1927 schedule.

CUB STAFF STRONG

Hal Carlson is one of the most valuable pitchers in the older circuit. With a hurling corps composed of Guy Bush, Charley Root, Sheriff Blake, "Lefty" Brillheart, Percy Jones, when he gets back, and Wayland Dean, another hurler McCarthy purchased from the Phillies for cash, the Cubs have one of the best sharpshooting staffs in the league.

McCarthy may not have the imposing array of veterans that either Pittsburgh or the Cardinals can trot out on the field, but he assuredly has a bunch of intelligent boys who go out on the diamond and tie into a game with the do-or-die spirit of bulldogs. And they have a powerful punch. It may be the hefty Hack Wilson, the slugging Earl Webb or the speedy Riggs Stephenson who swings the scales to victory; or it may be Charley Grimm, "Gabby" Hartnett or "Sparky" Adams. They are all men who have the punch to break up a ball game. In addition Carlson or Charley Root, both good stickers, may win their own games with the bat. Eddie Pick, who joined the team only a few days ago, is yet an unknown quantity with the willow, but he has proved himself a worthy Cub defensively.

The Cubs' first swing through the east was highly successful. They took nine out of twelve games played. On their home grounds they have demonstrated to all comers that they are an outfit to be reckoned with up until the end of the ninth inning.

It is plainly evident, therefore, that the Pirates no longer have any edge, in fact, they will be on the defensive when they meet the Cubs. And it will take all the strength the Cardinals can muster to even hold their own with the Chicago outfit.

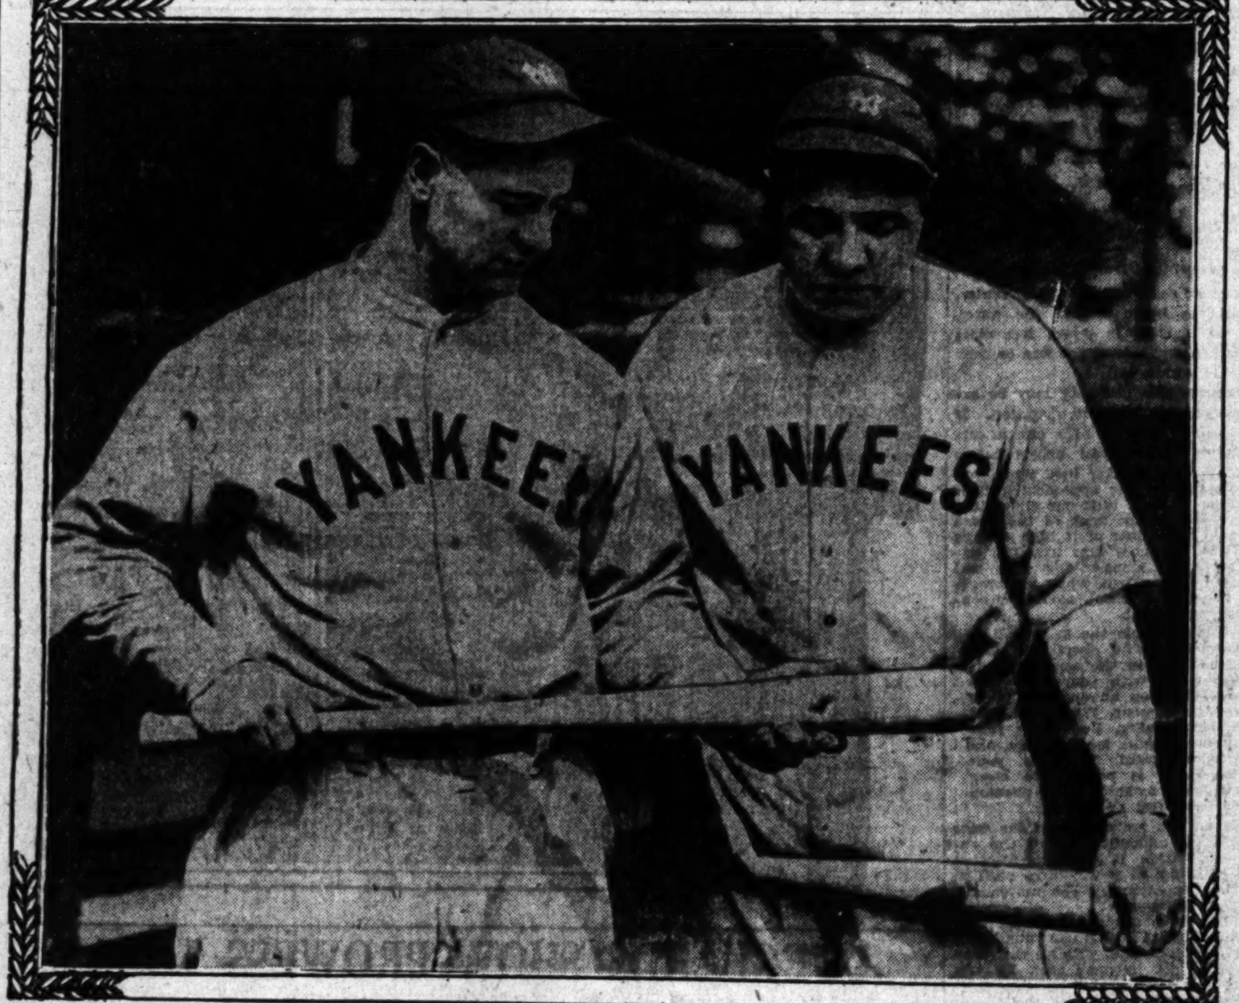
Well, it's anything but fair weather for the opposing pitchers. Here we have Lou Gehrig and G. H. Herman have been doing quite a bit in the way of circuit clouting of late [P. & A. photo]



Yankees Exhibit Qualities of Greatness

GOTHAMITES POSSESS "IT" OF BASEBALL

BY RUD RENNIE

NEW YORK, June 18.—In the warm, lazy atmosphere of the Yankees' clubhouse between practice sessions down in St. Petersburg this spring one of the players who preferred not to lunch sat on a bench idly pounding a fist into the pocket of his glove and talking of things as they were in baseball.

"You know," he said, "some day when I've hung up my shoes and I'm all through as a ball player. I'll be proud to say that I once played with Babe Ruth and the Yankees. It's a great ball team."

There are several tests for greatness in a ball team. One of them is an ability to knock over the tough team, the one which is most threatening. Another is an ability to win close games. In the past two weeks the Yankees took both these tests and qualified. They met the Chicago White Sox, the next best team in the league at that moment, and beat them in three games of a four-game series. In two of these games the Yankees had to come from behind, overcoming a five-run lead in the ninth inning of one and making up a three-run lead in the other.

And in defeating the White Sox at this time the Yankees showed to those who appreciate things of that sort, a flexibility of defense and a store of reserve strength which was delightful to behold.

Three of their regular players were out of the game with slight but sufficient injuries. Bob Meusel, their left fielder and a .392 hitter had a sore leg. Mark Koenig, the shortstop, had a badly bruised thigh And Joe Dugan, the third baseman, had a lame ankle. The detraction of three regular players from any team is usually a hardship and a good alibi for defeat. But what happened to the Yankees?

Miller Huggins put Cedric Durst in left field and Ced helped break up two of the ball games. He put Ray Morehart at second and Ray drove in the winning run in an eleven inning battle and sewed up another game with a home run. Then, as the exigencies of the case presented themselves Huggins shifted Tony Lazzeri from second to third and from third to short, and Tony played two positions other than his own without an error, scored six runs for the Yankees and made three home runs in one game.

Summing it up, the Yankees have the "it" of baseball!

YOURS TRULY

Rogers Hornsby Ty Cobb

Dear Rog:

You were one of a regiment who asked me "What's the matter with the A's?" I'm going to answer that question in this letter by giving it as my opinion that we have been fighting the percentage table.

TY COBB

ROGERS HORNSBY.

On May 30 when we started that "power-house" series with the Yanks every fellow on our team, myself, included, saw percentage ladder on which we were situated five games below our opponents. I know I was saying to myself out there, "Golly, but it'll be great if we can win all five games and tie the Yanks for the lead."

What we should have been doing was to concentrate on the game at hand. We should have been fighting the Yanks to win today and let tomorrow and the percentage table take care of itself.

I'm not telling you this as an alibi, Rog. I'm not taking away one bit of credit belonging to the Yankees for the tremendous hitting they did. We had an opportunity to fight the Yanks and whip them and instead we fought a mythical enemy. That's our funeral.

Our trouble is not exclusive. I think all teams are licked by the same invisible foe at times. Who knows, it may be the Yanks that will be fighting the percentage table later in the season.

You see I dope it out this way. A team that wins the pennant wins approximately three games in every five played. Now what possible difference can it make how much of a lead one team has over another on May 30? The law of averages says that leading team will finish with a percentage of around .600, so why bother about first place or the margin that may separate the first and third clubs on May 30?

You get my point, don't you? Against the Yanks we were "pressing," to use a golf term, because our thoughts were on that five-game lead we thought we must whittle down. Had we fought that team out there every day, I'm sure we could have won three of the five which would have been what the law of averages expected us to do.

You will recall how the Boston Braves stampeded in 1914, going from last place on July 4 to first place and the pennant when the season ended. I have heard players on that team say that they never even looked at the percentage table until they woke up to find themselves on top. They were fighting for the game at hand and had no other worries.

At last we have had some hot weather and that has been a big help to the "antiques" on my club—you know a New York writer referred to me and some other fellows on the Athletics as "antiques."

Well, we are pretty old when our ages are compared with the run of ball players. And we "old fellows" need plenty of hot sun. Also your pitchers have been going better since summer arrived.

By the way, what's been the matter with the Giants?

Yours truly,

Ty Cobb

RUTH OUT TO BREAK "59" MARK

BY BOB RAY

With the New York Yankees apparently headed toward a certain pennant, interest in the American League now is centered mostly in whether or not Babe Ruth will be able to break his record of fifty-nine home runs in a season that he established back in 1921.

BABE RUTH

The Bambino is a trifle behind his 1921 schedule of four-base swats, but he is ahead of his 1920 record to date when on June 18 he had poled out nineteen circuit swats. In 1920 Ruth startled the baseball world by ramming out fifty-four homers to break up the previous major league record of twenty-seven that he had established in 1919.

Ruth's home runs, as the records will show, come in streaks, and once the Babe gets going there's no telling how many he may run up before the opposing hurlers get him under control again.

There are two big things against Ruth in his attempt to achieve his desired sixty. These are that the ball is not as lively now as it was back in 1920-21, and that he is now doing most of his batting in the Yankee Stadium, whose stands are not so conveniently located for his clouts as were the right-field bleachers of the Polo Grounds where he clouted most of his homers in his two big years.

However, there are also a couple of big points in Babe's favor in his campaign. He is in the best physical condition that he has ever been in his major league career and that's a big aid. The other help to the Babe is that following him in the Yankee batting order is Lou Gehrig, the slugging first-sacker who is proving somewhat of a home run clouter himself as well as a .400 hitter. Pitchers aren't so apt to put Ruth on the paths with intentional passes now with Gehrig.

The baseball world is strongly behind Ruth in his effort to break his record for they appreciate the fact that he has settled down to the seriousness of the game because he knows that he can't be in the big money forever.

ANGELS HOIST 1926 PENNANT

Champion Cherubs to Raise Banner Next Saturday at Wrigley Field

Next Saturday will be pennant-raising day at Wrigley Field. The gonfalon which Marty Krug's hired help won last season by romping through the Pacific Coast League field will be hoisted up on the center-field flag pole with the customary ceremonies that are attendant to such occasions of baseball glory. The Hollywood Stars will be the Angels' opponents in the game that will follow the raising of the 1926 pennant. If you don't believe winning pennants is a costly job, you probably will when you learn that the flag which the Angels are going to raise cost $175. The streamer is made of heavy silk and is embroidered with the following fact: "Los Angeles, Champions, Pacific Coast League." Those three lines are preceded by the numerals, "1926," on the extreme left of the banner.

Turner Denies Oaks Will Get Leonard Metz

PORTLAND (Or.) June 18. (AP) While he admitted that he had asked waivers on five players, including Infielder Leonard Metz, Thomas L. Turner, president of the Portland Coast League club, said today that Metz would not join the Oakland club tomorrow as contained in news dispatches.

"I have five days in which to recall waivers. I am seriously considering making a number of changes in the Portland club and asked waivers in order that I could get a line on what other clubs in the league would consider these men in a trade. While Metz is included in the five on which I asked waivers, he will not go to the Oaks immediately, if at all."

GLENDALE TO SEND SWIM TEAM SOUTH

SAN DIEGO, June 18.—Coach Bill Brost, of the Glendale Swimming and Athletic Club, is sending down a strong team for the annual Silver Gate channel swim here. Among others he has entered four brothers, Ray, Harold, Roland and Norman Skeets.

George Gray and Vera Best are others of Brost's entries. Nearly 200 are entered to date in the swim.

ODD RECORD

Miller Huggins holds the unique record of facing the pitcher six times in a game with no times at bat credited to him. Playing for the St. Louis Nationals, June 1, 1910, he received four bases on balls and made two sacrifice hits.

COAST LEAGUE CALENDAR OF OUTSTANDING EVENTS

DOC WRIGHT

June 9—Wayne Wright scored his eleventh victory of the season as the Angels vanquished Portland, 4-1. Jensen made his debut in the Los Angeles outfield and accepted four putouts and rapped out two safe hits. Ten errors were marked up in the Seattle-San Francisco contest. But this is by no means a record of the league. In the long ago one club muffed fifteen chances in a single contest, while the opponents got through the game with only three misplays. Shortstop Puccinelli may have acquired an individual record for his five misplays. Al Gould, Oakland hurler, won his sixth game as a relief pitcher with no defeats. Quite a record for a pitcher who has only worked in thirty-seven innings.

June 10—Elmer Smith scored his 100th safe hit of the season in the second double-header game with Los Angeles. Players to the number of thirty-six participated in this game, which Los Angeles won, 9-8, in eight innings. George Boehler, Oakland, pitched shutout ball against Hollywood and won, 1-0. Hollywood had defeated Oakland by the same score earlier in the week.

June 11—Paul Strand poled his 100th safe hit of the season. Elmer Smith batted out his eighteenth home run.

June 12—O'Brien, the first Portland batter to face Pitcher Weathersby in the first inning of a double-header vs. Los Angeles, batted the first pitched ball over the left-field wall at Wrigley Field. Earl Averill, San Francisco outfielder, had six safe hits in six times at bat in the second double-header game vs. Seattle. Oakland whitewashed Hollywood in both games and held the Stars scoreless in final twenty innings of the series. Oakland twirlers held Hollywood to six runs in the seven-game series.

Frank O'Doul stole a base in both contests to take the lead among all players with sixteen for the season. Elmer Smith and Frank O'Doul and second and third-place batters have both played in seventy-three games and both have been charged with 268 times at bat in the eleven weeks. Smith had made 102 hits and O'Doul ninety-nine hits.

June 13—Earl Averill continued his heavy hitting by scoring four hits in the final tilt with Seattle.

June 14—"Ping" Bodie looked out of place at first base for San Francisco, but hit the ball as of yore, poling a home run way over the left-field wall at Wrigley Field.

June 15—Ray Jacobs's home run drive in the tenth inning gave Los Angeles another win over San Francisco. Art Weis had a big day at bat with four safe bingles.

Hollywood scored seven runs in the sixth inning vs. Mission, which was more runs than the club managed to corral during the entire seven-game series with Oakland last week. Frank O'Doul passed the 100 mark in safe hits. Elmer Smith regained his title to the league-leading battership when he collected two safe hits in two trips to the plate while his team-mate, Paul Strand, went hitless in his four times at bat.

June 19—The twelfth week of the 1927 baseball season ends today. Hollywood and Los Angeles open a series at Wrigley Field on Tuesday.

double play pulled the great individual out of trouble without any runs being charged against him. With one out Jacobs and Staley singled. Sandberg hit one off Mishkin's glove that Solly recovered, but didn't know where to throw the ball. Mails got over to first in time to make the play, but Solly was bewildered so all hands were safe and the sacks filled. That made Mails quite angry and he heaved three bad ones to Peters. However, for some unknown reason, Peters elected to hit at the 3-and-0 ball and a double play was the result, Sheehan, Suhr and Mishkin figuring in the two-ply killing.

The Seal southpaw was not quite so fortunate in the third, which Dick Cox began by driving one to right center for two bases. Hemingway followed with a double down the left-field line and Cox counted. Hood walked. Jahn bunted to Mails and it went for a hit when Mishkin and Suhr thought the other was going to cover first, leaving Walter holding the sack, as it were, only in this case it happened to be a baseball with no one to throw it to. Mr. Mails was mad again.

SERAPHS KEEP SCORING

Suhr threw out Brazill at first and Hemingway scored on the out. Ray Jacobs then banged out his second hit of the day, a double that thudded against the left-field bricks and drove both Hood and Jahn over the rubber. Staley followed with a walk, but Mails retired Sandberg and Peters to end the inning.

The Angels worked Mails for two walks and a single in the fifth inning, but Brazill was picked off first, McCrea to Mishkin, to pull the Seal southpaw out of danger. That marked the second time this week that Mishkin has trapped Brazill off first and Frank is beginning to get peeved. Earlier in the game Mishkin and McCrea trapped Staley off first, but Umpire Sweeney missed this one. Mishkin's football knowledge apparently is helping him in his blocking the athletes off the initial sack.

There will be the customary twin bill today. If the Angels can win one of the games they'll make it two series in a row.

The Seraphs signed up Charley Scherf, former Santa Clara shortstop, yesterday and Krug announces he'll use the former collegian in one of today's tussles. Scherf looked good at short in fielding practice yesterday. Score:

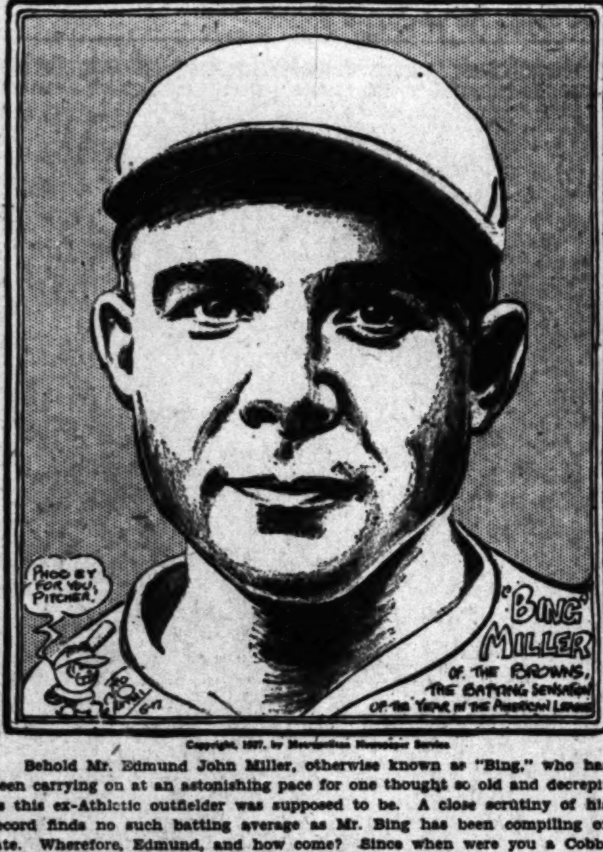
BIFF, BANG, BING!

BY FEG MURRAY



PRODD EY FOR YOU, PITCHER!
"BING" MILLER OF THE BROWNS, THE BATTING SENSATION OF THE YEAR IN THE AMERICAN LEAGUE
FEG MURRAY

Copyright, 1927, by Metropolitan Newspaper Service

Behold Mr. Edmund John Miller, otherwise known as "Bing," who has been carrying on at an astonishing pace for one thought so old and decrepit as this ex-Athletic outfielder was supposed to be. A close scrutiny of his record finds no such batting average as Mr. Bing has been compiling of late. Wherefore, Edmund, and how come? Since when were you a Cobb, a Ruth, and a Hornsby combined?

Connie Mack might well have hung on to Bing, instead of loading up with high-priced antiques and expensive recruits. For the Browns got Miller from the Athletics, and in a not-so-far-distant series between the two teams Bingo made eleven hits out of eighteen trips to the plate, scoring eight runs to the utmost consternation of his former boss, Mr. Cornelius McGillicuddy. According to the St. Louis Sporting News, when Edmund John comes to bat with mates on the base-paths, he summarizes the situation thusly: "Ah, it looks like there's some wash to bring in off the line." No sooner said than done, and Bing bangs one out, and the wash comes in.

Miller's recent batting spree brought great joy to the staid citizens of St. Louis, and his work on this, the first eastern trip of the Browns, will be watched with great interest. At one time, when he had played in twenty-six games, E. J. was hitting at a .446 clip, which is "hittin'" in any man's league! Bing Miller will be remembered by many as the Athletic outfielder who, for a time in 1922, gave Ruth a good run for home-run honors. He collected twenty-one in all that season.

Perhaps the secret of Bing's success is not only his change to new scenery but also the fact that it has been nosed about that he used to be pitcher back in 1915 and 1916 with Clinton of the Central Association. Miller was born in Vinton, Iowa, on August 30, 1894. From Vinton he went to Clinton, then to Peoria, then Atlanta, San Antonio, Little Rock, and finally began his major-league career with Washington in 1921. After four and a half seasons with the Athletics, he was traded in June, 1926, to St. Louis for "Baby Doll" Jacobson. The highest he ever batted before was 342 in 1924.

RUTH CLIMBS IN HITTING; MILLER AND HARRIS LEAD

CHICAGO, June 18.—It won't be long now until Babe Ruth is up in his rightful place among the first ten hitters of the American League. Starting the season with a lowly .233 for the first week the home run king has climbed a few notches at a time until he is fifteenth in the list of regulars today in figures including Wednesday's games, with a mark of .340.

Along with his four-base hits, the Babe has kept pace with the schedule of his record-breaking home run year of 1921. Half of his sixty-six hits have been for extra bases, among them twenty-one homers.

Crowded out of first place in the American League hitters for a few weeks, Bing Miller of St. Louis has snapped back into the front with the only .400 mark of the circuit.

This week's newcomer among the sluggers is Jimmy Dykes of Philadelphia, now one of Connie Mack's regulars, who made nine hits in his five games, sending him from thirteenth place to fifth.

CHULTE CLIMBS

Schulte, St. Louis rookie, displaced his team-mate, Ken Williams, in tenth place, below which are hovering Harry Heilmann, old Zack Wheat, Williams and Bud Clancy, the White Sox first base find.

There are four players with eight stolen bases apiece on the trail of the league leader, Goose Goslin of Washington, who passed the field with two more this week, to total ten. Al Simmons, George Burns, Bill Hunnefield and Lou Blue are in the tie.

The two White Sox flingers, Ted Lyons and Al Thomas, stand out conspicuously among the Johnson circuit pitchers with their victories running into double figures. Lyons has won nine in a row, with twelve altogether, and Thomas has grasped victory ten times. The Yankees broke Thomas's winning streak, but Lyons hurled the Sox to their only win over New York to keep his string clean.

Frankie Frisch is now right on the heels of his rival, Rogers Hornsby, only two points separating them in the batting averages compiled today, taking in games up to Wednesday. Hornsby's slump has carried him to .363, while Frisch gained to .360.

JOE HARRIS IN VAN

The ex-Senator, Joe Harris, who was waived out of the American League, has become the sensation of the Heydler loop and has raised his clouting mark to .451. His good example has inspired Barnhardt, Lloyd and Paul Warner until the three Dreyfuss boys are now clustered at the top of the column, Barnhart also having a fine .400 mark.

The Giants parted with one of their leading hitters this week, trading Farrell to Boston, though he still hovers around the top of the list.

Hack Wilson, the Cubs' long-distance hitter, whose bleacher drived helped the Cubs to accumulate twelve straight wins, is well in front of the four base knockers now with thirteen, two better than old Cy Williams of the Phillies.

Frisch has also speeded up on the paths and now is leading the major-league champion, Kiki Culver of Pittsburgh, by one theft. Frisch has sixteen, gathering two this week.

ROOT WINS MOST GAMES

Manager McCarthy of the Cubs is making an iron man out of Charley Root with considerable success, for Root leads the circuit in victories, with eleven. Jess Haines of the Cardinals is the only other twirler in double figures, having ten wins, with but three defeats, as against four charged to Root. Root has toiled in parts of twenty games, doing relief duty between his regular turns on the hill.

Diving Horses to be Featured at Ocean Park

OCEAN PARK, June 18. (Exclusive) Aquatic exhibitions of an entirely new sort will commence on the Lick pier Sunday, the 26th inst., with the arrival of Dr. W. F. Carver and his six diving horses from New England on a special car.

A platform is now under construction at the end of the pier, from which the famous high divers will leap into the ocean. Previous to his departure for the Pacific Coast, Carver and his horses are said to have finished an extensive educational campaign with the National Society Cruelty to Animals.

The unique diving demonstrations are being sponsored by the Ocean Park Men's Amusement Association for the crowds gathered about the pier. Carver's quadrupeds will dive nearly every day of the summer season. It will mark the first exhibition of its kind in this region.

Smith Slugs Bancroft While Buccaneers Win, 7-4

Boston Manager All Cut Up by Rival Catcher

Osborne Blows Up to Allow Cubs to Lose Again

PITTSBURGH (Pa.) June 18. (AP) Pittsburgh defeated Boston, 7 to 4, today in a game marked by an attack by Earl Smith, Pirate catcher, upon Dave Bancroft, manager and shortstop of the Braves.

DAVE BANCROFT

Bancroft was rendered unconscious by a blow to the jaw and was carried from the field by Boston players. Three stitches were placed in a cut on his jaw. The attack occurred in the seventh inning, after Moore and Bancroft had scored on Richbourg's single. The Boston manager stopped at the plate and made a remark to Umpire McCormick. Smith let go with his fist to Bancroft's jaw, and the Braves' leader dropped. The Pirate catcher was banished from the game.

The Pirates took the lead in the first inning and were never headed. In that inning Paul Waner tripled with two men on base. It marked his twenty-first consecutive game of at least one hit and his thirteenth successive game of hitting for extra bases.

Santa Monica Baseball Star Soon to Go Up

SANTA MONICA, June 18. (Exclusive)—If the next few seasons do not find Henry (Hank) McDonald of Santa Monica High School firmly intrenched in professional baseball, many of the knowing ones in this district, baseballically speaking, will be willing to chew their best Sunday suits.

For Hank is not only a speed-ball pitcher with a remarkable season's record behind him, including strikeouts by the yard, but also wields a lusty bat at the plate. He was third in hitting honors on this season's Samohi squad, which won the Bay League championship, and which had some heavy firing guns in its personnel.

McDonalds hitting average was approximately .400, a performance not to be snubbed even if it were unaccompanied by a dazzling record on the mound. Hank is built along powerful lines, the crest of his head extending some six feet toward the heavens, and his total weight nearing the 190-pound mark. For all-around ability, this Hank person well deserves the marked attention said to be given him by a number of scouts.

WASEDA BASEBALL NINE BEATS HUSKIES

SEATTLE, June 18. (AP)—Waseda University nine won its last scheduled tilt on its American tour from the University of Washington today, 7 to 1, taking three of the five-game series. The Japanese batsmen proved too much for a pair of Washington twirlers, while Mizukami kept the eight hits which he allowed so well scattered that the Huskies never proved a threat.

YALE POLOISTS TRIUMPH

RYE (N. Y.) June 18. (AP)—Yale's defenders of the intercollegiate polo championship swept to their second decisive victory of the intercollegiate tournament by downing the Army riders, 7 to 2, today. Harvard defeated Penn Military College, 2 to 1.

Lone Run Comes in Ninth; Smith's Homer Beats Sacs, 4-1

OAKLAND, June 18. (AP)—In one of the tightest pitching duels here this season, Seattle defeated Oakland, 1-0, scoring the winning tally in the ninth when Ballenger tripled and scored on Callaghan's sacrifice fly. Miljus for Seattle allowed only three hits, Bratcher, left-fielder, being the only man to reach second with a double. Art Delaney twirled nine frames for the Oaks, passing out five hits, and was yanked for Brubaker, pinch-hitter. Score:

Samohi Grid Star Essays Iceman's Job

SANTA MONICA, June 18.—A possible successor of Red Grange on the football field is said to be starting to make history repeat itself in the application of Marsh Duffield, demon high school backfield ace and stellar kicker of field goals and punts, for a job as ice man. Mayor Herman Michel, head of a Santa Monica ice concern, says he's going to give Duffield his chance to show that Santa Monica High School, California, with plenty of ice, can turn out just as great a football star as Wherton High School, Illinois. Duffield, one of Coach Max Berg's most valuable assets in keeping Samoni among the topnotchers of the Bay League, has been sought by many university coaches. The tow-headed young athlete graduates this year. He plays the sort of football that makes the fans hoarse, and was on the baseball nine that lost by one run to Alhambra in a recent play-off game for Southern California honors. Duffield's kicking of field goals last season was regarded as phenomenal for a high school toe artist. He won twelve letters in sports, and graduates among the leaders in scholarship at his school.

GLOBE BASEBALLERS DOWN PHOENIX NINE

BIRD-RACES POPULAR

Pigeon-racing has become a popular sport in the Pacific Northwest. Four times a month races ranging from 80 to 100 miles are held and at the end of the season it is planned to stage a race over a 500-mile course from Redding, Cal., to Seattle.

SACRAMENTO, June 18. (Exclusive)—Elmer Smith's twentieth home run of the season with one on in the eighth inning broke a 1-to-1 tie and gave the Portland Beavers a 4-to-1 victory over Sacramento here today. The Portland victory gave the Beavers the lead in the series.

ELMER SMITH

Up until Smith added to his home-run string, the contest was quite a hurling duel between young Larry French, Beaver southpaw, and Rudy Kallio. French held the Senators to six hits, two of which were bunched in the sixth for the locals' lone run. Score:

Santa Monica Swimmers Set for Big Race

SANTA MONICA, June 18.—Two Santa Monica Bay swimmers are in active training here for an invasion of George Young's own Canadian home town. It is now a matter of history that George journeyed on a motorcycle from Toronto to the Pacific Coast, and won the Catalina channel swim, together with $25,000 cash and numerous money-making opportunities.

Mel Edwards and Nick Baker are preparing to return George Young's call.

"It's the courteous thing to do," says Mel.

"And we want a look at that big money William Wrigley is going to put up to back George against the world," adds Nick.

And so the big Toronto, Can., water marathon this summer is the destination of the local pair. Mel's entry has been officially accepted, according to letters he displays. Nick's is on the way. And in the meantime they swim eight or ten miles before breakfast and after lunch and around dinner time every day to get in shape to show George that his call here has not been forgotten.

NEEDS ONE MORE

John Ball, 63-year-old British veteran golfer, who has won the amateur title eight times, needs but one more victory to achieve a record of winning 100 championship matches.

Taylor Defends Bantamweight Laurels Against Canzoneri in Bout Thursday Ni

CHICAGO SCENE OF TITLE BOUT

Bud Taylor, the Champ, Meets Tony Canzoneri

Italian Scrapper Confident of Collecting Crown

Callahan Agrees to Defend Championship Again

BY WALTER ECKERSALL

Bud Taylor

CHICAGO, June 18, (Exclusive)—Tony Canzoneri, the little New York Italian, and Bud Taylor of Terre Haute, Ind., recognized as the world's bantamweight champion in eighteen States, will meet for the world's 118-pound championship in the Cubs' baseball park of Chicago on Thursday night.

The bout, which will be staged by Promoter James C. Mullen, will be the fifth championship affair held in the State of Illinois since boxing was legalized a year ago. In the first bout held under the new law, Sammy Mandell took the lightweight title from Rocky Kansas. This contest was held out of doors in the White Sox baseball yard.

LOST TITLE

Mickey Walker, who had previously held the world's welterweight title until defeated by Pete Latzo, was given the decision over Tiger Flowers in an indoor show for the world's middleweight title. Shortly afterward Taylor and Canzoneri went ten rounds to a draw for the bantamweight championship.

Mushy Callahan of Los Angeles, Cal., successfully defended his world's junior welterweight title against Spug Myers of Pocatello, Idaho, in the first outdoor show staged this year. In a previous meeting held indoors, Myers won a decision over Callahan, but the title was not at stake because no weight was made.

The slashing ten-round draw which Taylor and Canzoneri engaged in during the indoor season prompted Promoter Mullen to resign them for an outdoor match. Fans who saw their first encounter were agreed it was the best fight held in the Windy City since boxing has been permitted by law. It was a fight full of action with both fighters trying in every round to put over the punch which would end the fracas.

Canzoneri showed to very good advantage in both the standoff and infighting. He fought Taylor any way Bud cared to mix and Tony took care of himself at all times. In fact the fans were surprised to see Canzoneri hit Taylor so much with a left hand and they were sort of bewildered at times to see Tony get the best of the infighting.

HARD PUNCHES

During that ten-round fight, neither was on the verge of a knockdown, although both connected with solid punches. Both are strictly right-hand hitters, but they can inflict plenty of punishment with their left hands, which they use to jab and hook.

Taylor recently returned from Los Angeles, where he stopped Chick Suggs, the rugged eastern colored bantamweight, in five rounds. In that fight Bud was the master of the situation at all times and as early as the first round had his colored opponent in a bad way. Previous to going to the Coast, Taylor won a questionable decision over Abe Attel Goldstein in the Coliseum of Chicago.

In his last appearance in Chicago, Canzoneri stopped Ray Rychell of the stockyards and previously he disposed of Harold Smith of Chicago in three rounds in New York. He also won the decision over Bushy Graham, the Utica (N. Y.) bantamweight. Like many other professional fighters, Tony is a product of the New York amateur ranks and many fight fans intend to back him to defeat Taylor.

ARE IMPRESSIVE

Both fighters have been in Chicago since last Tuesday and their workouts have been very impressive. Neither boxer has been made a favorite and the money which is being wagered is at evens. The fans, however, rate it to be a great fight and indications are the gate will be the largest in the history of the new boxing bill.

Fernandez, the latest Filipino sensation, who is heralded as a greater fighter than any of the little brown boxers sent to this country from the Orient, will meet Abe Attel Goldstein, the former world's lightweight champion, in the ten-round semi-wind-up. Promoter Mullen believes Goldstein is still good enough to give the Filipino the desired test. Fernandez and Goldstein will weigh 118 pounds and this match will be supported by four other bouts.

On July 12, Mushy Callahan of Los Angeles will again defend his world's junior welterweight honors in Chicago against a suitable opponent. This bout will be the feature of an American Legion show to be staged to raise money to send disabled soldiers and sailors in Chicago hospitals to the American Legion convention in Paris in September.

Jim Maloney, the Boston heavyweight, who was defeated by Jack Sharkey recently, has been signed to meet Romero Rojas, the South American, in the feature of Joe Coffey's show at the White Sox baseball park in Chicago on the 30th inst. It will be the first show composed entirely of heavyweights to be staged in the State of Illinois under the new law.

WISE GOLFER

Lewis Levinson, 19-year-old son of a San Antonio kosher butcher, who won the Texas amateur golf championship, permitted his caddie, Sammy Garcia, to select his club for each stroke.

GODFREY MEETS KILRAIN

George Godfrey, the giant negro heavyweight, who hasn't been seen in action locally since he stopped Jack Roper in five rounds, will return to the ring next Thursday night to meet Jake Kilrain in a scheduled ten-round battle at Jimmy Murray's Culver City arena.

Kilrain is a dusky battler almost as big as Godfrey and he has been on the winning end of many fights in Chicago, Denver and in the Northwest. He made his local debut at Pasadena recently against a big heavyweight named Gunboat Smith and displayed his knockout punch before the first round was half over.

"CAN I GET STATION K-O-K-O?"

Tommy O'Brien has but one idea when he is in the ring. It is to knock his opponent out. He believes he will score a K.O. when he meets Baby Joe Gans at the Olympic Tuesday night. He is tuning in on KOKO.

HEAVIES PUZZLE LEONARD

Benny Knows Something Big is Going to Pop But He's Not Just Sure Who Principals Will Be

BY BENNY LEONARD

(Retired Lightweight Champion of the World)

NEW YORK, June 18. (Exclusive)—There are premonitory meetings and rumblings in the heavyweight division that presage at least one big outdoor heavyweight match in the East this season. Whether it will be Dempsey and Sharkey, Dempsey and Tunney or Tunney and Sharkey, I for one am willing to confess I don't know, but I feel confident that Gene Tunney will defend his title against someone this fall.

BENNY LEONARD

Tunney sat at the ringside in the Yankee Stadium a few weeks ago and watched intently while Jack Sharkey of Boston, disposed of Jim Maloney, also of Boston, in five workmanlike rounds. Tunney saw Sharkey do a very efficient and convincing job on his fellow-citizen.

Shortly after that Gene quietly hied himself to the solitude and open spaces of Speculator, and began a systematic course of training. He took Lou Fink, his trainer, with him, and they began a carefully planned preparation calculated to put the champion back into the physical condition he attained at the time he met Jack Dempsey in the huge amphitheater in the Sesquicentennial grounds in Philadelphia.

TUNNEY HARD AT WORK

And now for a fortnight or so, the heavyweight champion of the world has been working, working hard, getting into fighting condition. It is an amazing thing, but this is the first time on record—certainly the first time within the vista of my memory—that a heavyweight champion of the world was able to so completely submerge himself from the public gaze while training for a championship battle.

Heretofore, whenever the holder of the title betook himself to a training camp, no matter how remote, the scribes and the fans immediately began infesting the place and there were reports of every action, actual and imaginary, of the title-holder.

But up to date, nary a word of Gene Tunney's condition, of his training, of what he's been doing has come out of Speculator to the general public.

What with all the ballyhoo about Jack Dempsey's threatened comeback the talk of a match between Jack Sharkey and Dempsey in the Yankee Stadium on July 21, Dempsey's sudden flying trip to New York, and his edict, issued practically on the eve of his boarding the train that unless Tex Rickard guaranteed him more than 15 per cent of the gate receipts for a battle with Gene Tunney he wouldn't fight anybody for Rickard, I began to wonder just what it was all about and I bethought myself of the world's champion feverishly at work in sleepy Speculator.

BENNY GETS "LOW DOWN"

And then I ran across Abe Bachner, big sporting-goods manufacturer of Gloversville, the nearest approach to a real town in the vicinity of the place where Tunney is training. Abe knows Tunney, and he knows Lou Fink. The champion's trainer breaks up the monotony of camp life by visiting Bachner a couple of times a week.

Bachner gave me the "low down" on the champion.

"He's working like a beaver, Benny," he said, "and don't let anyone tell you he don't need the work. He's never been a dissipating chap, but he has taken on a lot of weight. It isn't the tubby fat, but neither is it hard muscle. One of the things that impressed me was this: Soon after he arrived at Speculator he came to my place to get a wind-breaker—sort of leather short coat. I had given him one when he was up there last year and I was surprised to find that this time he required one four sizes larger. Just think, Benny, four sizes. So you can see how he's filled out.

"Fink says he has already taken off quite a lot of weight, and that he's rounding into a real routine that will soon have him going full blast. Lou confided to me that Gene's real objective is Sharkey. Although the champion hasn't said it, he regards Sharkey as far more dangerous than Dempsey, according to Fink."

HITCH MAY OCCUR

From this I can't help thinking that perhaps there might be some sort of hitch that will prevent Dempsey and Sharkey from meeting on July 21, and that this battle will be sidetracked entirely and everything concentrated on a Tunney-Sharkey contest in the fall.

Dempsey seems to be losing that attribute which helped to make him such a tremendous drawing card with fight fans, an attribute that Gene Tunney lacks, and is responsible for the fact that Gene can go into training to defend his title without causing much more than a slight ripple of interest.

I will explain what I mean: Dempsey drew great crowds because they knew he loved to fight. The Manassa mauler didn't think about the "gate" or what he was going to get for his work in the ring. He went in with the spirit of competition, the desire for victory above all else, in him. True enough, he got big wads of dough for some of his later fights, but it was Jack Kearns who attended to these things and Dempsey was unsullied, in the public mind, by "commercializing" the sport. The odium of "commercializing the sport" was Kearns' but the fight fan looked upon Dempsey more in the light of a "professional amateur," if you get what I mean, and strangely enough, believe it or not, the sport fan will pay more and quicker to see a great amateur than he will a professional.

FIGHTER DRAWS CROWDS

That is the secret of a great drawing card's popularity in professional fighting. In this game the idea of actual "striving for supremacy" is strongest, the fighter who gets real good and impresses the customers that he is in there for sheer love of fighting, is the one who draws the shekels into the box office. Witness Battling Nelson, Stanley Ketchel, Knockout Brown, Harry Greb and latterly kids like Phil McGraw and Ace Hudkins. These last two rather ordinary fighters, if you will, but their eagerness in the fray got the crowd with them, and they were drawing cards.

I will confess that I think most of my drawing power, if any, came largely because I expressed a willingness to fight anybody, and actually enjoyed the contest.

Gene Tunney always has, candidly enough, let it be known that he was in the game for the money he could make out of it. This proves costly to him in mass popularity.

ADVICE TO JACK

And now, Dempsey, when he begins to talk about wanting more than 15 per cent to fight Tunney will hurt his own drawing power. You know he's now in the position of being the challenger, and the rule here of your boxing commission that challenger shall be satisfied with 12½ per cent. Mind you, I don't blame Jack for getting all he can, but Jack don't you think that this attitude will make the fans think that you are going in more for the loser's end in mind than the regaining of the title? They'll think you haven't confidence in yourself.

Well, Tex Rickard said this would be a great year for heavyweights. I'm not so light myself as I used to be.

DOPE SCRAMBLE IN OLYMPIC GO

O'Brien-Gans Return Battle Sure to be Close

Negro Lightweight Confident of Reversing Verdict

Tommy in Shape Again After Loss to Gonzales

Baby Joe Gans was a favorite to beat Tommy O'Brien when they fought over a month ago, some of the "smart money" making the black lightweight as strong as a two-to-one favorite when they went into the ring.

The dope is pretty well scrambled now between the two for their return engagement at the Olympic Tuesday night.

O'Brien with a terrific body attack punished Gans probably the most local fans ever saw him take. Many believed that Gans would never fight O'Brien again. But after three winning fights he is right back on top. Gans looked the best he has been since he won from Mushy Callahan when he defeated Young Gonzales.

Gonzales proved a surprise when he waded right into O'Brien, floored him and was getting none the worst of it when Tommy fouled him.

RAH FOR BABY

After that showing Gonzales was given an even chance with Gans, but Baby Joe won all by himself and had the Mexican knocked out just eight seconds before the final bell in the tenth round when the referee halted the battle.

Gans claims to have profited by his O'Brien defeat and will fight a different kind of scrap this time. He has perfected a defense for O'Brien's right to the body.

"I was foolish to take the punishment I did before from O'Brien," says Gans.

"After I had let him pummel my kidneys for a couple of rounds I didn't have any strength in my legs to fight back. If I can't keep O'Brien off any other way this time I'll slug it out with him and one of us will get knocked out. I think I can hit just as hard as he can."

O'Brien has a perfect alibi for his poor showing against Gonzales.

"My hands were sore and I couldn't punch—and when I can't punch any youngster might look good against me," says O'Brien.

O'Brien has had a thirty-day rest and has been training for two weeks. He was originally scheduled to box Callahan for the 140-pound title on the 21st inst. and his intensive training was really for Callahan—not Gans.

With good hands O'Brien is liable to whip anybody.

O'Brien says that all his hitting power is not in his advertised right.

IT IS HIS LEFT

"In most of my knockouts I started my opponents on the road to going down with a left hand," says Tommy. "I only finish the job with the right."

Both Gans and O'Brien are best known by their right hands. But Gans, like Tommy, has scored many knockdowns with his left.

With Gans in his best condition and O'Brien's hands in good shape this fight should be a slugging match.

Gans has learned that he can't beat O'Brien by playing a waiting game and the black boy is expected to take the play away from him at the start just as he did Gonzales.

Matchmaker Wad Wadhams will try to send the winner of this fight against Callahan later this summer. Either bout would be a natural.

PHEASANTS MOVVNG INTO ADJACENT LANDS

LEMOORE, June 18.—Pheasants secured from the State Fish and Game Commission and planted on a reserve of several thousand acres on the Heinlen ranch, west of this city, are evidently working out into adjacent territory. Several of the birds have been seen in near-by places, the latest report being from Roy Vucovich, who saw one of the male birds in his vineyard Sunday, north of Grangeville. Mr. Vucovich is an enthusiast on the protection of game birds and states that many quail on his ranch have become almost as tame as his barnyard fowls, building their nests and hatching their young close to his residence and the farm outbuildings. The pheasants are natural roamers, hence it is figured that if protected plantings are made along Kings River, in this county of Kings, and from there on up to foothills along the river in Fresno county, as is proposed by the fish and game clubs of the two counties, there will in a few years be continuous good hunting all along the river. Fresno county already has two plantings in the river section and Kings county one, with more in prospect.

ANDREWS TO MEET MONEJO IN BOUT

SAN JOSE, June 18. (AP)—Louis Andrews, crack Memphis (Tenn.) lightweight, has been matched to meet Johnny Monejo of Portland in the ten-round main event here next Tuesday night. Andrews has been winning in San Francisco rings and is said to be a real whirlwind in action.

In the ten-round semi-wind-up Bobby Cox, Los Angeles middleweight, faces Joe Vargas of Fresno.

Three other bouts fill out the card.

FORGOT HIS "MANNERS"

Sister's Beau: Here little man, put this in your bank.

Six-year-old: Oh, look. Mummy, Mr. Brown gave me a penny.

Ma: Well, dear, you should say—

Six-year-old: Yes, I know I should say "Thank you," but I was so s'prised I forgot. You said he hadn't a cent.—[Hamilton Herald.

DEMPSEY STILL SPUTTERING

PHOENIX (Ariz.) June 18. (AP)—The Dempsey-Sharkey fight, scheduled for New York on July 21, will not be staged unless the former heavyweight champion receives a definite and satisfactory reply from Tex Rickard today, Dempsey indicated here last night as he passed through Phoenix en route East where he expects to engage in several bouts this summer.

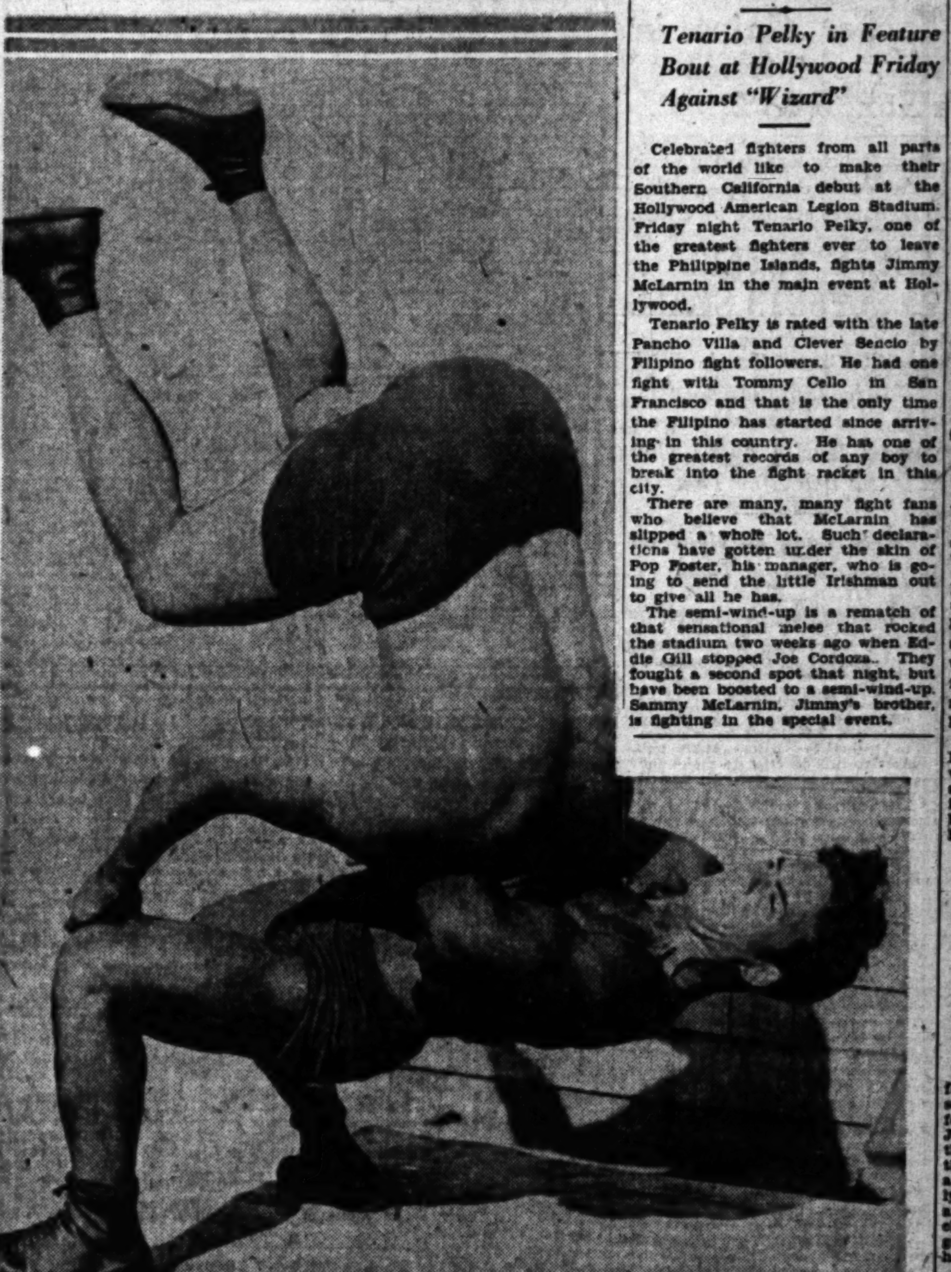
"Whether I meet Sharkey first or Sharkey and Tunney are matched makes little difference," Dempsey said. "If Tunney decides to meet Sharkey then I will meet the winner, but I would prefer to engage in two or three good scraps to get back into shape."

Dempsey looked the part of a fighter when he stepped off the limited at the union station. A full day's growth of beard on his well-tanned face made him look plenty rugged. "And I am feeling fine," Dempsey declared.

There are several other promoters willing to stage the Dempsey-Sharkey fight, the former champion declared. But Jack will wait until he arrives in the East before closing for any other bout—at any rate, the bout cannot be staged by July 21 unless the agreement is reached this morning, Dempsey declared.

A REVERSE HEADLOCK

And the gentleman applying same is none other than the handsome Hellenic exponent of the manly art of 'rasslin'—Jimmy Londos—who meets "Tex" Jones in the main event of Lou Daro's wrestling soiree at the Olympic this week.



BOXING HELPS THE VETS

Over $300,000 Collected for Benefit of the Veterans' Home from Fistic Encounters

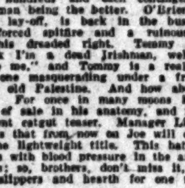
SACRAMENTO, June 18. (AP)—Indications that the supervised manly art of self-defense in California is progressing along staid business lines are contained in the latest data released by Secretary Walter A. Yarwood of the State Athletic Commission which covers the State's share of the receipts and the total attendance at the shows. The commission to date has collected $349,889.50 for the benefit of the veterans' home, the only purpose for which it can be used.

Out of the total collections since the commission was created there existed on May 31 an accumulated excess income of $306,084. From this the Legislature recently appropriated $171,000 through the Governor's budget for barracks at the veterans' home at Yountville, which, when paid, will leave a fund of $135,084.25 as the nucleus for a new fund for the 1929 Legislature to draw against.

During May the State collected $8499.64 as its share of the gates, while during May, 1926, the receipts were $9695.27 and $8011.59 during May of two years ago. These months were the quietest in the boxing game during the respective years.

A brief chart of the commission's activities in collecting funds for the veterans' home from the boxing exhibitions shows the following:

	1927	1926	1925
Fights to date	98	103	113
Total gates to date	$170,135.35	$190,669.29	$193,023.82
Receipts to date	56,823.88	64,781.64	59,283.95
Total receipts	56,823.88	146,294.30	146,769.01



CAULIFLOWER ALLEY NOTES

Well, well, who'd have thunk it—our old pals, Tommy O'Brien and Baby Joe Gans to muss the mitts again in the stalwart precincts of the Olympic Auditorium—this time next Tuesday night without a moon's eclipse. In the offing sits the ambassador of wisdom, known to betting satellites as Silas Masters, chuckling to himself, "Isn't it a pip?" And, Si knows. No other two pugilists on or off the canvas today are subject to more fanning bees than are these biffing birds. Each numbers his henchmen by the hundreds and each contingent is nuts on its man being the better. O'Brien, after a salutary lay-off, is back in the bustle again with reinforced spitfire and a ruinous strengthening of his dreaded right. Tommy says: "If you think I'm a dead Irishman, well, just try to wake me," and Tommy is a real flannel-mouth, not one masquerading under a frontispiece from dear old Palestine. And how about Gansy, old boy? For once in many moons he has a clean bill of sale in his anatomy, and is as fit as an ancient catgut teaser. Manager Litchtenstein declares that from now on Joe will do a Lindbergh to the lightweight title. This battle will be for keeps with blood pressure in the ascendency at all times; so, brothers, don't miss it, just drop the old slippers and hearth for one night.

Capt. Corola, speaking for Dario Barron, regarded by many as the greatest lad of his weight that ever came from where frijoles blossom in all their virginal purity, has this to say: "Dario's hand is still sore and I won't let him take a chance with it for a week or so yet. When it heals, he'll be ready for the best in the business. I play no favorites with my boy, they all look alike to him."

Gee, how enthusiasm blows hot and cold in a short space of time! Last Tuesday night down close to the ringside, where crushed rosin, Lady Nicotine, sublimed liniments and an aroma of warmed-over corpuscles mingle in a gay saturnalia, one of our leading fans contorted in a maelstrom of frenzy. The moment Vacca clipped Brownie to the floor, up dashed our bug with hyena abandon, tearing the very air into shreds with: "The greatest flyweight I've ever seen, why, he can lick a roomful of La Barbas."

Then, he got busy conveying his appraisement to every friend within the hearing of his voice. He just flopped around in an agony of delirium as Brown staggered to his feet, and Vacca tried a finishing poke. From then on, however, the bug's pulse began to slacken as Brown gave a wonderful exhibition of defensive skill. About the end of the sixth round, one seat near the ringside proved to be a parking-place for petrified motion. Then, as Ernie Clark raised the newsie's hand at the end of the tenth spasm, the hot and cold baby evaporated with: "How in the hell did Vacca ever last five rounds with La Barba?"

This arrow was not shot into the air at random, but was poised at Johnny Schiff just after our wide-awake little arbiter rendered his ukase in the Blake-Tondorf tiff: "Say, Schiff, there's two eclipses of the moon tonight, and the other one is under that bone above your eyes."

Jack Mandell, a 115-pounder from Louisville, Ky., is proving a sensation at the Main Street Athletic Club. He shoots 'em fast and furious, is clever, can hit hard and is game to the core. The gang regards him as the toughest proposition that has come out of the Middle West in some time. All eyes on Jack.

Gotta hand it to Jimmy Murray, the man that belled the cat at Culver City. Jimmy is contemplating putting on George Godfrey and Neil Clisby at Culver City toward the end of this month. Now, here is where the wool should fly, but from which man the deponent sayeth not. Cherokee Tom Jones uses powerful lenses in speaking of his man Clisby, and hints at nothing short of championship honors. As for Godfrey—he just smiles in his quiet little way, and purrs: "Let's go." This is the biggest natural, from a sable point of view, that has loomed on the local fistic horizon for some time. Shoot it, Jimmy, and if you don't dislodge Rip Van Winkle from the sporting precincts of Culver City, our household goods are yours.

Fred Winsor says that the fault of many fighters nowadays is that they go into the ring with their shoes on backward.

Bear down on the sounding alchemy—Joe Rivers has started in at the Main Street to teach the manly art of self-offense. Here's where Joseph should shine. Many still regard him as one of the niftiest boxers that ever laid hands on a glove. Joe says between breaths: "Just put a pulmotor under my belt and right now I could make a clean sweep of all these would-be lightweights that are growing fat at the present time. They throw a lot of punches any old way without accuracy. What accuracy they have is in their heels."

The white ants (moochers) are beginning to pester poor little Morrie Cohan. On his opening night in Pasadena, one, claiming he was the sporting editor of some arsuburb sheet between the Pacific Ocean and Mt. Baldy, asked for a leather ticket. "You see," he pleaded, "I want to report the big event blow by blow." Morrie came through with a dull, sickening thud, but when the moocher pressed for a double header, the Pasadena promoter beefed, "How come?" "Well, you see, it's this way—I will keep track of the right-hand blows and my assistant, the left." Cohan's only reply was: "You win."

YOUTHFUL ACE

Frank Collier, a high school boy of Auburn, Ala., recently made his second hole in one while playing a foursome on the local links.

FILIPINO TO BATTLE McLARNIN

Tenario Pelky in Feature Bout at Hollywood Friday Against "Wizard"

Celebrated fighters from all parts of the world like to make their Southern California debut at the Hollywood American Legion Stadium. Friday night Tenario Pelky, one of the greatest fighters ever to leave the Philippine Islands, fights Jimmy McLarnin in the main event at Hollywood.

Tenario Pelky is rated with the late Pancho Villa and Clever Sencio by Filipino fight followers. He had one fight with Tommy Cello in San Francisco and that is the only time the Filipino has started since arriving in this country. He has one of the greatest records of any boy to break into the fight racket in this city.

There are many, many fight fans who believe that McLarnin has slipped a whole lot. Such declarations have gotten under the skin of Pop Foster, his manager, who is going to send the little Irishman out to give all he has.

The semi-wind-up is a rematch of that sensational melee that rocked the stadium two weeks ago when Eddie Gill stopped Joe Cordoza. They fought a second spot that night, but have been boosted to a semi-wind-up. Sammy McLarnin, Jimmy's brother, is fighting in the special event.

MURPHY AND BRUCE TANGLE AT HARBOR

Matchmaker Moffett of the Wilmington Bowl has signed Larry Murphy to meet Sammy Bruce, Memphis negro flash, in the ten-round main attraction Wednesday night.

Bruce is said to be one of the cleverest boxers to come out of the South in years and his debut will be watched with keen interest by Southern California matchmakers.

Joe Bell and Billy Blake welters, clash in the six-round semi-wind-up. Benny Young faces Johnny Gonzales in the six-round special.

WILL OPEN FOX HILL'S LABOR DAY

Members Will Celebrate Completion of 18-Hole Unit With Tourney

The west course of the Fox Hills Country Club, which will be opened for initial play Labor Day, will measure approximately 6500 yards from the regular tees and will have a par of 70, it was announced yesterday by Billy Bell, golf-course expert in charge, following a recheck of the layout.

Bell's new figures show that the first nine will measure approximately 3300 yards with a par of 35, while the last nine will be some 3200 yards in length but like the first nine will have a par of 35.

The shortest hole on the course is the par three eleventh, which measures 145 yards from tee to green. This hole is an exact duplicate of the famous eleventh of St. Andrews in Scotland. The longest is the par 5 fourth hole which is approximately 520 yards in length.

A complete card of the links as it will stand when opened for play on Labor Day was announced by Bell as follows:

Golfing Aids Batting Eye of Babe Ruth

Babe Ruth, the New York Yankee's famous "Sultan of Swat," finds golf a great help to his batting eye, according to a letter from the "Bambino" to a friend in this city.

"Of course, a golf ball doesn't move until you hit it — and I have seen the time I took a 400-yard swing and the ball still hadn't moved," Babe said—"but just the same, concentrating on a golf ball is a great aid to me when I face a pitcher.

"Much of my success as a long-distance slugger has been traced to strength, but the truth of the matter is, you use nearly the same coordination of muscles in baseball as in golf. 'Pressing' in baseball is just as dangerous as trying to force golf shots," Babe believes.

WINNER AND RUNNER-UP IN NATIONAL OPEN

Tommy Armour, soft-spoken British-born professional of the Congressional (Washington, D. C.) Club, after dropping a birdie three on the last hole of the open championship for a 301 to tie Harry Cooper, last Thursday, staged a sensational eighteen-hole shot-making tour to win the play-off for the crown with a 76 the day following. The youthful paid-to-play instructor of the local El Sereno Club after collecting much of the glory in the greatest championship the world has ever known, was unable to keep in front of Armour in the extra eighteen-hole play-off and required 79 strokes.

WESTERN GOLFERS ENTRAIN

Windy City Entrants for Amateur Charter Special Train for Seattle

CHICAGO, June 18. (AP)—Midwestern contestants in the western amateur golf championship at Seattle, Wash., July 18-23, will leave Chicago in a special train July 9, with several stops en route for diversion, golfing and sightseeing.

CHANDLER EGAN.

The program for the event, issued by Secretary R. A. Wood of Chicago, set July 5 as the closing date for entries. Qualifying rounds will begin Monday, July 18, with 18 holes Monday and Tuesday to decide the thirty-one low scorers to join Frank Dolph of Seattle, defending his crown, in the match rounds for the title.

This is the second western amateur title event ever to be held on the Pacific Coast in twenty-eight years.

HOLE IN ONE WINS TITLE

Experts Claim Luck Secondary Consideration in Dropping Tee Shots for Aces; Many Champs Have Failed to Join Charmed Circle

BY BUNKER

Well, another open golf championship has come and gone. This calls to mind an ambition of a friend that he will live long enough to witness the following events:

FORE GLUNK
A.P.

First, the holding of a national open championship at the Garden City Club, or some other club where the eighteenth hole is a short one.

Secondly, that in this championship a player shall come up to the last tee needing a 2 to tie for the lead.

Third, that said player shall play a hole-in-one and thereby win the championship.

Not many courses have an eighteenth hole that would permit a national title to be won by an ace. Garden City is one. But I doubt if my friend will attain his ambition.

Not that it is impossible. Witness what George Gadd, member of the British Ryder Cup team, did one year in the Welsh open.

At the last hole, measuring 150 yards, Gadd needed a 2 to tie.

"Go on, now, old man," said an enthusiast, "you can make it."

"Oh, I can do that," said George. "In fact I can do better—I can get a 1."

And he did!

Golfers long have had an idea that holes-in-one are mere matters of luck. But what is one to deduce from a story Frederick McLeod once told me. The former open champion, I may say, kept his face completely straight at the time.

> "I gave 13-year-old John Owens of my club at Washington a half-hour lesson in driving one day," said Freddie. "He left me to join his father at the 180-yard eighth hole and immediately, using his driver, made a hole-in-one. Some teacher, eh?"

I have told this story before, but repeat it because it seems to show what may be accomplished by hard study—under expert teaching.

But hard study and determination are not all that is required. There must be something else in the psychology of the man who would be a successful maker of holes-in-one. The following incident in which George Low, a former Metropolitan open champion, who once came within an ace of winning the national open championship figured, is illustrative.

When George was professional at the Baltusrol Club, he went out one afternoon with three members, A. G. Sherer, Frank Macdonald and W. L. Gerry, playing their best ball.

It was cold and windy, and George filled the amateurs' hearts with sadness by clicking off three fours in a row, a bit better than any of them could do.

The fourth hole measured 120 yards. As George climbed on the tee he said genially:

"Well, now, what club shall I use here?"

One of his opponents' caddies spoke up and told him how the wind was blowing.

"Oh, but you must not do that," said George in a gently reproving voice. "It's against the rules for you to help me. Only my own caddy can do that."

He turned to his boy.

"How about it, laddie?" he asked.

Low's caddie happened to be not particularly bright. Also he was a little green. He waved his arms like a windmill, but said nothing. It did not mean a thing.

"Thanks, very much," said George.

He had a mashie in his hand, but he returned it to his bag and drew out a mashie niblick.

Then he holed an ace!

Sherer, Macdonald and Gerry stopped the match right then and there. The proper thing to do seemed to go back to the clubhouse and quaff a toast to the redoubtable Mr. Low.

The moral of this, apparently, is that holes in one are more apt to fall to the man who is genially open to proper suggestion, and who refuses to take the slightest advantage over his opponent, than to the niggardly, grasping type who will do anything at all that promises to assist him.

Here's another corroborative incident.

Tony Matola, while professional at the Lansdowne Country Club, Philadelphia, was playing in a foursome at Philmont.

At the 190-yard fourth hole one of the players addressed Tony.

"I've got just the club for this hole," he said. "Here, play with it and hole it."

"Fine," replied Tony. "I sure will."

His shot was on the pin all the way and the ball vanished in the cup as lovely an ace as anyone could imagine.

"Wow!" shouted the other players.

"Aw, that's nothing much," explained Tony. "Let me tell you something. Any time anyone offers to lend you a strange club on a short hole, you take 'em up.

"Yes, sir, the last time somebody did that to me was out at the Merion Club. It was at the ninth hole. And believe me, I made a hole in one then, too."

STALEY'S STICK WORK

Gale Staley, Los Angeles second baseman, is the third best hitter in the Coast League right now. Staley batted an even .500 on Friday and brought his season's batting mark up to .368. Staley had participated in forty-four contests. Elmer Smith and Paul Strand, two Portland outfielders, are the only Coast League players sporting higher batting marks than the young Los Angeles infielder.

MRS. HURD GREATEST CHAMPION

Tricky Putt Wins First Title in Scotland for Titlist

PHILADELPHIA, June 18. (AP)—Mrs. Dorothy Campbell Hurd, who has won more important titles than any other woman in golf, still thrills at the memory of that winning hole in her first Scotch title victory.

"I can't recall anything that has happened on a golf course since, that has thrilled me more," Mrs. Hurd says.

Mrs. Hurd's national victories began in 1905 on the famous course at North Berwick, Scotland.

"It was my first approach to a title," she recalls. "The tournament had created the usual interest of a championship in Scotland. A half holiday had been declared. Working people had been declared. Working people and school children swarmed over the links.

"My opponent in that final was Molly Graham, who afterward won the British championship. We played a hard match. We were still all square at the end of the eighteenth. On the nineteenth green, before one of the greatest and most intensely interested galleries I ever faced, I needed a little slippery downhill putt of a yard and a half to win the match. It seemed a great deal longer. I knew it was not, but still it seemed an impossible distance between the ball and the cup.

> "I stroked carefully, fearful that I would over-run the cup. When that ball disappeared with a little tinny sound I felt as though I had accomplished the greatest thing it is possible for a person to do."

A tabulation of Mrs. Hurd's achievements on the links shows the following national championships: Scotland, 1905, 1906, 1908; Great Britain, 1909, 1911; Canada, 1910, 1911, 1912; United States, 1909, 1910, 1924.

Besides these, she has won during the past fifteen years three north and south championships, three Western Pennsylvania titles, three Berthellyn cups, two southeastern titles at Augusta, two Philadephia city championships and two Belleair Heights titles.

"I consider the Scotch championships among the most important of these," Mrs. Hurd says. "The Canadian are always rated above them when I am written about, but I think the Scotch tournaments a far greater test of golf."

Mrs. Porter and Robinson will play Mrs. Hill and Smith to determine which team faces Miss Gladman and Chandler for the silver trophies offered by the club in its invitational mixed doubles tournament.

MORE THAN 400 EXPECTED TO PLAY IN CLUB AFFAIR

Coleman Brothers Great Defensive Unit in Annual West Coast Interclub Classic

More than 400 golfers, representating the cream of the local amateur fraternity, will start qualifying, 18 holes, in the annual Invitational tournament of the California Country Club, tomorrow. While many of the best-known players in Southern California will be enrolled in the first-day field tomorrow, the greatest delegation of interclub stars have signed to medal for match-play rating Tuesday.

The California event has yearly drawn a record entry of more than 400 contestants and the affair next week promises to result in an even larger enrollment. In very fine shape, the championship layout is well adapted to the heavy play that will start tomorrow and starting entrants from both the first and tenth tees, if necessary, will result in little, or no confusion.

GEORGE CORNES.

Starting times have been so arranged as to do away with all undue congestion, one of the hardest things a medalist has to contend with. California club hospitality, engineered by the brand-new executive, Johnny Read, will leave absolutely nothing to be desired. Visitors are courteously greeted upon arrival at the club grounds, escorted to the locker room and prepared for what will turn out to be the most enjoyable test imaginable.

As in former years, qualifying play will be divided into three classes. Entrants medaling for places in the ten flights, scheduled to start match play Wednesday. There will be an 18-hole medal consolation round Friday, for players defeated in first-round matches—and nonqualifiers and a two-ball mixed foursome Sunday will conclude the invitational.

California is particularly fortunate in having such splendid golfers as the three Coleman brothers, Fay, Lester and Chester, to defend club honors. Together with Johnny Mescall, Dick Smith, George Shaw and several others, the defensive unit is going to be just about strong enough to upset the representative field of golfing visitors already signed for the play.

E. R. Hurst, "Father" of the California Club, has handed down the reins of leadership to Johnny Read. Read has always been one of the most popular and progressive members of the club and will carry on the work so ably started by Mr. Hurst. Before dropping out of the executive position, ex-President Hurst engineered the purchase of the club property, that skillful maneuvering that met with the hearty co-operation and approval of all members, so the California Club today, after a successful past of five years, is really entering a future that should not be surpassed for brilliance.

Every entrant in the invitational starting tomorrow will enjoy the affair. The California course, carefully groomed by W. O. Pryor, exacts a certain physical toll that will single out championship contestants before the end of the week.

Starting times for the invitational proper may possibly be reserved by phoning the club, EMpire 4146, at once, but time reservations for the mixed foursome Sunday should be requested at once.

MISSION BELLS PLAY TODAY

The Mission Bell Soap team will take on the Virginia City baseball squad on the latter's diamond this afternoon, Manager T. Truehill announced.

HOME RUNS FOR SMITH

Elmer Smith has bagged nineteen home runs and with any degree of luck should pass the forty mark before October rolls around.

ARROWHEAD TOURNEY OPENS NEXT MONTH

The second annual invitational tournament of the Lake Arrowhead Golf Club will be staged Friday, Saturday and Sunday, July 8, 9 and 10. R. K. Gilbert scored a brilliant 78-12-66 to win first prize in the annual Charles E. Van Loan trophy play for members of the Los Angeles Country Club yesterday. The affair, held in connection with a medal play with handicap competition, drew a fine entry. J. M. Arneill, 73-4-68, leading Class A, while H. W. Porter, 86-14-72, and J. T. Parsons, 88-16-72, tied in Class B.

WILHELM COPS WRONG "BIRDIES"

PORTLAND (Or.) June 18. (AP)—Rudie Wilhelm of Portland, amateur golf champion of Oregon, and now participating in the Pacific Northwest open championship tournament at Victoria, B. C., is in trouble with Federal officials here because of two birdies.

He has been charged in Federal court here with violation of the Migratory Bird Act in that he had in cold storage two dead mallard ducks more than ten days after close of the duck season, January 1, last. After discovery of the ducks by a Federal game warden, Wilhelm signed a waiver of ownership, transferring the ducks to the government. Filing of the charge against Wilhelm followed voluminous correspondence between the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Justice.

MRS. TRABUE AGAIN NAMED TO HEAD GOLF AUXILIARY

MRS. A.E.D TRABUE

Mrs. A. E. D. Trabue, a member of the Hollywood Country Club and probably the most progressive factor in West Coast feminine circles, has been again named to head the Women's Auxiliary of the Southern California Golf Association. Mrs. Trabue has been in charge since the organization of the local auxiliary, five years ago. Each season has witnessed skillfully directed progress and the tentative program outlined for the coming season will be even more comprehensive than the banner years that have preceeded. Mrs. Trabue has the unanimous support and co-operation of all local women golfers, and attributes all of her success to this paramount feature. During the coming season, the Southland will entertain the women's State championship.

TWENTY-FIVE a second! Fifteen hundred a minute! Faster than your imagination can race! That is the almost unbelievable number of explosions in a single cylinder of a modern, high-speed motor. And those explosions pursue each other so rapidly that they almost fuse into a steady flame of withering heat.

That is why lubrication authorities recommend Veedol, the oil that gives the "film of protection"—a film tested to withstand heat 100 degrees hotter than the hottest friction spot in your motor.

Veedol is made from the pick of the Eastern crude oils, in the great Tide Water refinery at Bayonne, N. J. All of the experience and skill acquired in more than half a century of refining are used in maintaining the high quality of Veedol.

For sure motor protection at all times, buy Veedol from any dealer displaying the orange and black Veedol sign. If you drive a Ford, use Veedol Forzol. Always ask for Veedol Lubricants by name.

Don Douglas Deserts Airplanes to Become Commodore of Latest Southland Yacht Cl

SANTA MONICA GOES YACHTING

Bay City Yacht Club Off to Brilliant Season

Nautical Bugs Active Under New Stimulus

Skippers to Sail Craft in First Race Today

DONALD DOUGLAS

SANTA MONICA, June 18. (Exclusive)—This city is setting sail to ship out as one of Southern California's leading yacht harbors under the command of the Santa Monica Yacht Club, affiliated with the Santa Monica Athletic Club, with Donald Douglas, manufacturer of the 'round - the - world airplanes and also yacht designer and builder, as commodore.

The Santa Monica Yacht Club is a comparatively new institution, but has already formulated ambitious ideas and has persuaded the city to construct a small boat landing alongside the Santa Monica Municipal Pier. Ultimately, the club has hopes of seeing the construction of a great breakwater beyond the municipal pier, which would convert the Santa Monica waters into as handy a yacht harbor as the Southland possesses.

Some ten boats with a total valuation approximating $50,000 are now possessed by the club as a unit and by individual members. The total membership at the present writing is sixty. With the installation of the expected breakwater, however, and even before, the membership is expected to soar to new limits. As a starter, a membership of sixty is found exceedingly satisfactory, Douglas says, for all of the lot are firm boosters of the sea-going sport.

With Douglas as commodore, the Santa Monica Yacht Club has named Walter Gage vice-commodore, Ted Magahan rear-commodore, Harry Strangman secretary and George Wilson fleet captain.

The club's sailing equipment consists of four similar design "knockabouts" for racing designed and built by Douglas. Aside from the club craft, there is Douglas's Barbara Jean, a forty-seven-foot schooner, the Albert, a forty-foot sloop, H. Lipp's fifty-foot cruiser and other beautiful boats.

This afternoon the Santa Monica City Commissioners will be royal guests at a yacht menu. Douglas will take Mayor Herman Michel and Commissioners John Morton and Frank Helton aboard his Barbara Jean for a brisk cruise over waters north of the palisades city.

Today will also introduce the Santa Monica Yacht Club's racing season, with a six-mile race to be sailed over a course to the north and northwest of the Santa Monica municipal pier and return. The club's four similar design boats will contend in this season inaugural. Skippers for the racing vessels have not been announced.

Plans are in the embryo stage for a race from Santa Monica to Bill Wrigley's Catalina Island. A definite date for the event, the biggest sponsored by the club, with prizes, etc., will be given out as soon as a few advance details are cleared.

The new yacht organization for the Santa Monica Bay District is the outgrowth of an old love for yachting that has lain dormant in the hearts of beach residents for years. With the club evidently now well planted and able to feed itself, so to speak, a constant improvement of the yachting situation is looked forward to.

Douglas and his fellow-tars visualize a magnificent harbor with sumptuous and wondrous yachts from every part of Southern California floating gently on the breakwater-protected port off Santa Monica's famous beach. "We've started the ball of enthusiasm rolling and we won't let it stop until Santa Monica Bay assumes its rightful position in the yachting world," Douglas stated.

Moffatt Boys Win Premier Sport Honors

SANTA ANA, June 18.—Two brothers, John and Manley Moffatt, won the highest rating in the decathlon events held among the boys of Santa Ana High School, according to figures disclosed today by Coach Walter Scott, head of the physical education department. John made a total of 7398 points and Manley was second with 7195. By making the highest score John won the title to the decathlon championship this year, the first time that the tests have been made. Every boy in school was required to enter the competition.

The decathlon events are to be held each year, according to Coach Scott. The series of tests include football, punting football, passing, basketball scoring, putting the shot, sprinting, high jumping, broad jumping, baseball throwing, swimming, push up and pull up.

Marks will be kept as permanent records of the physical education department. None of the other students in the Class A division were even close to the Moffatt brothers. The students were divided into three classifications on a basis of their exponents of weight, height and age. Then the scores made in the three divisions were compared. Most of those rating high have made records for themselves on the gridiron, basketball court or other athletic activities. A series of eleven events to test the all-around development of physique was required of the boys in decathlon events.

ROVERE ENTERS TORONTO SWIM

Italian Splasher Backed by Angelenos

UMBERTO ROVERE, who spends his spare moments swimming when he isn't singing operas or dispensing Italian dinners, is all set to leave for Toronto July 15, where he will compete in the twenty-one-mile Lake Ontario marathon on August 31. Rovere will be the only swimmer from Los Angeles in the $50,000 race and his excellent showing in the Catalina Channel swim when he came within two and one-half miles of the San Pedro breakwater marks him as a strong contestant for the first prize.

Since the Catalina race, Rovere has learned the crawl stroke which is much faster and not so tiring as the side stroke which he used in the channel dash. With his added speed and stamina, Rovere expects to finish high since he remained in the water until 2:45 a.m. and was still pushing on at the finish, although the currents were against him.

The Italian swimmer has been training diligently for the swim. With George Blewett as trainer, Rovere has been going out every week with "Doc" O'Donnell on board the Mary-O. He claims that he is in much better condition than he was six months ago and his practice trials have verified his confidence.

Although Rovere will swim under the colors of the Union Sportiva Italiano Virtus of San Francisco, he will be more closely connected with Los Angeles since the money for his expenses was raised by the local Italian colony. Several dinners have been held in his honor and he was recently given a beautiful silver loving cup in token of appreciation of his efforts.

Over $2000 was raised to send Rovere and his trained east. He will have approximately two weeks' time to train on the lake and expects to be in prime condition for the start.

Rovere will be competing with many of the greatest long-distance swimmers in the country, including

Umberto Rovere

George Young who won the Catalina swim and Byron Summers of Glendale who beat Young's time.

a—This was given by I. P. Teel to correct 12-16 by John McFarlane in Drummond's Second Revised. If Mr. Teels's play is sound it would prove 26-22 at "c" to be a loss.

b—Here Mr. Teel gave 16-11 and 16-12 and Black wins. At note "c" the British Draught Player says 26-22 draws. Mr. Teels's play for a black win has stood as sound for some twenty years. It also says that 26-23 loses at "c," but Teel has published play showing that it draws.

VALERI SHRANN TO ENTER TORONTO SWIM

Valeri Shrann of Hollywood, a participant of the Catalina swim, has entered the Toronto marathon swim on Lake Ontario, to be held August 31. Miss Shrann was one of the unsuccessful contestants in the recent Catalina Island swim, but is confident of giving a better account of herself in the forthcoming event.

Miss Shrann has had considerable experience in aquatic sports, having navigated the difficult Golden Gate which is considered the toughest stretch of water on the Pacific Coast, and has held the championship since 1915.

The race is approximately twenty-one miles, but is more difficult than the same distance in salt water for the water is less buoyant.

CHICAGO OPEN TO DRAW STARS

CHICAGO, June 18. (AP)—The Chicago open golf tournament, with prizes totaling $3100, was set today for September 12-14, Raymond J. Daley, chairman of the tournament committee of the Chicago District Golf Association, announced. The event, at 72 holes medal play, will be played on the links of the Illinois Golf Club.

SEEK REWARD FOR BATTEN

Carnegie Hero Fund Commission Asked to Pay Tribute to Race Driver Who Averted Probable Panic

INDIANAPOLIS, June 18. (Exclusive)—Application for award of a hero medal from the Carnegie Hero Fund Commission to Norman K. Batten, race driver, seriously burned when his racing car caught fire in the Indianapolis 500-mile speedway race, May 30, has been made by a group of Indianapolis men.

Theodore F. Meyers, manager of the Indianapolis Speedway; F. K. Moskovich, president of the Stutz Motor Car Company; William F. Sturm, member of the A.A.A. contest board, and others, are interested in obtaining the recognition for Batten.

In making application for the Hero Medal, facts attending the daring feat, "the exhaust set fire to his tank as he was coming down the west straightaway more than 100 miles an hour between the grandstands packed with thousands of people, and the officials' pagoda, and pits on the other side of the track. Batten could easily have jumped from his car, letting it run wild on the track or against either wall, where an explosion would have killed many people.

"Instead of doing so he stuck to his seat as long as possible, steering the car away from the cars flashing past, covering almost a mile past the pits and stands. He finally crawled onto the hood of the car, steering with his foot after his arms were so badly burned he could not hold the wheel any longer, and landed his car in a ditch by the far turn, where fire extinguishers could take care of it."

Special Race Will Feature Banning Bill

Shades of the bone-yard!

Ancient and dilapidated specimens of the earliest forerunners of the gas buggy will have their day at Banning July 4, when American Legion officials will stage a race for old cars as one of the novel features of a race program being arranged for the holiday.

Any entry in this special ten-lap event must have a cash value under $25. The owner must be ready to sell his steed for that amount to any possible bidder.

Seven other big races ranging from ten to thirty laps are on the program arranged by the Banning American Legion, and the coast's greatest dirt track drivers will be seen in action.

The Legion speedway at Banning is one of the fastest tracks in the country and the yearly dirt track championship is staged there for the leading drivers. All races are under the supervision of the Banning post of the American Legion.

SOUTHLAND JUNIORS TO PLAY FINAL MIDWICK NET TOURNEY

Southern California's junior tennis stars will ring down the curtain on the Midwick Country Club's historic courts in a championship event July 7, 8 and 9. The famous old playground, made immortal by Bill Tilden, Helen Wills, Little Bill Johnston and other heroes and heroines of the tennis world, will be torn down, and new ones installed immediately after the conclusion of the junior event.

There will be seven events on the program, according to Alfred Wright, who is in charge of the tournament. These include singles and doubles for boys under 18, singles and doubles for girls under 18, singles for boys under 15, singles for girls under 15, and a special event for girls under 13.

Prizes will be offered the winners in the various events, and the Midwick tennis officials will seriously consider sending east the winners to compete in the national junior title events.

All of the local youngsters will take part in the big event, as this popular tournament frequently has proved the starting point for many of the leading net stars in the Southwest. Louise McFarland, national junior singles champion, already has sent in her entry, which insures her special event of a strong contender. She will be closely pressed by Midge Gladman, Peggy James and other local satellites of note.

The tournament is being staged strictly by the Midwick Country Club, under the sanction of the Southern California Tennis Association. Entry blanks have been sent to all Southern California tennis clubs and are available to all eligible candidates. With Ben Gorchakoff, Norval Craig and Johnny Doeg performing in the eastern tournament, a number of unexpected stars are expected to arise.

Bay Gridders Soon to Quit Spring Drill

VENICE, June 18. (Exclusive)—With graduation exercises scheduled for the not too distant future, spring football practice at Venice and Santa Monica high schools is entering into the home stretch, a stage of the preseason training wherein the gridsters look to their summer vacation excursions and the application of the nose to the grindstone in various fields of labor.

The training program of these two schools is watched with keen interest by fellow Bay League institutions because of the Venetians' capture of the varsity grid championship for the past two consecutive seasons, and also because of the reputation of the Samohians as grid terrors of the past. In the time of Coach Vincent (Dutch) Shutt, the beach pigskinners ran up an impressive string of five consecutive Bay League championships, and were the fright of all who dared don moleskins.

MEN AND WOMEN—

JUNE 19, 1927.

DEAR SIR AND MADAM:

For a number of years I've been hiring and training salespeople, thoroughly and successfully, and have helped sell a great deal of real estate in this dear old town. Some time ago I decided to work on the highest class property we have in the city, Miramar Estates, on Beverly Blvd., overlooking the entire bay. Nothing else like it. Priced from $7000 up.

Last week proved to all concerned that it is really easier to sell the best and get volume, provided your campaign is correct. It's taken almost 30 days to pave the way and frame the picture. We are now selling and have an opening for a few more ladies and gentlemen of good appearance and pleasing personality with a good-looking car.

Come in and let's talk it over. I sincerely believe it's the best line-up in the city. Music, Cafe, Tea Gardens, Bridge Parties, Saddle Horses. A different kind of solicitation and a different sales method. If you really want to make money, have a permanent connection with opportunity for advancement, and sell the best, come on, let's go.

CALL MORNINGS
Sincerely,
(Signed)

HOME, SWEET HOME

A home in which every possibility of durability, sunshine, convenience and beauty of surroundings has been made use of to the fullest extent. A home to please those of discriminating and refined taste. The gentle art of the craftsman is everywhere. The sweet scent of roses is wafted on the summer breeze.

You must come and see this home for the builder has with an unerring certainty built it just as you would have it. He has created with unfailing surety that which will please those who demand that certain refinement.

Wonderful large living-room with superb lighting effect, has plate-glass and casement windows to the floor. Equipped with Austrian shades on three sides of the room; the mantle is of Batchelder tile, in soft pastel shades; a real fireplace in excellent effect. Within the large arch between the living and dining-room there are seats and column torchieres in Batchelder tile with Alladin's wonderful lamps. New and original. Very effective.

The description of the house with its alcove bedrooms and a bath that would be the envy of Pompeians, together with many other modern devices, would merit columns of description which, of course, is impossible; therefore, you must see it. You cannot know anything of this house by merely driving by it. Stop and come in. You will be surprised. You will find it all that it is claimed to be. You will not be disappointed.

This house is built for those who can afford a $20,000 home. $5000 down can handle it.

This house is of Spanish bungalow type, with seven large rooms. Three patios. On corner 55x135, in Carthay Center, one block south of Wilshire Blvd.

Attention Farmers

We are not in the real estate business and we are not subdividers, but selling our own lands direct to the public at prices way below other lands of the same character—pasture lands, high class farm lands, both wheat and alfalfa lands—lands suitable for every crop successfully grown in the United States and located in the very center of the State.

Good roads, good climate, good water and plenty of it.

Just think for a minute—finest of wheat land now in crops, only $35 per acre—small down payment, balance over a period of ten years.
DAIRYMEN—Fine alfalfa land, now in alfalfa with gravity water as cheap as $150 per acre.

Don't class this with the average real estate advertisement. Come into the office—now—today, and talk things over and arrange to join one of our free excursions on a three-day trip up to the San Joaquin Valley.

AUTO LOANS— and Financing —75-C

Auto Loan Truth

The Excessive cost of auto loans is due to DELINQUENT PAYMENTS and the consequent expense of collection. Our plan eliminates a major portion of this loss, WHICH IS REFLECTED IN OUR LOW RATES TO BORROWERS. We include a collection fee in all contracts, AND REBATE THE WHOLE SUM SO INCLUDED if payments are made within 5 days after due date. NO INSURANCE IS REQUIRED, or existing policies cancelled, thus effecting another great saving. WE SPECIALIZE IN LARGE LOANS AND REFINANCING at rates impossible to duplicate elsewhere. OUR IMMENSE RESOURCES AND 12 YEARS honorable dealing with the public is our recommendation.

INTEREST $2.50 PER $100 for 6 months' contract, longer time at slightly increased cost.

THE ONLY WAY

Jenny was an excellent domestic help, and Mrs. Wanderfarr never wished for better. But in the matter of pictures Jenny was weak. There was one in particular which showed the leaning tower of Pisa. Every day Mrs. Wanderfarr hung it straight, and every morning Jenny put it crooked. So Mrs. Wanderfarr watched.

"Now, look here, Jenny," she said one morning, "you've hung that picture of the tower crooked again. Just look at it!"

"That's just what I say, mum," returned Jenny, dolefully. "Look at it! The only way to get that tower to hang straight it to hang the picture crooked!"—[Exchange.

HIS GOOD POINT

John was a good husband, but occasionally he would go on a spree while his family got along as best they could.

When he died suddenly the neighbors were shocked, and a kindly woman, chatting over the fence with John's wife, tried to comfort her by telling of John's good points.

"He was such a man of principle," she said.

"And am I not the one to know it?" replied the wife. "Every Saturday night from the first day we were married didn't he come home and place his pay envelope in front of me as regular as a clock? Not once did he miss all the time we were married. Of course, the pay envelope was always empty, but look at the principle of the thing."—[Exchange.

Road to Lake Reported as in Fine Condition

Motorists planning to vacation or week-end at Lake Arrowhead will find splendid road conditions at this time, according to advices to the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California. Waterman Canyon Highway from the foot to Pine Crest is declared in finer condition than ever before, with the entire route, including the switchbacks, now entirely graded, leveled and raked. State highway forces are now oiling this road.

A finishing coat of oil has just been laid on the county road from Pine Crest to Lake Arrowhead, it is stated, and this route has recently been dragged, rolled and scraped level. Thus summer motor travel will find Arrowhead Lake routes in fine shape.

PAVEMENT CLEAR

All pavement has been uncovered and is now open to travel and the controls have been eliminated on the Mountain Springs Grade, reports the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

GOOD CAR YEAR FORECAST

Output of Automobiles to Equal Mark Set by Industry During 1926

DETROIT, June 18. (Exclusive)—With the first half of the year 1927 nearing its close it is evident that the automobile industry will fall considerably short of the excellent showing it made during the corresponding period of one year ago as far as production and sales are concerned. A careful checking up shows the output of passenger cars and trucks will be approximately 2,125,000 units which, if correct will leave the industry more than 300,000 units behind the same period of 1926.

It is evident, however, that conditions this year will be a reversal of those of last. This means that whereas the first half of 1926 showed a large increase over the second half, indications now point to the belief that there is sure to be a stepping up of production all along the line and will show a vast increase over the half just closing. If this be true a summing up at the end of the year will show but little difference in the output of this year compared with the record-breaking mark of last year.

In spite of tremendous production schedules in effect all spring with the exception of Ford Motor Company, the inrush of orders for new cars from all parts of the country has not only absorbed the entire output of the plants but has swept away reserve of cars in dealers' storerooms until at the opening of June stocks were at their lowest point since the first of January.

The industry loss for the first half is, of course, found in the Ford production figures with 858,972 units manufactured in 1926, as against approximately 390,000 for the first period of 1927. It is anticipated that Ford will have at least four months of capacity production this year of his new line of cars, which he recently announced. Nothing definite as to when these cars will be on the market has yet been announced but it is sure to be at the earliest possible moment, probably, however, not before August 1.

Based on actual shipments for the first five months of 1927, and a careful estimate of the present month, it is shown that about one-half of

SEQUOIA TO CELEBRATE EXPANSION

July 10 Set Aside for Exercises Commemorating Greater Size

A celebration of the enlargement of Sequoia National Park by a dedication under the Big Trees is being planned for Sunday, July 10, according to reports to the Automobile Club of Southern California touring bureau.

Greater Sequoia, as the enlarged playground has been called, occupies about 604 square miles of California's most beautiful and rugged mountain territory, including Mt. Whitney, the highest peak in the United States with its elevation of 14,501 feet. A fifth great national park was intended for California, but since the region neighbored Sequoia Park it was included in its boundaries.

As part of the dedication ceremonies, a tablet will be unveiled near Round Meadow to record the purchase of the private land which formerly hindered public access to the choicest part of Giant Forest.

Dr. McClintock to Complete Survey of City for Timing Signs; Cars to Reach Corner With Green Lights

Through scientific "progressive" timing of traffic signals, it is possible to move "trains" of automobiles along downtown streets and major highways on regular schedules, without stops, much as steam and electric trains are moved now, according to Dr. Miller McClintock, traffic consultant of the Traffic Commission.

Dr. McClintock will complete a traffic survey in Los Angeles this summer, one of the features of which will be the working out of a detailed plan for timing the automatic signals of the city. The plan will be

Balance

WHAT Packard means by "balance" in a motor car goes far beyond the mechanical balance of parts which assures silent, vibrationless operation. Packard's clientele takes that for granted.

The balance in which Packard takes pride is that perfect balance of desirable qualities which led one enthusiastic owner to write that his Packard was "the supreme combination of all that is fine in motor cars." Packard's deliberate aim for twenty-seven years has been to develop a car of all-around excellence—not a car famous merely for one outstanding trait, but of acknowledged superiority in all. Those who own Packard cars know how well Packard has succeeded.

Whatever you may expect from a motor car the Packard will provide to an unusual degree. Beauty, smartness and distinction recognized and imitated the world around. Speed unsurpassed by any but racing cars. Roominess and comfort which are proverbial. Low operating cost and long life which make Packard ownership a real economy. It is the balanced excellence of the Packard which makes it so universally admired and desired.

New Line Draws Interest in Auto Circles; Machine Surprising

The arrival of Dodge Brothers' keenly anticipated six has swung the spot light of interest in the direction of the sales room where, according to Myron C. Albertson of the Albertson Motor Company, dealers for Dodge Brothers' cars and Graham Brothers' trucks, the word "dependable" was given popular coinage. There it remains focussed, for the new six, the Senior Line, reveals much that absorbs the attention and much also that creates surprise.

New cars and new models are constantly rolling over the horizon, but a six arriving from the Dodge laboratories carries its own peculiar news value. There are certain preconceived ideas as to high quality in structure and mechanics, due to the past history of the makers covering a period of twelve successful years during which nearly 2,000,000 cars were built and marketed. But marked interest is being shown in the performance of this new car, as well as in its new body lines.

Its size is rendered indefinite by the gently rounded contours of the roof line which is crowned and molded over the sides to produce the effect of length and lowness without unpleasant accentuation anywhere. Actually it stands a fraction over seventy-one inches from the ground, but it looks considerably lower.

An entirely new interpretation of the molding line is created by the use of recessed panels on the doors and swinging around the back from one rear quarter to that on the outer side. The entire front of the car is distinctively new. The radiator is deep, rather high and surrounded by barely more than a rim of the polished shell which is of uniform width, save at the top where it widens out. The butterfly sweep of the guards is effective; the lines of the hood rugged and strong. There is abundant room inside the car for comfortable riding and frequent change of posture during a long drill in uncomfortable weather.

Mr. Pope says: "The motor follows modern practice in numerous ways, utilizing also the many years' experience of Dodge Brothers' engineering department in producing a power plant that will run on and on with a minimum of attention for years. It would be in the eyes of some designers a little bigger in volume than the weight of the car demands, but this means abundant power under all circumstances. Though the major emphasis is not placed on speed it will probably yield a great deal longer life and produce a great deal less trouble for the consumer than any of the high-speed motors.

"That the Senior will sell very largely on sight and on the strength of Dodge Brothers' reputation is a foregone conclusion. It is a clean-cut thoroughly modern car. But more than all that it will sell on demonstration. It is a remarkably smooth performer under normal road conditions. It has been proved on cross-continental tests to have remarkable endurance under the sort of punishment only cross-continental drivers know how to inflict. It handles as any car should."

VALLEY DETOUR NOW GRAVELED

New gravel is now open in place of the detour between El Centro and Imperial and travel is advised to make this section slowly for the first few days, according to the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

COMPLETE LINK OF ROAD CHAIN

tel. The distance from Los Angeles to El Centro is 223 miles and can be made easily in eight hours.

LINKS COUNTRYSIDE

The Chrysler party left El Centro the following morning at 8 o'clock headed for San Diego. At this particular point is a link in the encircling highway that reaches out from Los Angeles to touch the sea, the desert, fertile valleys and towering mountains. This paving knits closer the very region whose allure has drawn motorists from the farthest points of the country and each succeeding improvement serves to increase its drawing power because of the attraction of the safe, comfortable highways.

The southeastern part of San Diego county in which the newly built seven miles of winding concrete highway lies is largely a plateau-like granitic area. Large boulders ranging in size up to that of pianos, and larger, cover the ground.

Mountain Springs is situated at a point about halfway on the grade that extends from Meyers Creek bridge near a railroad siding named Sugar Loaf to the summit of the pass which is approximately eight miles east of Jucumba.

This is where the party found the gigantic paving mixer plodding up the hill, spreading out behind it a gray ribbon of cement to carry the motorists of 1927.

DON PEDRO FAGES

The first trip ever recorded from the Colorado River to San Diego was made in 1782 by Don Pedro Pages. In later years few survived the arduous trail and many more abandoned it than made it until the lure of gold in 1847 stoutened the hearts of men. While the present road did not then exist such is the character of the country.

The original road was cut through the rocks that cover the area by the co-operative efforts of the San Diego and Imperial counties. From time to time the State allotted money to improve it at dangerous points and to widen it.

One of the difficult parts of the work was grading a new improved alignment through the huge boulders. Curves were superelevated and given longer radius. The steepest grades were cut down so that for the project the grade averages only about 6 per cent with a little over 7 per cent as the maximum. This is regarded as entirely safe with the cement concrete surface which is protection against skidding.

Shipment of Cars to Orient Leaves Harbor

The first considerable shipment of automobiles direct for the Far East went out from Los Angeles Harbor the past week, when the Kerr motorship Silverlarch sailed with a young trainload of Graham Brothers trucks.

The trucks, eighty of them, were shipped by train from Detroit and loaded aboard the motorship at the General Steamship Corporation's docks, direct for Java ports, Calcutta and Singapore. It is the result of the line's recent installation of a direct service to those ports, obviating any transshipment en route, and will be followed by more such shipments, according to Capt. H. H. Birkholm, Los Angeles manager for the steamship line.

Incidentally, the same ship brought in thirty carloads of rubber from the Straits Settlements for the Goodrich Tire Company at Los Angeles, one of the largest direct shipments of that commodity to this port.

AGENCY MOVES

Rickershauser & Miller, Nash dealers in Hollywood and Beverly Hills, have moved their Beverly Hills branch into a new and modern motor car building at 463 North Roxbury Drive, after having been in temporary quarters in Will Rogers's town for the past eighteen months. Leroy J. Allread, Jr., manager of the Beverly branch, has been associated with the Rickershauser & Miller concern since 1923, while the service department, which occupies 5000 square feet, is under the supervision of R. G. Larson, who was with the Nash factory for five years. Rickershauser & Miller have been exclusive Nash dealers for nine years.

SEVERAL DETOURS

Several short detours will be encountered on the Cuca Grade between Pala and Morrettis, reports the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

Must Approve of Car—It's His Fifth

Earl Ovington of Santa Barbara with his new Franglin air-cooled six, sport sedan. This is Mr. Ovington's fifth Franklin.

MOTOR COMMENDED

When a man buys five automobiles of the same kind, it is evident that he is pretty well satisfied. Earl Ovington, well-known Santa Barbara real estate man and aviator, made that remark when he took delivery of his fifty air-cooled Franklin six at Franklin Motors, Inc., Southern California distributor. He came here with Frank Gordon, Franklin dealer at Santa Barbara to claim his car which is a sport sedan.

"Mr. Ovington is a great believer in air cooling," said Ralph Hamlin, president of Franklin Motors, Inc. "He has flown air-cooled airplanes for years. Mr. Ovington is one of America's oldest airmen and carried the first air mail for Uncle Sam on September 23, 1907, over a route in the East. His plane, on that occasion, had an air-cooled engine. The postal cards he carried on that first trip are now selling for $35 each and few of them are in existence—eight, I believe.

"Mr. Ovington declares he cannot understand why a gasoline engine should be cooled with water when this water is in turn cooled by the air. He believes in the direct method of letting the air cool it without having to carry a lot of extra parts and extra weight contained in the modern water-cooling systems.

"He has made a study of motors and cooling systems for many years and has owned all told nineteen automobiles. Since he tried the Franklin he has become an enthusiast and says he is satisfied that no other car will fill his demands as well.

"This well-known flyer declares Lindbergh and Chamberlin likely would have failed in their efforts to span the Atlantic with water-cooled engines in their planes because of the extra weight of the water-cooling system and the probability of its failure on such long flights."

the manufacturers have shown substantial increases over the corresponding period of 1926 in daily production. Among the companies that can be mentioned are the Auburn, Cadillac, Chandler, Chevrolet, Chrysler, Gardner, Essex-Hudson, Marmon, Oakland-Pontiac, Oldsmobile, Reo, Studebaker and Willys-Overland. The Chevrolet increase was from 3913 in 1926 to 4571 this year, and the Ford's decrease from 6507 to 2947.

Convention of N.A.D.A. Goes to Bay City

Following a most enthusiastic and interesting congress held here last week, officials of the National Automobile Dealers' Association are in San Francisco today arranging for a large meeting to be held in the northern city Tuesday. They are accompanied by the several sales and accounting experts who made addresses here.

At the close of the Los Angeles meeting the group held a meeting in San Diego on Wednesday. They visited Santa Barbara and spoke to automobile dealers there Thursday, stopped at Bakersfield Friday and Fresno Saturday, thus they were heard by practically all the leading dealers south of San Francisco.

One feature of the meeting here that attracted much attention was a replica of the N.A.D.A. emblem. It was constructed of automobile parts and was about ten feet square. The emblem contained 8000 tacks, was colored and lighted by electricity. It was constructed under the direction of W. E. Fowler, manager for the William E. Hughson Company. Mr. Hughson is president of the association.

Clouds Gather at Airport by Arrangement

There are three kinds of clouds that are not in the encyclopedia, and the purpose of this story is to set the encyclopedia right. First, there's Miss Dorothy Cloud. Second, there's the Reo Flying Cloud, and third, there's Rogers airplane cloud-maker. In order to get these three all together it will be necessary to go back to last January and reread the announcement of the Reo Motor Car Company saying that their new automobile would be named the Flying Cloud after the fastest American clipper ship ever built.

Almost immediately thereafter Miss Dorothy Cloud steps into the picture. She arrived at the Reo headquarters in Los Angeles seeking a position and what with her name fitting into the picture so nicely, together with the fact that she throws a mean pothook and knows her way around an Underwood, she finds herself on the pay roll.

With material like this at its command, the Reo publicity department could be excused for using one of those girl-with-a-car pictures, but showing remarkable restraint, the corps of publicists publicizing Reo waited. And their wait was not in vain, for along came Rogers Airport with another angle to the story, making it a triangle.

This Flying Cloud manufacturer operated by the airport is used by movie companies shooting storm stuff when there's no storm in sight. With little or no notice, the Rogers Flying Cloud can go on high and sketch some very realistic looking clouds into the picture, thus saving the film industry thousands of dollars that it might otherwise cost them to keep a company on location until a sure-enough cloud showed up.

Figures Show Activity at Car Factories

DETROIT, June 18. (Exclusive)—An idea of the activities in automobile circles can be gained by what the following plants are now doing: the Chevrolet plant overran its schedule for May and thereby established a new monthly production record with more than 114,000 units; Buick, 25,000; Studebaker, 14,000 passenger cars and an increasing demand for busses which are now being built in the Detroit plant; Hudson-Essex, established a new monthly record with 34,500; Willys-Overland, 27,509, a new record; Paige-Detroit, 1705. Combined shipments of Cadillac and La Salle were 50 per cent higher than in any previous May; Hupmobile, 3516, which was a slight decrease; Graham Brothers trucks and commercial cars, 5718 units; Oakland produced more than 1000 cars each day in the month; Falcon Motors, 2000; Peerless, 1700; Pierce-Arrow showed a substantial increase, and Jordan Motors had the largest May production in its eleven years' history.

Summed up May production of motor vehicles, exclusive of Ford, was 342,082 cars and trucks compared with 342,819 units in April and and 18 per cent in excess of May, 1926.

"There is nothing obsolete about Nash cars," says LeRoy Spencer, sales director of the Troy Motor Sales Company, Nash distributors.

Central States Plan Adption Uniform Code

California may have rivals in the Middle Western States in the adoption of the uniform vehicle code, developed by the Hoover conference, according to reports reaching the Automobile Club of Southern California. Several of the Central States are urging the adoption of the complete code and stressing the provision calling for licensing of all drivers.

The National Uniform Vehicle Act is quite similar to that of the State of California. Nearly seventy cities have adopted the uniform ordinance for the State and others are fast coming into line, placing California among the foremost States in unifying its traffic regulations. With the awakening of the Middle Western States it is said that California will have to step along to keep in advance in its traffic regulations.

PLAN TIMING TRAFFIC SIGNAL

presented to the city by the end of the summer.

KEEP MOVING

"The plan, briefly, is so to synchronize the operation of the signals that a train or group of automobiles, proceeding along a street at a predetermined rate of speed, will reach each intersection as the light turns green," Dr. McClintock said. "In this way, the driver of an automobile may go through the entire business district without making a single stop.

"This new system is now in effect in Chicago, and gives the same practical effect as an elevated roadway, as there is no interference with cross traffic. The machines move, both east and west, and north and south, at eleven miles an hour, through the loop district. It is common to travel three-fourths of a mile through the crowded loop district without making a single stop.

"Such a system is practical for Los Angeles. It will be possible so to time the signals as to permit a flow of traffic at fifteen miles an hour on downtown streets, and from twenty to twenty-five miles an hour on outside traffic highways, such as Figueroa street or Washington street.

STOPS UNNECESSARY

"This system provides a positive break on speeding and greatly decreases accidents. A motorist gains nothing by speeding up between intersections, as he reaches an intersection only at a "stop" signal. Then he has to change gears and start over again, while the motorist traveling at the proper rate of speed may continue without shifting gears or slowing up.

"Approximately two-thirds of the stops can be eliminated under the 'progressive' plan of timing signals, thus greatly decreasing the inconvenience and annoyance of automobile users. The number of automobiles that can be operated at the same time in the business district also will be increased."

Insure Car Success by Experiments

One of the facts responsible for the outstanding success of the La Salle, reflected by the instant acceptance, rapid and constantly increasing sales, and by the wonderful performance of the car in the hands of private owners, is that the Cadillac Motor Car Company made absolutely sure that the car was mechanically and fundamentally right in every respect before it was announced to the public, according to J. E. Brown, Southern California manager for Don Lee, California distributor for Cadillac and La Salle motor cars.

"Not only was it subjected to intensive research in its experimental state over a period of four years prior to its public introduction, but the experimental department at the factory has continued this vitally important work on La Salle cars taken straight from the production line, proving to themselves, as the public is having it proved constantly by the reports of private owners, that the La Salle was a thoroughly preproved car.

"During the period from January 14 to May 23, ten La Salle cars taken from the production line by the experimental department, counterparts in every respect of the La Salles that the private motorists may own, have run up the tremendous total of 276,629 miles. In the month of February alone, four of these La Salles were each driven over 25,000 miles, one car covering 610 miles in ten hours.

"Since the average motorist covers under ordinary driving conditions about 10,000 miles a year, this throws into high relief the exhaustive nature of this test—for it represents two and a half years of mileage crowded into one month's driving.

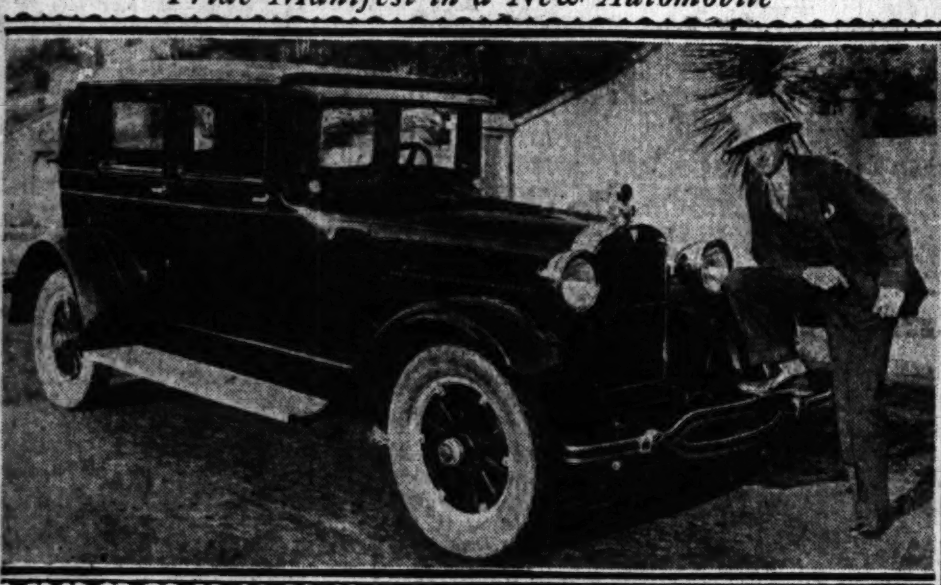
elief in Sight for Motorists Using Newhall Tunnel

Pride Manifest in a New Automobile



John Litel, like any other purchaser of a new car exhibits pride in his new Hudson.

nando Road, the only entrance into the metropolitan district of Los Angeles for a distance of seventy-five miles. The Newhall tunnel on this highway acts as a bottle neck so that on Sundays and special occasions, when traffic is heavy, the congestion is so great that hours of time are lost by tens of thousands of motorists.

Intensive studies of this situation are being made by both county and State, and without doubt through the co-operation of these agencies the best solution of the problem will be found at an early date.

The plan that probably will be adopted, according to advices reaching the Automobile Club of Southern California, is to parallel the present road on the west for a distance of several miles in the vicinity of the Newhall tunnel. This will provide practically double the present traffic capacity and in addition, will connect through roads to Pasadena and Hollywood districts so that traffic for these sections may avoid the heavier streams of traffic destined for Los Angeles proper.

HEAVILY USED

Few roads in the State have been subjected to such heavy use as the San Fernando highway. It has been on the job, with the same carrying capacity, since the population to be served was less than one-third of the present number and the automobiles were only one-fifteenth of the number using the roads today. Being the only outlet to the north that may be used by San Joaquin Valley ranches to send through their products to the larger market, it has been pounded day and night by every sort of automotive conveyance. The tremendous economic importance of this road naturally places it first in line for improvement in the big "circle" boulevard plan upon which engineers now are working with the view of preparing a definite, practical and economical method of construction.

NO CARBON

"Bang Boyc-ite Blu-Green gasoline positively prevents the formation of carbon and will remove carbon deposits contributed by inferior motor fuels," says B. A. Rowell, manager of refined oil sales for the Gilmore Oil Company, marketers of this fuel through some 100 independent service stations.

INTEREST STIRRED BY NEW OWNER

Transfer of Paige Control Followed by Survey of Coast Territory

Today the first public announcement since acquiring controlling ownership of the Paige-Detroit Motor Car Company was made by the three Graham Brothers, Joseph B., Robert C., and Ray A.

Immediately upon the consummation of the deal involving the purchase of the great motor manufacturing concern Robert Graham set out for Southern California to make a preliminary survey of this important territory.

Graham, now now in general charge of the company's sales, arrived in Los Angeles last week. He spoke before a large meeting of Paige dealers assembled here from all important points throughout the southern part of the State. The automobile manufacturer intimated that the building of a Paige assembling plant here was being considered among the first moves to be included in an $8,000,000 expansion program.

According to Graham, the name "Paige" will be continued and the present line of six and eight-cylinder automobiles are to remain in their several price fields. The Wayne body plant at Detroit has already been purchased by the new administration and within sixty days a staff of more than 1000 men will be engaged in Paige coach building.

Car Touring Parks Now in Southern Utah

At last reports the Chevrolet national park imperial laudau, which left here a few days ago for a tour of the nation's public playgrounds of the West, was deep in the wilds of Southern Utah along the north rim the Grand Canyon. W. S. Wood, who is piloting the car for the Chevrolet Motor Company, is familiar with this entire country and is an exceptionally keen amateur photographer. Before leaving Los Angeles he laid in a stock of color plates and filters and expected to obtain a remarkable set of scenic photographs during his tour through the wild country, much of which has only been recently opened to public travel, yet which is comparatively easy of access by motor car since the government has taken over the building of roads into its innermost fastnesses.

VIBRATION REDUCED

By setting the front engine supports of the Whippet four on rubber cushions, the engineers found vibration reduced to a minimum, says L. J. McCracken of the Willys-Overland dealers' organization.

TWO MEN GAIN NEW POSITIONS

Ralston and Douglas in New Posts With Motor Factory

In order to adequately meet the requirements of the record business now being done by the Chevrolet sales and service organization, R. H. Grant, vice-president of the Chevrolet Motor Company, in charge of sales, today announced a far-reaching expansion of the Chevrolet sales organization.

O. E. RALSTON

This includes the appointment of two assistant general sales managers, the promotion of several sales executives, and the opening of three new zone offices at El Paso, Tex.; Wichita, Kan., and Charleston, W. Va.

Following closely the appointment of H. J. Klingler as general sales manager, today's announcement promises a further development of the Chevrolet sales organization through which improved sales and service facilities will be extended to Chevrolet owners and the million who will join the ranks this year.

Associated with Mr. Klingler, under the new arrangement will be two assistant genreal sales managers. M. D. Douglas, formerly regional sales manager for the Southeast, with headquarters at Norwood, O., becomes assistant general sales manager for the eastern section of the United States. D. E. Ralston, formerly regional sales manager for the Middle West, with headquarters at St. Louis, becomes assistant general sales manager for the middle western section of the United States. Both assistant general sales managers will maintain headquarters in Detroit.

M. D. DOUGLAS

Two new regional sales managers have been appointed. A. W. Gilpin goes to St. Louis as regional sales manager for the Middle West, and J. C. Chick, formerly Boston zone sales manager, becomes regional sales manager of the Flint region, with headquarters in Flint. A. F. Young, formerly regional sales manager at Flint, moves to Norwood, O., where he becomes regional sales manager of the southeastern region. Felix Doran, Jr., formerly zone sales manager at Dallas, becomes assistant regional sales manager of the Middle West region, retaining headquarters at Dallas.

E. A. Nimnicht becomes sales manager of the new zone office at Wichita, Kan.; G. I. Smith becomes sales manager at the new zone sales headquarters at Charleston, W. Va., and C. P. Simpson has been appointed sales manager of the new Texas zone, with headquarters in El Paso.

Other changes and appointments as sales managers included Paul Seese, Kansas City zone sales manager; E. R. Palmer, Cleveland zone sales manager; T. F. Kinman, Fargo zone sales manager; R. W. Losey, Dallas zone sales manager; L. I. Stewart, Buffalo zone sales manager; W. E. Holler, Pittsburgh zone sales manager, and H. J. Walsh, Boston zone sales manager.

Addition of three new zones provides the Chevrolet organization with forty-one sales headquarters in the field, giving the company the most comprehensive sales representation in its history.

Ship Owner Buys Car for Transportation

For his craft, the Lahaina, is no longer seagoing. The Hupmobile is used by Capt. Monstad for traveling. The ship, once famous, is now a mastless fishing barge. Below, Capt. Monstad is at the wheel of the Lahaina.

NEEDS AUTO WHEN OLD ONE WORN OUT

By a queer coincidence the engineer of the train bringing the 1928 model Locomobiles here this week was a Locomobile owner himself. The throttle-pusher owns one of the 1910 models. When George Moriarty asked him if he wanted to trade the old car in on one of the new 8-70 models, he demurred.

"Wait 'til the old bus wears out," was his laconic answer.

REDLANDS BRANCH OF CLUB WINNER

REDLANDS, June 18. (Exclusive) These small-town guys know their stuff. This was proven when the Southern California Automobile Club office here received word of having won the annual contest among the thirty-one branch offices for the making of the least mistakes in a single month. The local office, with G. E. Prior as manager and Franklin Richardson and Ted Wedbergh as assistants, handled over 2000 applications and did not make one mistake during the period.

HIGHWAY DETOUR

A detour is in effect just north of Orick on the Redwood Highway, it is reported to the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

Masts Gone---Ship Now but Fishing Barge

"The good ship Lahaina," stripped of her mighty masts, shorn of her rigging and gear, with her power gone and her prestige only a memory in the hearts of those who once strode her decks, the gallant ship that breasted the storms of Cape Horn and hurled defiance into the teeth of a thousand gales, now lies off the shores of Redondo, to live on for years—bespatered with bait by masur fishermen.

The Lahaina was one of the finest examples of sailing-ship construction the Pacific Coast ever turned out. She was built in Oakland and a President of he United States saw her launched. The day her keel first touched the water was a gala day in Oakland, and the school children were given a holiday in honor of the ship and her builders. That was April 19, 1901.

Mastered by Capt. N. P. Carlsen, the Lahaina established several records. One in particular was a trip around the world from Cape Flattery and back to Cape Flattery in nine months and eleven days.

The Lahaina is now owned by Capt. W. L. Monstad, and is being used as a live-bait pleasure fishing barge off Redondo Beach, and can accommodate over 700 fishermen.

Capt. Monstad maintains several pleasure-fishing barges and operates off his own pier at Redondo.

So goes the story as told by her new owner to A. R. Reedall, manager of the Greer-Robbins Company, Hupmobile distributors for California, one day last week when Mr. Monstad stopped in to take delivery of his new Hupmobile eight sedan.

SOCIETY GRATIFIED BY STYLE OF BODY

DETROIT, June 18. (Exclusive)—The Paige Detroit Company is in receipt of a vote of thanks from the National Society of Longfellows for the construction of two body types especially adapted to the membership of the organization.

Phil E. Zimmerman, secretary-treasurer of the Longfellows, has written as follows to thank Albert V. Crump, Paige body engineer, for designing the Paige two-door sedans, models 6-45 and 6-65, to suit men of any height. Unique adjustable pedals and driving seats are featured in these models.

"We had drifted into the habit of believing that the miscreant who designs sleeping cars had something to do with the construction of automobiles and underwear until the new Paiges came along," wrote the Longfellow official.

Car Industry Described as Babe in Arms

The automotive industry still appears to be a babe in arms, according to Harry A. Lord, president of the Lord Motor Car Company, who quotes Edward S. Jordan to substantiate his statement.

"Most people would be surprised if some one were to tell them seriously that the automobile business is just beginning. But that is just about the truth. Fifteen years ago, if a person built a garage it was a one-car affair.

"There weren't so many country-clubs then, and all the youngsters walked to school or went by street car.

"Now look at the picture. Nobody builds a house today without adding at least a two-car garage, while many people provide accommodations for three, four and even more cars.

"The seven-passenger 'carry-alls' have almost passed out of use. We have arrived at the day of individual transportation. Golf courses are so numerous that every one who wants to can play, and the automobiles are parked there by thousands.

"Of course, that means at least two cars to a family. Father has to have one in his business, and there simply must be another at home for the family.

"We are living in a motorized age and the idea is spreading. The big market of the future is the American family. Every member of the household will insist on transportation independent of the others. More small cars, more roadsters and more inclosed models will be sold. That means a tremendous expansion of the home market, and it is no exaggeration whatever to say that the motor car industry is just beginning."

FLY FISHING GETS LOCAL PATRONAGE

Fly fishing seems to be all the rage at the Rainbow Angling Club this time of year, it is learned from the outing information bureau at the B. H. Dyas Company. Many of the fishermen are catching limits, using flies exclusively.

The club's membership roll continues to grow at a rapid rate. Some of the new members are Stratton Harmon, A. C. Carl, T. B. Hatten, D. L. Imus.

A cooling system was recently installed on the large porch at the upper end of the stream and is working successfully on warm days. Fishermen who have rested up on the porch declare they get the same affect as though a rainstorm had broken.

From four to six cylinders—and then to Knight-engined cars

Owners of four-cylinder cars are changing to six cylinders for better performance. Now another advancement in motor performance is causing owners of six-cylinder cars to buy automobiles powered by the famous six-cylinder Knight sleeve-valve engine.

That same feeling of quicker and smoother power experienced in changing from four to six cylinders is again felt by owners who for the first time sit behind the wheel of the Falcon-Knight.

Due to simplicity of design the Falcon-Knight engine delivers smooth, quiet, uninterrupted performance for many thousands of miles.

And the remarkable performance of this famous type of motor is changing the trend of the whole automobile industry.

Record Run Test for Fuel Used in Auto

In one of the most strenuous tests ever devised for motor car and motor fuel, an eight-cylinder Elcar brougham powered and lubricated with Calpet gas and oil, broke the "mile high" speed record last week from Indio to Manker Flat, above Camp Baldy, according to official records kept by press judges who acted as timers and observers.

The new time, as told elsewhere, for the 119.8 miles, from twenty-two feet below sea level to an elevation of 8000 feet, is 2h. 32m. The former record, established more than two years ago, was 2h. 48m. The average speed of the Calpet Elcar was 47.38 miles per hour.

The route selected for this test run lies over desert stretches, through cities and then up the winding grades through San Antonio Canyon past Camp Baldy to the flats.

Pilot and observers reported exceptionally efficient performance for both car and fuel, despite the quick change in altitudes and the heavy pull at the finish, most of which was made in second gear.

H. G. Pendell and officials of the record-breaking run from Indio to Manker's Flats are seen group about the Elcar which was driven to the record last week.

Advantages of Truck Told by Local Agent

Seven speeds and seven good reasons for the superiority of the six-wheel compound truck with four driving wheels are two important features of the new Fageol heavy-duty truck that is powered with the new Waukesha motor with Ricardo head and girder-type crankcase, according to C. W. De Lancey, manager of the Fageol Motors Sales Company in Los Angeles.

He lists the seven special advantages as follows:

(1.) Lower cost per ton mile through increased pay load per unit.

(2.) Absolute conformity to California State law.

(3.) Reduction of impact to highways, with corresponding reduction of impact to vehicle, due to chassis construction.

(4.) Increased tire life, due to more square-inch tire area in contact with road and because of division of tractive effort over four wheels.

(5.) Increased riding qualities to load and driver.

(6.) Increased braking area with consequent increased safety to truck and other vehicles on highway. This means increased speed with safety.

(7.) Lower mechanical maintenance and general increased life of component units due to unique spring suspension.

SELLS EIGHTEEN

"Popularity of the Paige line is proven by the fact that one salesman, Earl Stoyer, sold eighteen cars during the month of April," says J. M. Sterling, manager of the Paige Company of Southern California. "Stover won the grand prize for selling the most cars during the month of April. He hails from Shuylkill Haven, Pa. Phillip G. Farhart of Gloversville, N. Y., sold seventeen cars."

California Day Brings Large Truck Order

They had a "California Day" on June 4 at the big General Motors Truck Company factory in honor of California's place in the automotive World, and as a result, according to P. L. Emerson, vice-president directing sales for the company, there is a solid trainload of the new six-cylinder General Motors Truck Company fast-duty trucks sent on its way to Los Angeles.

For "California Day" the factory and offices of the company were decorated elaborately with California flowers, poppies predominating, and California fruits and nuts were distributed among the employees from a big shipment sent back by J. H. Jaques, manager of the local branch of the company. At mealtime the excellent orchestra of the factory personnel played California airs and everyone was enthusiastic over the thought that they were working especially on that day for California.

As a result there is now a solid trainload of the new six-cylinder, Buick-powered, fast-duty trucks here in Los Angeles to fill orders that have been piling up in spite of everything at the local offices of the company.

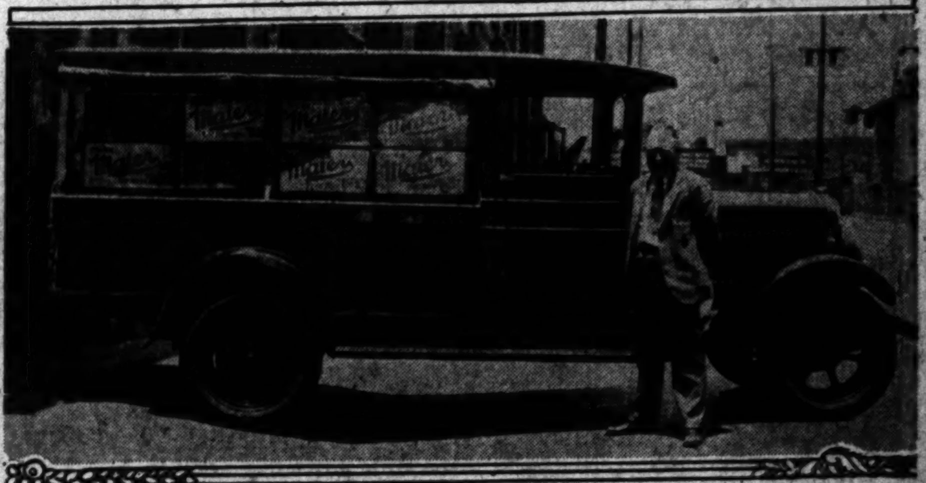
The announcement that this solid trainload has arrived was made coincident with the presence here of P. L. Emerson, who is well known in California and on the Coast. He intimated, in making the announcement, that other solid trainloads were being prepared and that, in all probability there would be another on its way very shortly.

"California, with its excellent system of roads and highways, and the long distances that have to be traversed, is one of the most logical fields in the world for this modern type of speed truck," said Emerson in discussing the big trainload shipment. The day of the slow-moving truck is waning everywhere. The old, slow-moving and lumbering truck is an impediment to traffic on crowded highways; it is also a time waster and a fuel waster when attempts are made to speed it up beyond its normal capacity. It was inevitable that a thoroughly modern speed truck should come—one that can be handled easily, comfortably and safely as a passenger car, and yet possess the ruggedness that is necessary in a truck.

The trainload was made up of the three different models of his modern truck, equipped with the Buick, six-cylinder, valve-in-head engine; one-ton model T-20; two-ton model T-40, using pneumatic tires and bevel gear drive; and the two-ton model T-50 equipped with solid tires and worm drive. There are various wheelbases of the different models in the solid trainload."

Nash sales in Southern California for the first five months of 1927 show a substantial increase over the same period last year.

On the Train Yesterday—at Work Today



The model T20 one-ton GMC speed truck pictured here is one of a trainload of these trucks that arrived in Los Angeles last week. The day after this truck was unloaded the above picture was taken at the Maier Brewing Company where the truck was loaded with sixty-two cases of near-beer for delivery at nine different stores in Los Angeles. It is this type of fast-delivery service for which the GMC one-tons truck is built. It is powered with a Buick motor and is the first light-delivery truck to bear the GMC name.

WHAT THE 1927 LEGISLATURE DID TO THE MOTORIST

By Ivan Kelso

For the benefit of readers who wish to keep in touch with legislation affecting all persons who own or drive motor vehicles, a series of articles has been prepared by Ivan Kelso, chief counsel of the Automobile Club of Southern California. These will be printed each week so that when the new law goes into effect July 29, all drivers may be familiar with the changes.

The first article follows:

The 1927 Legislature has lately adjourned. It is a favorite pastime to poke fun at our legislators, both national and local. Will Rogers told the Legislature he was glad to appear and address them and thus take up their time, because they wouldn't be doing anything worth while anyway, and this attitude is typical.

Such remarks merely evidence our inclination to treat serious subjects lightly, rather than an actual contempt for our governmental representatives.

There is reason why we should treat our legislators with respect. First, we chose them, and if they are uninformed, or stupid, or lacking in moral fiber, we are estopped to deny that they are representative. Second, in the main they make an honest effort to express our wishes. I have had no contact with Congress, but I have closely watched the work of the past four sessions of the California Legislature, and it is my honest conviction that our legislators are sincerely trying to discharge their full duty.

I shall write about two important subjects considered in the recent session, namely, the advancement of (1) street and highway safety, and (2) State and county highway maintenance and development.

In the articles to follow I will show (a) what the Legislature has done about the examination of applicants for operators' licenses; (b) about the reporting of accidents in which persons are killed or injured; (c) about the effort to reduce grade-crossing accidents; (d) about compulsory automobile liability insurance; (e) about the railroad-stop rule; (f) about added protection to the pedestrian; (g) about the changes in the Vehicle Act; (h) about the added gas tax; (i) about the measure allocating highway maintenance and construction funds so that the south will be accorded its fair proportion; (j) about the increase in fees on the heavy trucks; (k) about the new speed limit, etc.

Flyer's Friends in Fast Dash to Washington

Boyhood friends of Col. Charles Lindbergh, driving cross-country from Little Falls, Minn., to Washington, D. C., as the official "home-town" delegation to greet "Lindy," paused in Kenosha, Wis., long enough to receive the greetings of C. W. Nash and other officials of the Nash Motors Company. The group commissioned by the Governor of Minnesota as the official welcoming committee of that State and the town of Little Falls, made the trip in a Nash four-door coupe. The party consisted of Mayor Austin Grimes, Dr. C. H. Longley, Kenneth Martin and Sherman Levis.

Following the example of "Lindy," who crossed the ocean in the "Spirit of St. Louis," the group christened their Nash "The Spirit of Little Falls." All four are well acquainted with Lindbergh, one being the family dentist, another owning a bookstore where Lindbergh bought his school books, and the other two boyhood chums.

The Nash factories are all located in Wisconsin—in Kenosha, Racine and Milwaukee.

Text of $100 Plan Will be Reproduced

Suggestions Offer Journeys Over Whole West

Next Sunday the winners of The Times $175 cash prizes and the merchandise prizes offered by various business houses in Los Angeles for the best vacation-tour plans will be announced in this section.

The text of the plan winning The Times first prize of $100 will be printed. Other winning plans will be reproduced in this section at a later date.

Besides the first prize of $100 there is a second of $50 and a third of $25. Merchandise prizes consist of a set of Hendees shock absorbers offered by the Hendees Sales and Service Company and Joe Neville; an S. & M. Oval-lite offered by the S. & M. Lamp Company; a Snuggle-Buggy and Lazy-Back Chair each offered by the Western Auto Supply Company; an Autopulse Magnetic Fuel Pump offered by J. P. Dixon; a retread tire offered by Jones & Keil Service Stations of Pasadena; $10 gasoline scrip book offered by the Union Oil Company, and an India Cord Tire to fit winner's car by Nelson & Price, Inc.

The plans outlined by contestants have revealed numerous new trips and have been especially pleasing in giving a new turn, so to speak, to trips that might otherwise be too familiar or too often repeated to be any longer of interest. There has been a great variety in the destinations of these trips, suggesting places all over the State and out of the State into neighboring territories up the Coast, inland and south across the border.

Organization for Car Sales Again Grows

The record business now being done by the Chevrolet Motor Company has necessitated a further expansion of the company's sales organization, according to an announcement just made by R. H. Grant, vice-president in charge of sales.

This includes the appointment of two assistant general sales managers, the promotion of several sales executives, and the opening of three new zone offices at El Paso, Tex., Wichita, Kan., and Charleston, W. Va.

Following closely the appointment of H. J. Klingler as general sales manager, this announcement promises a further development of the Chevrolet sales organization through which improved sales and service facilities will be extended to Chevrolet owners and the million who will join the ranks this year.

Associated with Mr. Klingler under the new arrangement will be two assistant general sales managers. M. D. Douglas, formerly regional sales manager for the southeast, with headquarters at Norwood, O., becomes assistant general sales manager for the eastern section of the United States. D. E. Ralston, formerly regional sales manager for the Middle West, with headquarters at St. Louis, becomes assistant general sales manager for the western section of the United States. Both assistant general sales managers will maintain headquarters at Detroit.

Two new regional sales managers have been appointed. A. W. L. Gilpin goes to St. Louis as regional sales manager for the Middle West, and J. C. Chick, formerly Boston zone sales manager, becomes regional sales manager of the Flint region with headquarters in Flint. A. P. Young, formerly regional sales manager at Flint, moves to Norwood, O., where he becomes regional sales manager of the southeastern region. Felix Doran, Jr., formerly zone sales manager at Dallas, becomes assistant regional sales manager of the Middle West region, retaining headquarters at Dallas.

E. A. Nimmicht becomes sales manager of the new zone office at Wichita, Kan.; G. I. Smith becomes sales manager at the new zone sales headquarters at Charleston, W. Va., and C. P. Simpson has been appointed sales manager of the new Texas zone with headquarters in El Paso.

Other changes and appointments as zone managers include: Paul Seese, Kansas City zone sales manager; E. R. Palmer, Cleveland zone sales manager; T. P. Kinman, Fargo zone sales manager; R. W. Losey, Dallas zone sales manager; L. I. Stewart, Buffalo zone sales manager; W. E. Holler, Pittsburgh zone sales manager, and H. J. Walsh, Boston zone sales manager.

Addition of the three new zones provides the Chevrolet organization with forty-one sales headquarters in the field, giving the company the most comprehensive sales representation in its history.

OIL CAN GONE

The equipment on Chandlers does not include an oil can, says O. J. Ross, general manager of the W. P. Herbert Company, local Chandler representatives for since the advent of the one-shot automatic chassis lubrication, the oil-can has been a discarded necessity.

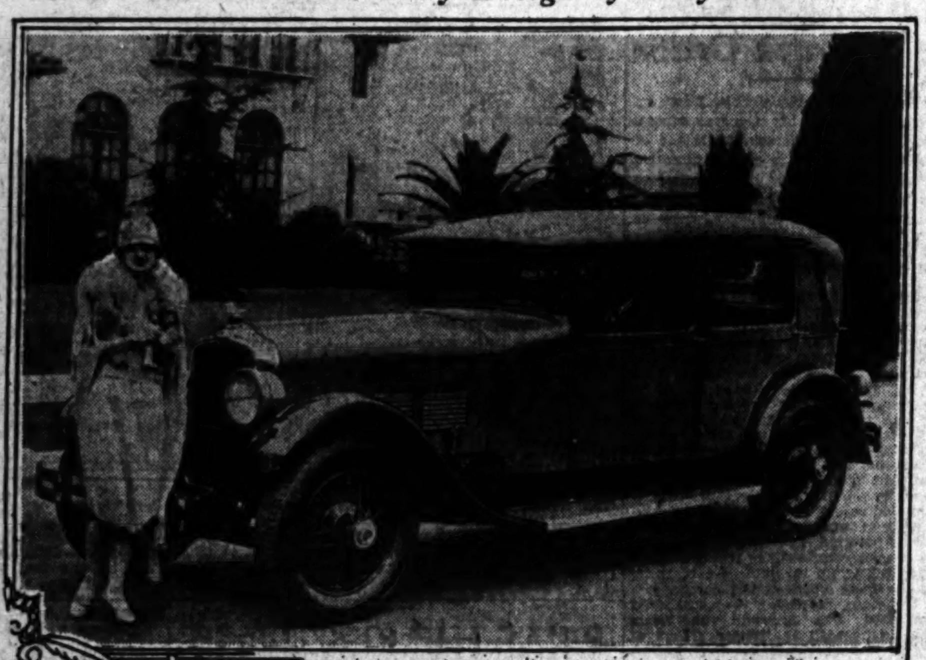
MORE ROADSTERS

According to a report received by J. W. Leavitt & Co., Peerless distributor, Peerless delivered more phaetons and roadsters during the last eighteen months than at any time since the inclosed car stampede began several years ago.

SIXTY MODELS

The Stutz Motor Car Company of America is now producing sixty body styles and appointments with unlimited color combinations, says a statement received by Marshall Clampett, Stutz vertical eight distributor.

An Exclusive Body Design by Weyman



Miss Ann McKay, stage star, with Weyman, flexible, lightweight Chantilly sedan on Stutz vertical eight chassis of 131-inch wheelbase.

Flexing Body Surprising on First Tryout

Surprise and frequently amazement overspread the features of those taking their first ride in one of the new lightweight flexible Weymann motor-car bodies. They enjoy an absolutely new riding sensation—gliding is more like it. They feel light as a brid as the car rolls along the street or boulevard. On rough ground they see the body move and the windshield perhaps twist while they sit still, declares F. W. Clampett of Marshall & Clampett, Southern California Stutz vertical eight distributors.

One of these handsome and luxurious bodies, mounted on a Safety Stutz chassis, is being shown here by Marshall & Clampett at 1600 South Figueroa street. It is a Chantilly sedan built on a Stutz chassis with a wheelbase of 131 inches. One of the first to enjoy this new riding sensation in the sedan is Miss Ann McKay, well-known stage star. She described it as "most delightful, lovely and wonderful."

"This Chantilly sedan, by Weymann, provides the utmost in beauty and luxury," said Mr. Clampett. "The exterior finish of the fabric is a lovely drab tone and the imported broadcloth used for seats and interior lining, while a bit warmer in color, harmonizes with it beautifully. Interior woodwork is of mahogany and the body is given many little touches that endear it to those who appreciate exclusive cars."

Western Auto Shows Buggy for Auto Use

The "snuggle buggy," a new tpe of baby buggy which will easily fit into any type of car, is one of the two prizes offered by the Western Auto Supply Company in The Times Vacation Letter Contest.

The new buggy is collapsible and when not in use can be fastened to the running board or to the spare-tire rack if the owner does not desire to carry it in the tonneau of the car. In use it is held to the floor of the tonneau by means of a heavy spring so arranged that the buggy will not bounce or vibrate.

The frame is made of black flat steel and the body is of heavy olive drab with metal disc wheels, rubber-tire equipped.

According to Western Auto Supply Company officials, the demand for the "snuggle buggy" is steadily increasing as it offers a safe and convenient means of caring for the baby when touring and relieving the mother of much work, and worry.

The second prize offered by the Western Auto firm is a lazy-back chair, a camping chair, that is said to offer the greatest comfort of any camping device. This will be given to the prize winner who has had included in his camping party a person over 55 years of age.

Tire Mileage on Long Tour Pleases Owner

A set of 33x5 India cord tires put on his big 6 Buick touring car over two years ago have delivered 22,401 miles, which included a tour of the entire country, and are still in good shape, running every day, states J. L. Barnes, who operates a service station on Washington Boulevard.

According to Frank T. Price, president and general manager of Nelson & Price, Inc., largess tdistributors of India ires in the world, "Mr. Barnes put Indias on his car in February, 1925, before leaving with his family on his six months' tour of the United States. Their extended trip took them over twenty-two States and he encountered all kinds of roads. He states that he traveled through snow and lush, over un-baked highways, and climbed rugged mountin roads, yet his Indias stood the gaff. He told us that they were able to enjoy every minute of their trip because their Indias spared them from delays on the road due o tire trouble."

KNOWS HIS CAR

One of the recent sales of Erskine sixes was to a technical man who really knows automobiles—H. W. Alden, chairman of the Timken-Detroit Axle Company, it is reported by the factory to the Paul G. Hoffman Company, Erskine and Studebaker distributor. Alden wrote: "I did not fully realize how good the Erskine was until I had driven it."

NOISES GONE

Willys-Overland engineers have learned that Belflex spring shackles used on Willys-Knight automobiles not only prevent shackle noises, but they absorb shocks, lengthening car life, it is stated.

PAINT HARD

Nitrocellulose lacquer now used on Pierce-Arrow cars provides all the gloss of paint and varnish, but is hard to scratch or mar, says William E. Bush, Pierce-Arrow distributor.

SUMMER GASOLINE

"Low flash point is a dry gasoline," says B. A. Rowell, manager of refined oil sales for the Gilmore Oil Company, "and is equally efficient in warm weather as in cold. While it is volatile it does not evaporate rapidly under normal warm weather conditions.

Five-Passenger Sedan Now on Display Here

Representing the most advanced thought in motor car engineering, the new Peerless six-sixty five-passenger sedan has arrived here and is on display at the establishment of J. W. Leavitt & Co., distributor. This newest offering in the Peerless line contains the knowledge gained in more than a quarter of a century of fine motor car building, declares Clair R. Savage, general sales manager.

"It is a beautiful car, superbly built, to give years of the highest type of motor car service," said Mr. Savage, "although it is the lowest-priced type of automobile the Peerless factory has ever built. Peerless factory officials felt the need of an automobile that would allow them to broaden their field and designed this six-sixty for that purpose.

"That it would anticipate future traffic demands, the wheelbase was set at 116 inches. That makes for easy parking and easy handling in traffic. The engine, which has six cylinders and a piston displacement of 199.1 cubic inches, is without question the most powerful for its size yet produced. It has amazingly quick acceleration and a speed in excess of seventy miles an hour. It has a heavy seven-bearing crankshaft with the 'whip' eliminated, reducing vibration to a minimum.

"The car was in an experimental state for two years before being placed on the market. This, together with the company's long experience in car building, makes it the most modern car of its type put before the public. It has the Ross cam and lever steering gear that makes driving like child's play. The extra-long spring suspension gives the utmost in riding comfort. It is fitted with four-wheel hydraulic brakes.

"This car comes in several finishes—Arizona gray, grouse gray and Algerian blue, Killarney and Dundee gray and Buckingham brown. Fenders and upper structure are black. Upholstery is of fine grade, long nap mohair and the hardware is of the latest silver finish."

SMASH went the record

A stock ELCAR EIGHT, model 82 Brougham tore a quarter of an hour off the old "Mile High" record between Indio and Manker's Flats in San Antonio canyon.

Starting ten feet below sea level the ELCAR climbed to over 6000 feet above making the 119.8 miles in two hours and thirty-two minutes with an average of 47.38 miles per hour. (Checked by newspaper men of Los Angeles.)

And the water never boiled.

The ELCAR Shockless Chassis has a riding quality that permits full use of its powerful eight-cylinder motor.

Ride ten miles in an ELCAR and you will not be surprised at this record.

"I've just had the ride of my life"

And this is the car—a Chandler— $1175

I'M not a race driver, by any means, but I do like the way this Chandler moves when you shoot on the gas.

Now I know why so many friends of mine have been praising Chandler. And I can easily see why Chandler is making such widespread gains in sales, and enjoying such a successful and prosperous year.

For real performance, as well as style and comfort, I nominate Chandler. It ticks off the miles like an 18-jewel watch—and eats up distance at a pace that makes the famous charge of the Light Brigade seem like a slow motion movie!

My wife votes the straight Chandler ticket, too. She says it's the nicest car to drive she ever knew. She likes the marvelous ease with which it steers, and how handily she can park it in spaces she'd pass up in the average car.

And we both like the way it stays on the job. No sick spells. No whining or whimpering. And the car lubricates itself from end to end the moment you press a plunger with your foot!

Just check up all I'm saying by seeing this car, and driving it yourself. You'll understand, then, why I say my first ride in a Chandler was the ride of my life.

The thrill that only the MARMON 8 can give

FIFTEEN MINUTES IS ALL IT TAKES to find out that this Marmon 8 is the greatest performer in the world today—bar none, and by far the most delightful car you ever drove.

An absolutely new type of performance and easy handling that by comparison makes most other cars seem sluggish and cumbersome. Won't you give us fifteen minutes of your time this week?

Completely manufactured in Marmon factories to Marmon precision standards

The Greatest Performer in the world today—bar none

MARMON solved the straight-eight problem with the new system of equidistant, down-draft manifolding, thereby producing the sweetest, smoothest-running eight-cylinder engine in the world today.

Marmon solved the problem of putting real riding comfort into a smaller wheelbase with the new rubberset hydraulic spring suspension (longest springs in proportion to wheelbase of any car in the world mounted in rubber and supplemented by in-built Lovejoy hydraulic shock absorbers)

—but perhaps the biggest thing that Marmon did in this new Marmon 8 was to produce a car that actually gets more hours and far more pleasure out of the day by cutting out waste seconds and waste minutes

—less time getting in and out of the garage, less time in slowing down for bumps and curves, less time in parking and less waste time between the semaphores.

(Usually you get at least one block more on a green light and all just as legal as a judge on the bench.)

And while we were about it we made a car that would go anywhere any big car can go and that would do anything any big car can do. There is just as much room for it out on the wide open road as there is in town, and just as much utility and pleasure.

Either in traffic or on the open road, no car on earth today can equal the Marmon 8 in get-away, quick-witted speed, maneuverability or luxurious riding quality.

There are three ways to prove this —first, to try to get away from the next Marmon 8 you encounter

—secondly, to talk with any Marmon 8 owner you meet

—thirdly, to come in and let us furnish you with a demonstrator, which we will gladly do without obligation.

When you come back from this first ride, you will say more for this automobile than we have ever claimed for it in our advertising

—you will say that here at last is a car which actually does on the road more than it does in type —and that it is the first actual thrill you have had out of any new automobile in years.

Won't you try it today?

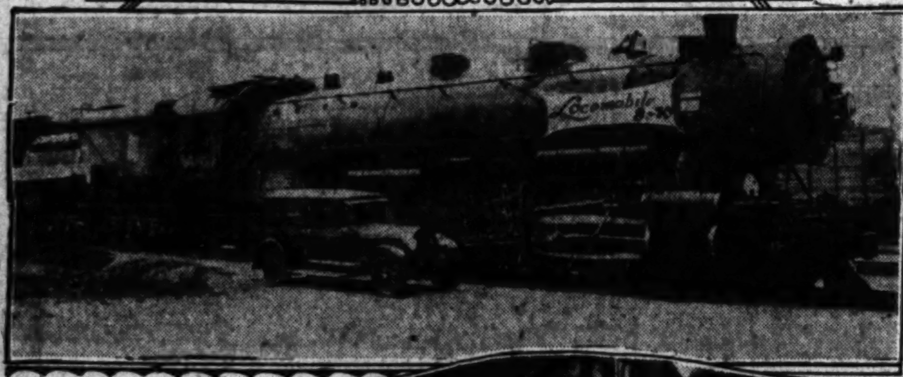
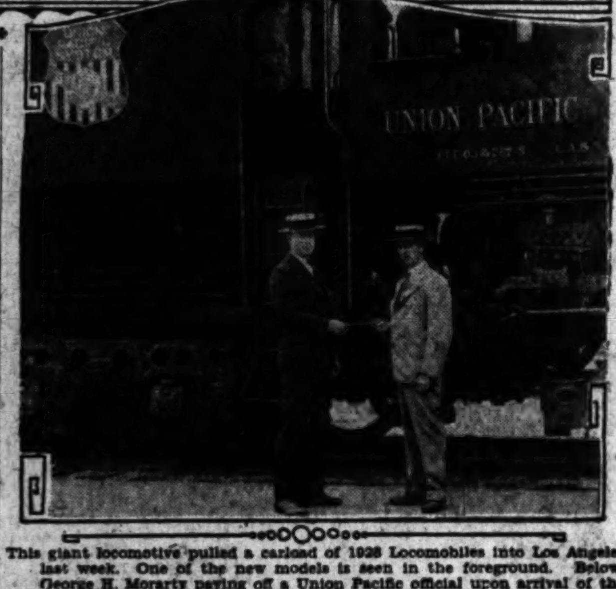
Train Brings Transportation to Southern California





This giant locomotive pulled a carload of 1928 Locomobiles into Los Angeles last week. One of the new models is seen in the foreground. Below, George H. Morarty paying off a Union Pacific official upon arrival of the welcome trainload of Locomobiles.

CAR MAKES DEBUT ON EACH COAST

Railroads Make Possible Introduction of Car in West Same Date as East

Because of rapid transportation facilities made available to automobile manufacturers by railroads, Los Angeles motor enthusiasts were able to inspect one of motordom's latest creations this week simultaneously with its appearance in the East.

In the old days Southern California could not expect to see a new model until some time after it had made its bow in cities nearer the factory. Dealers once considered themselves fortunate if they received even one model of their new line a couple of months after its presentation.

But condtions have changed. Fast freight trains now whisk automotive cargoes to their destination with such dispatch that premieres occur everywhere throughout the country at the same time. This new order of things was exemplified last week in the arrival of a train loaded with 1928 models of the Locomobile straight eight.

George H. Moriarty, manager of the Locomobile Company of California, was agreeably surprised by the arrival of the new automobiles as he had not expected them until at least ten days later. The automobile executive was down at the Union Pacific freight yards to greet the Locomobiles when they arrived here in the record time of eleven days from Bridgeport, Ct.

Since the announcement of the new 8-70 models last week the Locomobile showrooms have been the scene of much activity as motor fans continue to drop in for a first look. Manager Moriarty reports that the visitors checked in at his front doors during the past seven days total more than double that of any previous week in the history of the company.

Open house will be held at the Figueroa-street showrooms for another week. As an added attraction a specially built Locomobile belonging to Tom Mix, the western movie hero, is on display. The cream-colored car is an elaborate piece of transportation, having cost its popular owner more than $20,000. It was loaned to the Locomobile company for the occasion of the new models.

APPLIANCE ROTATES VALVES

Ball Bearings Turn Stem in Motor

L. A. Wilson, head of the Automatic Valve Rotator Corporation, shows how a series of ball bearings incased between two specially designed ball races, enables the valve of any motor to rotate.

"A FACTORY valve such as is standard equipment on all cars cannot rotate," says L. A. Wilson, head of the Automatic Valve Rotator Corporation. "When the Automatic Valve Rotator is added to these valves they keep the valves perpetually revolving. A rotating valve cannot warp or stick consequently it cannot pit or burn.

"By continually turning the valves the accumulation of all carbon and dirt on valve and valve head is eliminated. By keeping them clean they seat compression tight, also cleans the valves in the guide and positively stops valves from warping, sticking, pitting and burning.

"By giving valves maximum efficiency these Automatic Valve Rotators increase motor power, give quicker pick-up and greater speed.

"The Trembley Automatic Valve Rotator is a ball-bearing device which is simply installed in place of the spring washer now used on motors. Nothing more is added or removed from standard equipment. Its simplicity of construction, a series of ball bearings incased between two specially designed ball races, insures perfect continuous operation without further care.

"The greatest benefit of the Valve Rotator to a motor is the elimination of valve troubles. For exactly the same reason an army breaks step when walking over a bridge so the Valve Rotator enables smoother motor operation and thus saves the terrific wear and tear of pounding caused through faulty valves that so often prematurely sends good cars to the junk yard.

"Tests have proven that if a motorist drives his car an average of twenty-five miles a day the saving in gasoline and oil alone will pay for a set of Valve Rotators within sixty days.

SALES LEAD GAINED BY LIGHT SIX

Month of May Best in History of Automobile; Factory Expands

As a fitting tribute to the prestige established by the new models that came out in January, the new Essex outsold all other six-cylinder cars in Southern California during May, reports the Walter M. Murphy Motors Company, Hudson and Essex distributors for Southern California.

"The figures as shown by Motor Fax," declared Mr. Carlson vice-president and general manager of the Murphy Company, "place the Hudson-Essex combination far in the lead this month for the third consecutive month. As a matter of fact, the Essex alone led the six-cylinder field while the Hudson showed a marked increase over last month's figures."

"At the first of the year the super-six principles were, for the first time, incorporated in the Essex. The wisdom of this move became apparent almost immediately. The popularity of the new car increased until it dominated the six-cylinder class in sales during the month just past. The factory is now being remodeled to increase the production of these cars, although right now production at the Hudson Motor Car Company exceeds anything ever attained by a maker of six-cylinder cars."

"Hudson sales have also increased each month," continued Mr. Carlson. "The inclosed car record hung up at Culver City was a proof of stamina and speed that was immediately reflected in increased sales."

"May has been our banner month so far this year. Our financial report as Hudson and Essex distributors shows very close to $1,250,000 worth of business this month alone."

Custom-Built Cabriolet Gets Agent's Praise

Representing what is claimed by its makers to be the ultimate in beauty, smartness and motor-car luxury, a custom-built Brun cabriolet or town car, manufactured on a series 80 Pierce-Arrow chassis, has been received here by William E. Bush, distributor of Pierce-Arrow. It is one of the handsomest equippages yet produced on this chassis, according to Mr. Bush.

"The body is an exclusive Brun model, beautifully finished in two-tone colors. Taupe gray is employed for the lower body panels, fenders and corner posts, while the top of the hood, cowl, window reveals and wire wheels are done in the lighter Ditzler's fawn gray," said Mr. Bush. "The quarter leather back and landau arms with which it is fitted are also in taupe gray, the colors forming a combination that is unusually striking and beautiful. The rear section of the top can be folded down.

"The interior is lavish in its appointments. Seats and lighting are of taupe and gray figured Boyriven cloth of fine texture and long-wearing quality. Individual down cushions are furnished for the rear seat. By removing the center arm rest this seat will accommodate three comfortably. Two large auxiliary chairs fold up into the back of the driver's seat, giving the rear compartment a capacity of five.

"Interior fitments are in embossed silver. The appointments include speaking tube, vanity case, smoking set with electric lighter, silk curtains and frosted reading lamps. By drawing the curtains the greatest privacy is given this section."

DEALER PRIDEFUL OF STOCK CAR RECORDS

J. M. Sterling, manager of the Paige Company of Southern California, is mighty proud of the speed records hung up by stripped stock Paige eights.

"Probably the finest stripped-car performances by Paige have been made with Ralph Mulford at the wheel," says the Paige manager. "Over routes of fifty miles and seventy-five miles, Mulford hung records of 91.10 miles and hour and 89.93 miles an hour, respectively. Both are official A.A.A. free-for-all records. The same driver, with a Paige, also holds the five-mile record with an average of 91.89 miles an hour and the ten-mile record with even a better average, 91.95 miles an hour."

Improvements Completed on Redlands Road

REDLANDS, June 18. (Exclusive) Redlands has one of the most attractive boulevard entrances in the Southland, now that the improvements on Brookside avenue are completed.

The lawns, under the row of great pepper trees which stretch down the center of the boulevard from the city limits almost to the center of the city, have just been put in by Park Superintendent W. T. Ferguson's men.

The lawns have a new style of sprinkling system which it is believed will be adopted in all of the parks, provided it works out as well as is expected.

Redlands now has two beautiful boulevards, with a row of great pepper trees in the center. The other is on East Colton avenue, leading out to the University of Redlands.

Legless Man Driving East for Lake Swim

Charles Zimmy, the legless swimmer, is getting ready to enter the $50,000 Lake Ontario swim at Toronto, Can., and will drive there. He expects to make a trip across the country first and then go to Toronto from New York. Zimmy plans to leave here within a short time and will travel in his Whippet four touring car.

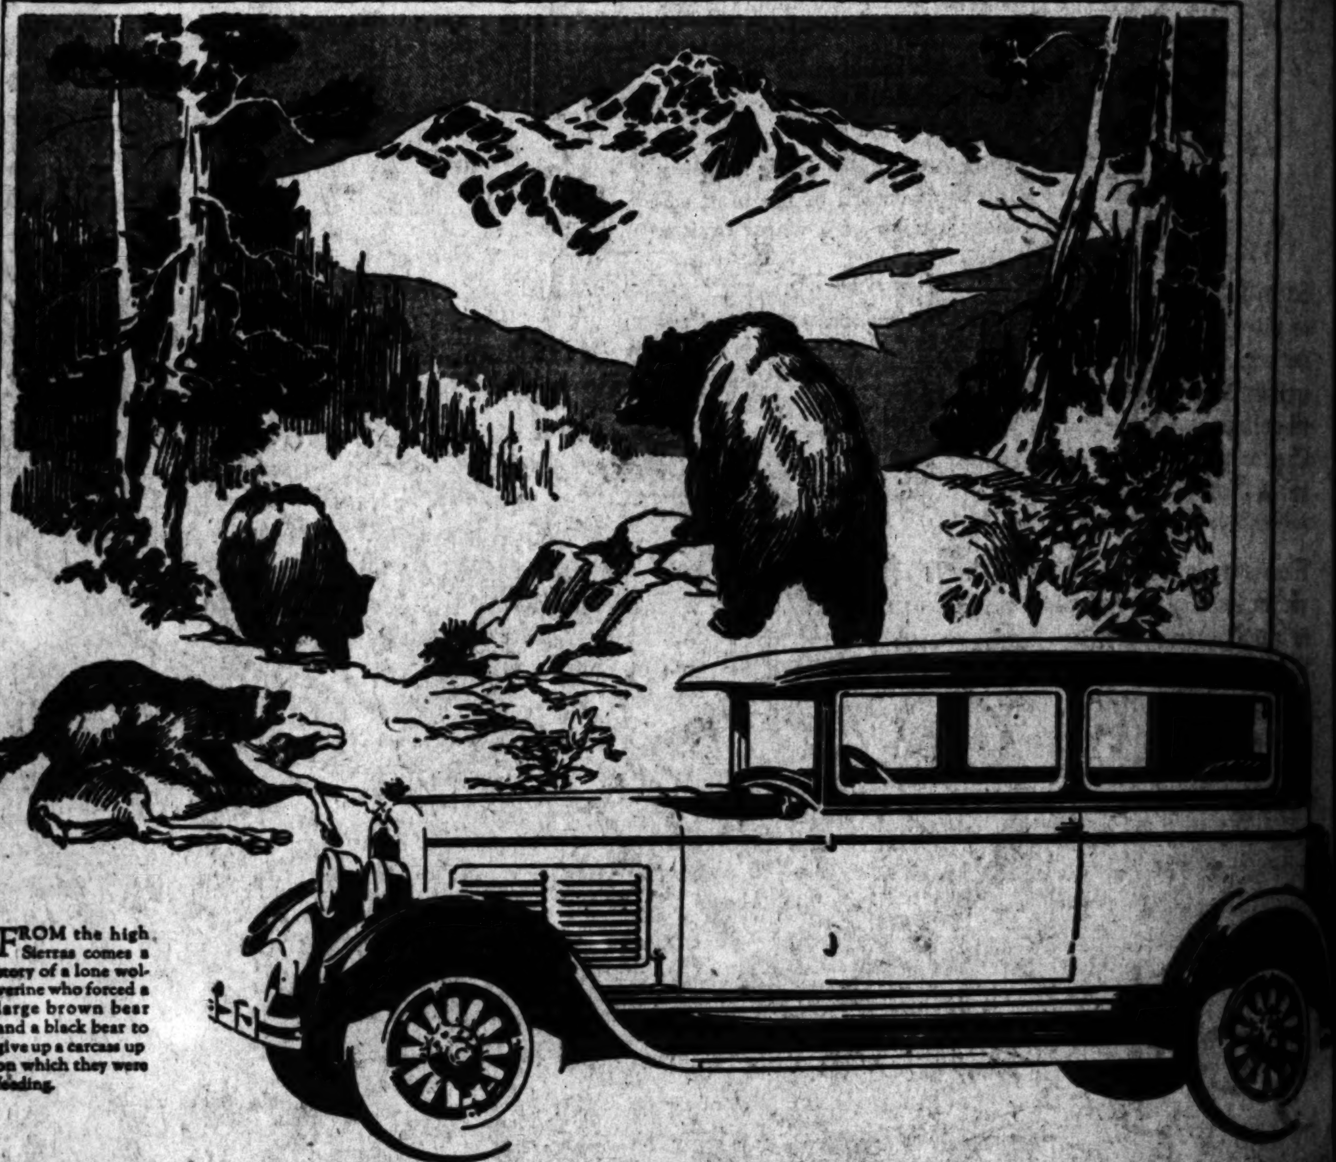
Zimmy was born without legs, but he makes such use of his arms that he says the absence of lower limbs is not so much of a handicap as many believe. Aside from walking, he says he can do almost anything that the average man can do and he gets around very quickly. He is an expert swimmer and something of an acrobat.

He has his Whippet specially arranged and drives with as much ease and sureness as the normal man. He has an extension built to his clutch pedal which he works with one of his stumps. An extension on his brake pedal allows him to operate it with his right hand. A starter button on the dash is also close to his right hand. He has driven his Whippet many thousands of miles and says it is a wonderful little car to handle.

Zimmy will go east by easy stages, stopping at route and will York. From ronto.

He'll Even Try It From the Piano

Charles Zimmy, legless swimmer, who will drive Whippet four to Toronto swim, diving Whippet sedan and landing on his hands on the grass at Exposition Park.



FROM the high Sierras comes a story of a lone wolverine who forced a large brown bear and a black bear to give up a carcass up on which they were feeding.

"He shall take who has the power
And he shall keep who can"

DEEP in the woods where even the outposts of civilization are few and far between, life depends upon food, and upon the ability to find it and fight for it.

There the wolverine is supreme. Small though he is, there is none among all the forest animals, great or small, who does not fear him. For the wolverine is strong, the wolverine is fearless, and the wolverine is untiring.

Now Reo presents the Wolverine of the roads. It has those hardy qualities for which the wolverine of the woods has always been known. Brawny it is for long years of life. Powerful enough to vanquish the toughest hills. And with an agility born of zooming acceleration (the pistons are of light, lively aluminum alloy), of velvety deceleration (the brakes are Flying Cloud type, 4-wheel, hydraulic, internal-expanding), of easy handling (the steering gear is of the Feather-touch cam and lever type).

The Wolverine is built for those who would master the densest city traffic or the roughest country going. Try one out in either place—you'll find it's the kind of car you'll like to own.

CHEVROLET

for Economical Transportation

Hour after Hour over any Road -and always in Comfort!

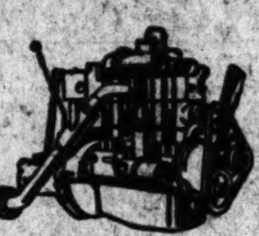
Scientifically balanced—swung low to the road—and with the body resting on chrome vanadium steel springs that are 88% as long as the wheelbase—the Most Beautiful Chevrolet provides the most astonishing riding and driving comfort ever offered in a low-priced car.

Here is truly a type of performance you never thought possible except in much more expensive automobiles. At every speed up to wide open throttle, Chevrolet holds the road with a surety that is a revelation—while rough stretches are negotiated in perfect comfort. You can drive at good speed for hour after hour, mile after mile, without the slightest sense of forcing or fatigue.

This exceptional riding and driving comfort has been engineered into Chevrolet cars as a result of the most gruelling road tests ever conducted in connection with the development of an automobile. Fleets of Chevrolets are constantly under test at the General Motors Proving Ground—driven day and night over every conceivable type of road, from concrete straightaways to deep-rutted clay lanes. Performance results are measured and recorded with scientific accuracy by delicately exact electrical and mechanical devices—invented and built by General Motors engineers. Every unit of the car has been tested and improved until it contributes its full share of comfort.

Another vital factor in the riding comfort of Chevrolet cars is the high quality contruction of the Fisher bodies. Built of wood and steel, the same combination of materials used in the most expensive custom-built construction, Chevrolet enclosed bodies are exceptionally quiet—with a resiliency that absorbs road shocks. Roomy and deeply-cushioned seats, set at the most comfortable angle, further enhance the riding ease.

We have a demonstrating car waiting for you. Drive it over the roughest road you know. You'll find a type of performance that will delight and amaze you—riding comfort that you never thought possible in a low-priced automobile



A powerful valve-in-head motor provides smoothness and snap that are a constant delight.

Easy handling is assured by a modern 3-speed transmission and a smooth action clutch.

Long semi-elliptic springs of chrome vanadium steel—the finest spring steel to be had—making riding comfort a source of delight to Chevrolet buyers.

Full size 17-inch steering wheel eliminates driver fatigue.

Improved worm and gear steering mechanism, specially adapted to balloon tires, making driving a constant pleasure.

Flexible low pressure balloon tires absorb road shock.

Deeply cushioned seats, properly pitched, invite relaxation for driver and passengers.

Fisher VV windshield on closed models assures wide vision and proper ventilation rain or shine.

LOCAL MAN TO "COVER" TEN NATIONS

John Anson Ford Will Make "Motorlogue" for Car Factory

Announcement that a Los Angeles writer has been selected by the Studebaker Corporation of America to make a "motorlogue" of ten countries of Europe this summer for the benefit of American autoists interested in foreign touring, was made yesterday by officials of the Paul G. Hoffman Company.

JOHN ANSON FORD

John Anson Ford, member of the local firm of Hoag & Ford, specialists in publicity, is the man selected for the unusual three-month travelogue, first of its kind ever authorized by an American motor car manufacturer, according to Earl R. Carpenter, president of the Hoffman organization.

Mr. Ford, with Mrs. Ford and Herbert J. Summers, writer and photographer, expects to leave Los Angeles tomorrow for the East, it is stated. They purpose sailing from Montreal on July 1.

Discussing his forthcoming "outing" overseas, Mr. Ford yesterday said:

"The latest, and most popular travel innovation seized on by Southern California motorists, as well as Americans in general, is that of 'checking' the family motor car across the ocean together with the steamer trunk and extra luggage. So tremendous has been the interest in seeing Europe during the last year that hundreds—even thousands—are taking advantage of this plan.

"The Studebaker Corporation, in authorizing us to make a travelogue through Europe by motor car—using both Studebakers and Erskines—has taken an important step which we feel will be of immense interest to the American public. Interesting especially to Studebaker or Erskine owners and prospective owners is the fact that Studebaker has more than 100 service and sales agencies in the leading European countries."

Some of the advantages which motorists who wish to "drive-their-own" in Europe now have in the form of slashed red tape are listed by Mr. Ford as follows:

(1) Boxing and crating of cars, in general, eliminated.

(2) Annoying customs regulations avoided through the use of "triptiques"—permits to enter and remain in a country for stated periods without payment of duty.

(3) Bank guarantees accepted in lieu of cash customs deposits through co-operation of foreign touring clubs.

(4) Desirable connections and information supplied motor tourists through these clubs.

(5) Increased establishment of parts and service departments by American motor manufacturers—especially the Studebaker—in practically every foreign country.

Mr. Ford told officials of the Paul G. Hoffman Company that he and his companion, Mr. Summers, will make several hundred photographs and will obtain first-hand information on motoring conditions in England, Scotland, Wales, Holland, Germany, Switzerland, France, Belgium and Italy.

THREE RECORDS FALL IN WEEK

Auto and Airplane Use Same Brand Oil

W. G. Gregory, advertising manager the Pennzoil Company, congratulating L. B. Miller at the conclusion of transcontinental record run; Johnnie Wieber, relief driver, sitting in Chrysler.

THREE world's records in one week!

In the short period of seven days, automotive and aviation history was made by Clarence Chamberlin and L. B. Miller, and Pennzoil furnished safe lubrication for the three world's records made by these two men, according to Carlton Christian, district sales manager of the Pennzoil Company in Los Angeles.

Chamberlin, at the controls of the Bellanca monoplane Columbia, accompanied by Charles A. Levine, his millionaire backer, flew from New York to Germany, a distance of about 4000 miles. The Wright air-cooled motor was lubricated with Pennzoil throughout the trip, according to Christian.

While Chamberlin winged his way over the ocean through fog, rain and sleet, L. B. Miller, at the wheel of a Pennzoil-lubricated Chrysler Imperial 80, sped through mud and rain on a record run from San Francisco to New York and back to Los Angeles.

Miller established a new record of seventy-nine hours fifty-five minutes between San Francisco and New York, covering 3385 miles. On the return trip from New York to Los Angeles, he covered 3336 miles in eighty-eight hours three minutes, making a total of 6721 miles in 167 hours fifty-nine minutes, one minute less than seven days, an average of nearly 1000 miles a day, it is pointed out.

Representative of Publishers on Long Tour

F. L. Sparks, a member of the staff of M. C. Morgenson Company, Pacific Coast publishers' representatives, is making a 3000-mile tour of the Pacific Coast territory in his 1925 Star touring car. This is the second journey through California, Oregon and Washington that Sparks has made in his Star automobile.

Two years ago he left San Francisco on a tour of the various newspapers represented by his firm, making an extensive industrial and agricultural survey at the same time. On his journey in 1925, Sparks covered 3000 miles and went into many sections where the roads were exceptionally poor in his efforts to get the picture of actual conditions. On his present tour, Sparks is to cover a greater area than that traveled in 1925; and while the roads of the Pacific Coast States have been greatly improved during the months that have passed since he first took his Star car out into the territory, the young publishers' representative says that he will give his car plenty of punishment.

During the time that Sparks has owned his Star car he has driven it more than 33,000 miles, and the present journey is to bring the mileage on the speedometer up to a point very close to the 40,000-mile figure.

Car Popular for Summer Vacation Tour

With the touring season here, owners of the Safety Stutz vertical eight touring brougham are particularly well equipped for long journeys over the open road, points out Walter M. Brown, exclusive Stutz dealer in Hollywood. This car, he states, has many features that tourists appreciate. Among them is its length and it is built on a chassis with a wheelbase of 145 inches.

"The touring brougham is very roomy," said Mr. Brown. "In addition there is an honest-to-goodness hand-made trunk on the rear that has real capacity for clothing, etc. The body is made for rough roads. When metal enters into the body construction, antisqueak material has been added to all joints for purposes of dampening and eliminating every cause of a squeak. One can take this car out on rough roads, load it down heavily and feel certain that when he returns it will be just as quiet as before he started."

Lava Highway Hard Road for Rubber Tires

Fifteen years ago, 6000 miles was considered good service for an automobile tire. Today, the life of a tire may be anywhere from 18,000 to 20,000 miles. Tire manufacturers with their improved methods of rubber curing must share the credit for this remarkable increase in tire mileage. Modern highway construction is also responsible.

That better roads have more than doubled the life of automobile rubber is made evident in a communication from far-off Hawaii, where roads are still the enemy of tires. From the Royal Hawaiian Sales Company, Ltd., there comes a letter to Miss B. Z. Nichols, Los Angeles branch manager of the Coast Tire and Rubber Company, citing many achievements of the popular California-made tires. Because of the primitive, lava-rock-strewn roads that prevail on the islands, the average mileage for cord tires is between 2500 and 3500 miles.

Facts Gained on Trip Told by Gartzmann

The importance of accuracy and "hewing to the line" in the manufacture of motor cars was realized comparatively early in the history of the automobile industry and the development of this feature caused American builders to rapidly forge ahead of their rivals abroad. Foreign manufacturers built their cars largely by hand and took great pride in the accuracy with which parts were fitted together, yet they soon fell behind, because American engineers developed machines that were just as accurate, yet did the work more rapidly and were less subject to the errors which are inseparable from hand-made products.

In discussing this feature of motor-car manufacture as applied to the Pontiac six, a product of General Motors Corporation, Reeve Gartzmann, head of Reeve Gartzmann, Inc., Oakland and Pontiac distributors, brings out some of the latest developments in the automotive field which he had an opportunity to study on his recent trip to the Oakland-Pontiac factory at Pontiac, Mich.

"Perhaps the great advance in recent years in this great industry is what is known as the General Motors research laboratories," said Gartzmann. "We have all realized the importance of the General Motors proving ground and what it already has done for the industry in its comparatively brief existence, but the laboratories have been but little talked about, and few people know what the experts there do.

Too Much for Granted Costs on Camp Trip

The man who goes wrong on a motor camping trip is usually the fellow who took too much for granted and started out on the trip unprepared.

One fine day he decides to go, throws a few articles of equipment into the car, ties the rest onto the running board or top and is on his way with little thought of what will actually be needed. Without a doubt, more auto vacations have been ruined through the lack of proper preparation and inexperience than from any other cause. Trips that were intended to bring rest and recreation, brought hard work and discontent—all due to the lack of proper preparation.

The average amateur auto camper takes too much equipment, and the old-timer often takes too little. A happy medium must be struck between these two extremes. The man who gets the greatest amount of enjoyment out of his trip is the man who takes the least amount of equipment yet has everything that will be needed. The less he has to handle and unpack, the better he will get along.

First Link of Auto Laundry Chain to Open

As a forerunner of a series of like plants to be established in the Los Angeles district Joseph Kreutzer's, Inc., announce the opening of a new automobile laundry at Eighteenth and South Hope streets.

The new laundry represents an investment of more than $20,000, and is the initial Klean-Rite System plant in Los Angeles. Already plans have been made by Mr. Kreutzer for other laundries in the city. About eighteen minutes are required for a car to be thoroughly washed and cleaned from the time it enters the laundry, he says. Approximately twenty men are employed on wash racks.

Beef and Bean Menu Planned in Sales Tilt

When the sales force of the Pelton Motor Company, Marmon distributors, sits down at a banquet given at the Jonathan Club some time in early July and part of the gang dines on beef and the others on beans, it will not be a case of "tastes differ," but "to the victors go the spoils." In plain American, this means that the bean munchers will be "eating humble pie" because they were conquered in a battle now raging at the Pelton company between George L. Moscovitz, manager of the retail sales of the large Marmon Series 75, and Herbert C. Baren, recently appointed sales manager of the little Marmon eight.

The fight started in a heated argument at the local Marmon display rooms regarding comparative sales during the month of June on the large and small Marmon. After receiving from George S. Pelton, president and general manager of the company, a monthly sales quota, Baren claimed he and his men would meet or exceed their quota and Moscovitz argued that he would more nearly meet the sales quota established for sales of the large car. The battle is on.

"And it will wage furiously during the entire month," believes L. G. Anderson, assistant manager of the Pelton company, "for the winner will be as serves a task master as John Smith, who is threatened the early American settlers with 'he who will not work, shall not eat.' While the victorious will eat a dinner of beef from soup to meat, the victims will have beans for soup, beans for salad, beans for so and so—the winners to dine on the fat of the land and the losers to be bean fed. This 'bean' the case. the losers should do a lot of 'beefing.'"

EASIER RIDING

"Riding over an oil and macadam road is much more comfortable than over any other type," says W. J. Julier, manager of road oil and fuel oil departments of the Gilmore Oil Company, which for twenty-five years has been building highways in the West. "Oiled surfaces are more resilient and this makes for easier riding."

Just One of a Fleet of Three Machines

This is one of the three Marmons owned by Edwin Carewe, producer of "Resurrection" and other big cinema successes.

DEALER IN NEW LOCATION

Green & Fleming, who have been representing Chandler automobiles in San Diego county since 1914, have moved into a new, beautiful building recently constructed for their exclusive use.

From their old place of business on Fifth street in San Diego, which they occupied for eleven years as Chandler dealers, they have now moved down to A street at Columbia, which is in the center of San Diego's automobile section.

Mr. Green and Mr. Fleming, who are well liked for their courtesy and service to the public, say that the expansion of their business and clientele made it necessary for them to secure a new building which was larger and which contained more up-to-date equipment to better care for the Chandler owners of San Diego.

The show room in their new building is of Spanish architecture and is so arranged that five Chandler models may be well displayed on the floor at one time, and the floor of the showroom, which is finished in a checker type of various colors, forms a distinctive background for the new beautiful 1927 Chandler model.

The Nash light six motor has a seven-bearing crank shaft and a six-bearing cam shaft.

BRIDGE GRADING WORK INTERESTS ENGINEERS

Interesting phases of hauling and grading by truck are being worked out in connection with the building of approaches to the Carquinez Straits bridge at the head of San Francisco Bay. One of the biggest earth-moving jobs in the history of California highway construction, involving the excavation of more than 250,000 cubic yards of earth, is being completed on the bridge approaches.

LEAD DEVELOPMENT

Six-wheeled trucks are an advance in motor transportation, just as the transcontinental rail lines are over the short lines of early days.

A MESSAGE from the three Graham brothers

More than a year ago we sold our entire holdings in Dodge Brothers, Inc. (manufacturers of motor cars) and Graham Brothers, Inc. (manufacturers of motor trucks) and severed our active and financial connections with both organizations.

On June 10th we acquired control of the Paige-Detroit Motor Car Company, assumed full responsibility for management and invested over four million dollars in the company, thus providing substantial additional working capital.

Plant The Paige-Detroit Plant is modern, well located, well equipped and with the addition of the Wayne Body Plant which we have just purchased provides manufacturing facilities of a high order.

Product Twelve months investigation among users of Paige cars gave us satisfactory reports as to the worthiness of this product. Our policy will be to continue the production of Paige six and eight cylinder models in their several price fields. The public expects motor car executives to keep abreast of the times and make their product constantly better. We shall earnestly strive to do so.

Sales We shall endeavor to protect the merchandising organization now existing and progressively advance its interest, keeping in mind that the owner of Paige cars is best served through dealers who have the fundamental three C's—Character, Capability and Capital. By our business conduct we shall strive to make the Paige dealership a profitable enterprise for a substantial business man in every community.

Service During twenty-five years of industrial accomplishment we found that to Sell well was to Serve well. We shall continue upon the simple belief that the foundation under a greater Paige-Detroit Motor Car Company should not consist of brick and mortar but of the confidence of the American public in our integrity and ability as manufacturers.

We pledge ourselves to build that solid foundation for the future, step by step—stone by stone.

COMFORT IN AUTO PAYS DIVIDENDS

Physical Ease Described as Hard to Measure as is the Fourth Dimension

Reducing physical comfort to a measurable concrete quantity is almost as difficult as materializing the elusive fourth dimension, according to George W. Martin, president of the Martin Iron Works and inventor and manufacturer of Martin shock absorbers.

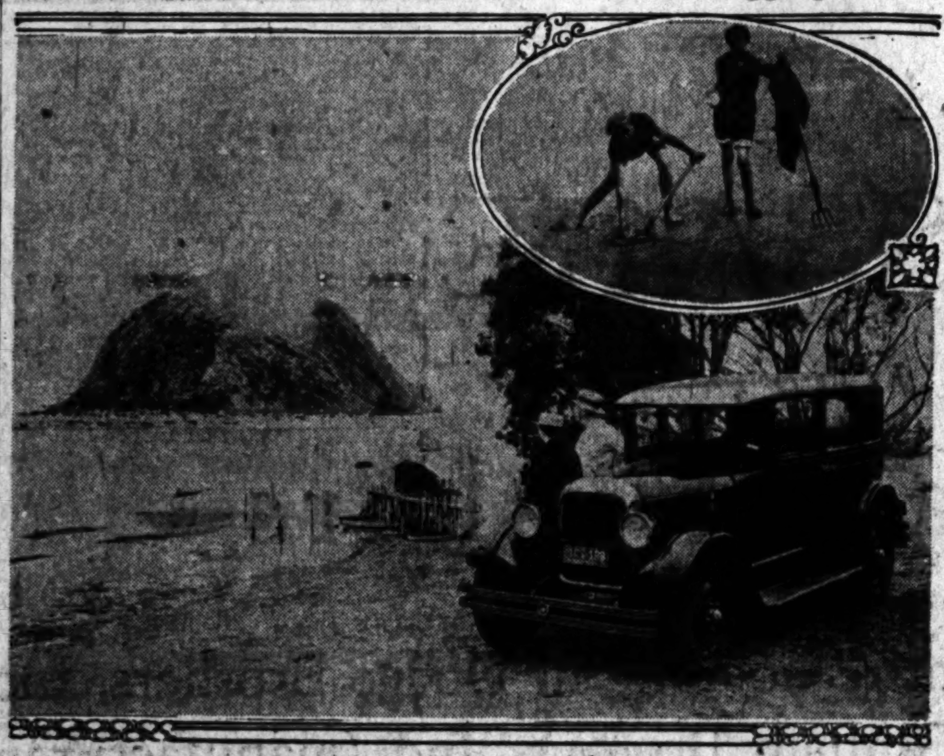
"Your physical comfort cannot be valued in dollars," says Martin, "but the added safety that comes through steady riding and better steering control over rough roads is a most valuable asset. The reduction of maintenance cost on your car from the time it is equipped with Martin shock absorbers has a definite, measurable value. It alone is ample to make the installation a good investment. Extra dividends are paid in every mile of travel through greater safety and that sense of comfort that comes by converting jolts and jars into soothing, restful riding.

"The construction and operation of Martin shock absorbers have been reduced to great simplicity. In the new clutch-type dual-action models several circular plates, or discs, are held together under adjustable pressure. These discs are so arranged that there are two units—the small unit that smooths out the 'washboard' road and minor bumps and ruts both on the bound and rebound, and the large unit that takes full care of heavy jolts caused by the car passing over larger obstructions or deeper chuck holes.

PASS OPENED

Berthoud Pass in Colorado is now open and in good condition, advises the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

Pacific Coast—Morro Rock—Clam Digging



The Studebaker is standing on the shore by Morro Rock, shrouded by a halo of fog in this instance. The inset of Alex Miller and Leo Pretzer of Fresno shows the boys digging clams at Pismo Beach.

PONTOON BRIDGES

Pontoon bridges are still in effect at Auburndale and across the San Jacinto River out of Hemet as well as one across the Temecula River bridge, reports the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

ONE-WAY ROAD

A twenty-minute delay is now in effect north of Fish Camp between Santa Barbara and Ventura on account of four miles of one-way road caused by sea wall construction, reports the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

MIND CHANGED

One manufacturer who planned to use the worm drive in his car changed his mind when he found it would cost $16,000,000 to change machinery, etc., says a report to Marshall & Clampett, distributor of the Stutz vertical eight.

Truck Added to Fleet of Creamery Cars

Adding to its equipment in order to meet a rising business, the Burr Creamery Company has just purchased two new two-ton Graham Brothers trucks through the Albertson Motor Company. This announcement was made yesterday by Myron C. Albertson of the Albertson Motor Company, dealers for Dodge Brothers cars and Graham Brothers trucks.

The deal with the Burr Creamery Company was negotiated through E. C. Huber, representing the truck department of the Albertson Motor Company. According to Mr. Huber, the Burr Creamery already owned a one-ton Graham Brothers truck, and purchased the larger machines to cope with business increases. Charles Burr bought the trucks for his concern.

"This is just another instance where Graham Brothers truck economy brought repeat business to the Albertson Motor Company," Mr. Huber declares. "The Burr Creamery Company was satisfied with the service rendered by their first Graham Brothers truck, and when the time came to expand business operations, the creamery came back for more truck equipment."

FACTORY BEHIND

The Chandler-Cleveland Motors Corporation, manufacturers of Chandler automobiles, report that they are at maximum production and have better than 2000 undelivered orders for immediate shipment. The demand for Chandlers since they introduced their 1927 models has, and is, increasing so rapidly that the factory feel that they will never be able to catch up on their immediate shipment orders, says O. J. Rose, general manager of the W. P. Herbert Company, local Chandler representatives.

RESERVE POWER SAVES TIME

When a motor truck has ample power to move its load under all conditions it means there will be no delay occasioned on account of stalling and waiting for help to get out of deep excavations and other like places where large motor trucks go. If it has more than ample power, that means that it can pull these heavy loads at good speeds and make more trips per day, points out William E. Bush, distributor of Pierce-Arrow motor trucks.

"This extra power is built into the big Pierce-Arrow trucks," said Mr. Bush. "It is the result of the dual valve engine being able to obtain every ounce of power from the fuel at each explosion. This also results in lowered fuel consumption and reduces engine strain to a minimum.

"This engine as a whole is an example of how fine a power plant can be made ... as exacting as ... ards. But the ... gine's great power ... line consumption ... it has two ... valves for ... two spark ... charge.

Air-cooling—"Their" staunchest ally—points the way to still greater victories

"THEIR" great triumph reflects the adventuresome and conquering spirit of today. It suggests that today is the beginning of a still greater age of mechanical achievement. An age in which man's ingenuity will carry him to undreamed of heights.

The air-cooled motor was a most important factor in this great victory over distance and elements. And today the air-cooled motor points the way to greater performance—greater endurance—greater mechanical victories throughout the automotive world.

The Franklin automobile, as the means of perfecting the air-cooled motor for the world, stands in the foreground of today's achievements. Twenty-five years ago Franklin pointed the way—and gave a glimpse of the heights which ingenuity and correct engineering have now attained.

Franklin's many other exclusive features are just as advanced—have just such intrinsic merit. These, too, point the way to greater performance, greater comfort, greater economy in motor car ownership. They help explain the enthusiastic widespread endorsement of Franklin principles. They show why the Franklin Owner's next car is so generally another Franklin.

Chamberlin's heroic flights—both when making the New York-to-Germany record flight—and when establishing the 51⅙ hour endurance record—were accomplished with the aid of an air-cooled motor.... Hour after hour—unfalteringly—the man and the motor kept up the terrific grind—until the goal each time had been attained.

RADIATOR STRONG

"Nash radiators are of the tubular type, which is a stronger and more efficient construction than the honeycomb type," says R. S. Craig, service manager of the Troy Motor Sales Company, Nash distributors.

RADIO DRIVER

A Peerless six-sixty sedan without a driver was piloted through Detroit traffic by radio from another Peerless car half a block away, states a report to J. W. Leavitt & Co., Peerless distributor.

Book Issued as Motorist's Aid in Driving

O. J. Rose, manager of the W. P. Herbert Company, local Chandler representatives, has good news for local motorists who wish to improve their driving and general knowledge of a motor car.

Mr. Rose is offering to all motorists, regardless of the make of car they drive, a free book called "Helpful Hints on Driving a Motor Car," published by the Chandler-Cleveland Motors Corporation to further the ideals sponsored by the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce and the various safety movements generally.

"There are no strings to this proposition," said Rose. "We feel that the average motorist is overlooking many of the fine points in driving and that he or she will gain considerably more pleasure and enjoyment from the car by operating it properly.

"Then, too, the average motorist is extremely wasteful—although it is usually unconscious waste. There's a right and wrong way to park, to apply brakes, to shift gears, to do a dozen other commonplace, everyday things. And the right way not only spares the car, but saves the motorist money besides."

"Nash body styles have set a new standard for the industry," says John J. Troy, president of the Troy Motor Sales Company, Nash distributors.

CAR SURE

"Whether you are setting out on a 400 or a 4000-mile trip, the Nash special six will carry you through just as surely as Lindbergh flew to Paris," says LeRoy Spencer, sales director of the Troy Motor Sales Company, Nash distributors.

SEVENTH PLACE

In a report received by the Barrows Motor Company, distributor of Moon six cars, the export records show that the Moon stands seventh in the Argentine car registrations.

Information

the motorist finds an excellent road leading south through a rolling, pine, oak and cedar-studded country to Julian.

South from Julian to the Borderland Highway, one finds the usual good decomposed granite and gravel road via Cuyamaca Lake, passing en route a point where an exceedingly excellent view of Imperial Valley is had.

Encountering the Borderland route a short distance out of Descanso, one turns to the right, or west, and traverses perfect granite highway to within two and one-half miles of the Willows. Pavement is encountered at this point and is continuous the remaining distance to the city of San Diego through an attractive semimountainous section that is now and then dotted with enterprising towns.

The return journey may be made either along the coast or via the inland route. Should one use the former, an excellent concrete highway is had passing through the attractive towns of La Jolla, Del Mar and several others to Oceanside, where one encounters the already outlined section from Oceanside to Los Angeles.

Should the inland route be used, one finds paved highway complete to Elsinore via a very rich farming country through Escondido, Bonsall, Fallbrook, Temecula and Murrietta. From Elsinore several routes are available, all of which are paved. One goes via Riverside and the Valley Boulevard; another via Corona, Santa Ana, Anaheim, Orange or Fullerton, thence to Los Angeles and still another via Corona, Pomona and the Valley Boulevard.

Auto Owners Fail to Give Due to Behemoth of Burden

The average motorist, spinning along the highways in his comfortable automobile, forgets to pay proper tribute to that behemoth of burden—the motor truck. W. L. Moreland, president of the Moreland Motor Truck Company, believes that too little credit is given the motor truck for its part in making possible really pleasant passenger car travel over perfect highways.

"More than any other single factor, the motor truck has speeded the actual work of road building," said Moreland. "Without the motor truck less than one-tenth of the present system of paved and improved roads that lace the State could have been completed by now. Men have been engaged in building roads for thousands of years, but never was there a period in which roads could be built faster and better than at this time.

"For instance, the building of what is perhaps the world's greatest artery, the Appian Way. Imagine hundreds of men toiling and straining at huge blocks of stone, lifting them with crude cranes and dragging them to the scene of road building on lumbering sledges. What was years of work for the Romans is a matter of days for the road engineer of today.

"Steam shovels and human-like machinery are part of modern highway construction. But the actual transportation of materials—where speed counts most—is up to the motor truck. It is here that these fleet beasts of burden get in the effective work that distinguishes modern road building from the crawling methods of yesterday.

"If the world had to depend upon antiquated equipment for the building of ways over which to drive, the automobile would not enjoy so immense a popularity. Yes, the passenger car owner can well afford to give some thanks to the motor truck for its part in the speedy providing of table-like highways of the West," concluded the truck manufacturer.

SPEED TESTS MACHINE

sociation, they must be stock models in every sense of the word for they are torn down and every part measured before official recognition is given for any records made.

"Auburn has recently made two high marks and broke three records in track speed tests. An Auburn 8-88 roadster acquitted itself most notably in a stock car race on the Atlantic City speedway. The Auburn averaged 84.347 miles per hour for the seventy-five miles.

"Earlier this year an Auburn 8-88 touring car, strictly stock, averaged 68.37 miles per hour for 1000 miles on the Culver City speedway. It broke the previous 1000-mile record by eight and one-half miles per hour. This test not only showed speed but stamina also for a car that will continue that high speed for such a distance certainly must be staunchly built and finely engineered."

Dealer Given Appreciative Owner's Note

In these days of good automobiles the average motor car owner takes it for granted that his car should give him faithful performance and it is very often the case that he fails to give his dealer the credit for having sold him an unusually good car. Occasionally, however, an owner waxes enthusiastic over his car's performance and voluntarily writes his dealer about it.

One of many received locally, however, by the Oldsmobile dealer is worth, of more than passing mention because of its details of long trips and hard usage accorded the car. The letter, which is dated June 13, reads as follows:

"I just wanted to tell you what remarkable satisfaction I have obtained from the 1922 Oldsmobile, model 43-A which I purchased five years ago.

"This car has never been in the shop but once, and that was due to a wreck. I have just returned from a 7800-mile trip, on which I have not spent anything for expenses except for gas and oil, and one puncture repair. On this trip I traveled from Sweetwater, Tex., through to Los Angeles in three and one-half days. This was a distance of 1786 miles, through desert and mountains, and the car never faltered at any time, although we were traveling approximately 500 miles a day. My car will run 1000 miles on a quart of oil right now.

"I have used seven other makes of cars, but not one of them has compared with my Oldsmobile.

"I believe that with proper lubrication, that the Oldsmobile will run at least eight to ten years in active service.

"Nobody could ask for a better car.

"Yours very truly,

[Signed] "D. P. HARGROVE."

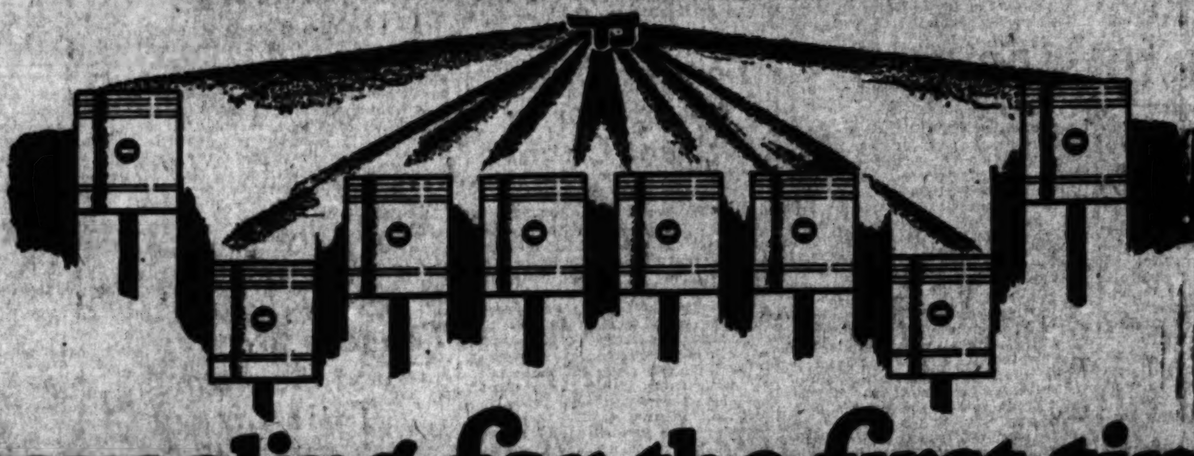
Tip of Finger Steering Has Strong Appeal

When an automobile can be steered with a finger tip, that distinctive feature marks a line of cleavage between motoring ease and fatigue. Likewise it gives a tremendous advantage on the side of safety in these days of heavy traffic, declares Willard Barrows, head of the Barrows Motor Company, distributor of Moon six automobiles.

"The enormous increase of women drivers during the last few years has exerted a very strong influence in motor-car refinements," said Mr. Barrows. "Especially has it been reflected in ease of control. One of the greatest steps in this direction has been the perfection of the cam and lever steering apparatus that provides full control of cars with balloon tires with a minimum of physical effort. This is because of its high leverage.

The only Eight of its kind in the World



Revealing for the first time the facts about Hupmobile's great hyper-expansion engine

WITH characteristic conservatism, Hupmobile has waited for more than two years to emphasize the vital importance of one of the greatest motor car engineering advances ever made.

The volume of proof has now rolled up so high that Hupmobile can announce, beyond any shadow of a doubt, hyper-expansion of fuel in the operation and performance of its Eight.

The problem which Hupmobile solves is still the outstanding and unsolved problem in every other automobile plant.

16 7-10% Greater Expansion

The efficiency of any motor car engine depends upon the degree of expansion as the fuel is burned or exploded in the cylinders.

Power, smoothness, economy, speed, pick-up—all are in exact proportion to the completeness of fuel expansion.

Assuming the expansion in the better motor car engines to be 100 per cent, the improvement in the Hupmobile Eight is so marked that Hupmobile expansion is rated at 116 7-10 per cent.

Hupmobile hyper-expansion means that this Eight gets more power, more speed, faster pick-up, greater smoothness, out of every drop of gasoline, from low grade to high.

It means economy so high that it is literally without parallel among eights, and actually excels many sixes.

It means that the Hupmobile Eight engine is the most completely developed in America today to get these amazing results from any grade of gasoline; and to utilize to the utmost the extra power and speed and acceleration of the higher grade fuels.

Finally, it means that Hupmobile has already reached the high level of efficiency toward which all engineers are striving; that it is setting the pace for the entire industry in engine operation and performance.

See for yourself the results of Hupmobile Hyper-Expansion

Have the dealer let you take a Hupmobile Eight for an hour. Ask it to do the things you have always wanted your car to do.

See how readily and willingly it responds. See how easily it meets any one and all of the tests you impose.

If you want a sharp comparison, drive any other eight first and then come to Hupmobile. You will find a welcome here.

Costs a Lot More to See It in England

Charles M. Schwab, multimillionaire steel magnate, tous California with his wife in one of the Earle C. Anthony, Inc. Packard eights. He is shown here on the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer lot on an English set which is copied from an actual town in England visited by Mr. Schwab when last abroad.

CAR TRADES REVISED

The business of marketing automobiles has grown beyond the stage of thumping the tom tom and beating the bushes to get people to give up their old cars for new ones, in the opinion of Earle C. Anthony, president of California's Packard distributors. Car owners are beginning to realize the folly of making presents of about half the real value in their motor cars to utter strangers. They are awakening to the cost of trading their machines for new models.

"Questionnaires conducted among all the buyers of new Packard cars show that a majority expect to keep their new machines at least twice as long as they held the cars they formerly owned," says Anthony. "They are through with annual birthday parties.

"More and more motor car purchasers are beginning to apply the same good business judgment to the buying of automobiles that they would exercise in any other investment," he continues. "Packard, before the war, foresaw the wisdom of a change in the general automobile merchandising plan. Plans then made were interrupted by the war, but at its conclusion it stepped out as a pioneer in the new order. Basing its appeal on good business it has been making thousands of converts from the ranks of those who trade out the miles in their cars rather than ride them out. It stepped in and pre-empted a new field. Packard has been selling an idea, a money saving idea.

"On the face of things it would appear that we are trying to cut off our own nose when we tell a man who has just bought a new car from us 'here, take this car and drive out all the miles we have built into it. We don't want to see you on the matter of any new car for years.'

"However, our questionnaires from all over the country have proven to us what we already believed true that the public would rally around the maker who would build a car with years of useful and desirable life, at a fair price and then refrain from making changes in it each year solely for the purpose of intriguing its owner to turn it in for a new model.

Touring Car Character in Great Change

Automobiles of character and individuality are now demanded by owners of touring cars in the luxury class. They are not satisfied with the conventional-appearing car but want extreme rakishness, long, low, sleek lines and above all, power and speed. The high-grade open model must be sporty and provide dashing performance, declares Ed R. Barnett, of Collins-Barnett, Inc., distributor of Stearns-Knight automobiles.

"Most luxury touring car owners also have enclosed cars for formal occasions and they want their open models to be beautiful and showy," said Mr. Barnett. "That is why so many of them have been attracted to the new Stearns-Knight eight-cylinder touring car.

"It is long, low, rakish and opulent looking, exceedingly smart and gives the impression of unlimited power and speed. It resembles the type of close-coupled body sometimes termed a phaeton, but offering far greater room in the rear compartment than is found in any phaeton. Its seats are reassuringly deep and comfortable with full support for the back and there is ample leg room.

"The low appearance is enhanced by the design of the collapsible top which lifts at the back in an easy curve and swings forward over the windshield with a distinctly pleasing drop. The design is such that the rear seat is carried well forward of the rear spring bolts, giving the body a cradling effect which adds greatly to riding comfort."

ONE HUNDRED HORSEPOWER

Although the Stearns-Knight eight engine is rated at 39.2 horsepower, it actually develops more than 100 brake horsepower, points out L. S. Collins of Collins-Barnett, Inc., Stearns-Knight distributor.

The Troy Motor Sales Company has distributed Nash cars in Southern California ever since the first Nash was placed on the market in the spring of 1917.

Money Show by Machines Thing of Past

Ostentation and display in automobiles are rapidly becoming a thing of the past, is the pronouncement of Stephen S. Nerney, Hollywood Lincoln dealer. Not so many years ago if one came into a great deal of money it was quite usual to indulge in many things to apprise the public of that fact, chief among which was a bizarre appearing foreign car.

People who are in a position to buy high-grade cars today seek service, ability and beauty. The days when a man wanted the world to know that he had a lot of money are, like the days of '49 of the past. The public is beginning to realize that it can get more worth and beauty in automobiles manufactured here than by sending abroad for a car with a foreign name and big customs duty.

"There was a time," says Nerney, "when the major—one of the essential things required of a high-priced car—was that it should be an evidence or display of wealth. Today the people who buy Lincolns look for two things—a car that will be always at their service free from mechanical defects and a machine whose beauty satisfies their pride of ownership."

Nerney has long been dealing with high-grade automobile purchasers and claims that one reason wealthy people stopped importing foreign cars is the excessive price and long delays necessary when a part went wrong. With a car built in this country, such as the Lincoln, the resources of the factory are always available and with dealers located conveniently in all localities, not only are adjustments or repairs inexpensive, but they can be obtained within a few hours' time.

Tough Name but Tuttle Can Pronounce It

Did you ever have explained to you how to pronounce the name of this Swedish champion distance runner who beat Paavo Nurmi some time ago, but who was himself defeated three weeks ago at the Los Angeles Coliseum by Nick Carter of the Los Angeles Athletic Club athletic team.

Well, here is the way Edvin explained it to Hal W. Tuttle, assistant general manager of the Howard Automobile Company, Buick distributors, when he returned to Tuttle the Buick sedan loaned him as his official car during his stay in Los Angeles:

"You know, in Swedish," said Wide, "the 'W' is sounded like your 'V,' while the 'I' has the sound of double 'E.' The 'D' is pronounced just as you would sound it, and the final 'E' has the sound of 'A.' Now you have it in full, 'V-E-E-D-A'."

Wide came to Los Angeles for a match race with several of our local athletic stars, the race being a big feature of the local program. Wide defeated the famous Nurmi some time ago in the two mile in the extremely fast time of 9m. 1s. He also has broken the mile and a quarter record.

Here he came into very keen competition and Nick Carter, famous star of the Los Angeles Athletic Club, beat him in the one mile by approximately ten yards in the almost record time of 4m. 16 2-5s. This is the second best time in the United States this year, according to Charlie Keppen, athletic expert of the Los Angeles Athletic Club, and Boyd Comstock of the club's athletic commission.

Wide was highly pleased at his entertainment and treatment while in Los Angeles and especially appreciated the use of the big Buick sedan loaned him by Tuttle from the Howard Automobile Company.

Tongues May Twist Hours on This Layout

Some inquisitive youth back at the Reo factory in Lansing started wondering what the Armenians, Croatians, Bulgarians and other foreign people sounded like when they said Flying Cloud, which is the name of one Reo's 1927 models.

The result of this inquisitiveness is shown herewith, and may be pronounced at the reader's own risk.

CAMPERS MUST CARRY SHOVELS

Effective the 15th inst., all camping parties entering the government forests must carry at least one shovel and one ax per automobile, such equipment to be of size and character suitable for fire fighting purposes.

This ruling is made under the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Automobile Club of Southern California is warning motorists of this section to comply. It is pointed out that California, with its tremendous motoring population and nearly 20,000,000 acres of national forests, probably is affected more than any other State by this condition imposed upon campers. The order is regarded as a further step by friends of the forest to conserve these national treasures.

Champions Always Hang Together

Edwin Wide (pronounced Veeda,) champion distance runner of Sweden, and who defeated Paavo Nurmi in the two-mile in 9m. 1s., and who was defeated here by Nick Carter of the Los Angeles Athletic Club team at the Coliseum recently in the mile in an exhibition race, with the official Buick sedan from the Howard Automobile Company, Buick distributors.

MOTOR QUIETED

Many forms of snubbers and shock absorbers have been invented and used to eliminate road shocks; but Star car engineers have adapted this principle to eliminate motor vibration. All metal-to-metal contact between the motor and the frame is eliminated and vibration is prevented from passing to the body of the car.

"Fast, easy steering makes the Nash exceptionally safe in heavy traffic or over rough roads," says John J. Troy, president of the Troy Motor Sales Company, Nash distributors.

OLD FACTORY

The F. B. Stearns Company, manufacturer of the Stearns-Knight, is one of the oldest American automobile manufacturers and is now entering on its twenty-eighth year. It pioneered in producing cars with the Knight sleeve-valve motor in America, says L. S. Collins of Collins-Barnett, Inc., Stearns-Knight distributor.

The chassis of the Star car is completely lubricated by the alemite system, the latest method of keeping every part well oiled.

Production Is Speeded Up to Meet Demand

Because of the growing popularity of the Willys-Knight Great Six cars of all body types, production at the Willys-Overland plant has been speeded up during the last two months, according to information received here by L. J. McCracken of the Willys-Overland dealers' organization. It has maintained a leading position in the better-car class ever since the automobile shows were held during the early part of the year, he stated.

"Since the new models were presented in January, factory production figures have mounted steadily," said Mr. McCracken. "With the coming of spring the demand became very strong and the indications are at present that the great six will show a new high-sales mark before the end of the year.

GOB GOLD STRIPER

By Logan E. Ruggles, U. S. N.

THE American man-o'-warsman, perhaps better known to the layman as a sailor, blue jacket or "gob," as many prefer to call [illegible]selves and have others call them, [illegible] into his own when the Navy of the [illegible] States discarded sails as a means [illegible]pulsion and adopted steam, mighty [illegible] and electric drive for its ships of [illegible]

[illegible] the advent of the great superdreadnoughts and a farsighted Secretary [illegible] Navy, came, also, the chance for [illegible] enlisted man of the Navy to become [illegible]ficer—a goldstriper. In 1917 Congress [illegible] a law that would permit 100 men [illegible] enlisted ranks to enter the Naval [illegible] at Annapolis, Md. Up until 1927 [illegible] full quota of 100 had never entered [illegible] academy from the enlisted personnel, [illegible] in 1926, ninety-nine passed the suc[illegible] mental tests, and ninety-six actu[illegible] took up the four-year course at the [illegible] nautical school; one of those pass[illegible] the mental tests failed on the rigid [illegible] examination, one was killed in [illegible] accident while on leave in Los An[illegible] and one entered the U. S. Coast [illegible] service as an engineering cadet.

Full Quota

[illegible] year, however, the full quota of [illegible] men will enter the academy. At the [illegible] station, San Diego, fifty men suc[illegible] passed the mental examinations, [illegible] all were lucky in passing the physical [illegible]. Of this number sixteen of the [illegible] are natives of California.

The class this year assembled in November, 1926, for the naval academy pre[illegible] class at San Diego, and the final examinations were held there in April. A total of 100 men assembled, only 62 [illegible] for the final tests, the others [illegible] dropped out as the preliminary [illegible] progressed. And 50 were successful, [illegible] an average of 77 per cent of the [illegible] left in classes to pass the final and [illegible] rigid tests, both physically and men[illegible]

The present-day commissioned person[illegible] of the naval service have in their [illegible] a chance to help the enlisted man, [illegible] this most certainly has been done. The Navy Department appoints an officer [illegible] charge of the school at both training [illegible]—east and west coast—where en[illegible] men are placed in training, at San [illegible] and Hampton Roads, Virginia, for [illegible] east coast. The officer usually is a [illegible], a graduate from the naval [illegible]. Aside from this officer, there [illegible] five ensigns, all graduates of the academy, [illegible] act as instructors. The five officers usually are men who have served on [illegible] classes of ships and assigned to [illegible] duty by the bureau of navigation. A chief petty officer is assigned to [illegible] as company commander.

Local Talent

Of the sixteen men to "make the grade" [illegible] California, seven were Los Angeles [illegible]. They are: Charles Warren Aldrich, [illegible] Andrews, Leonard Jami[illegible], Elwin Levi Farrington, John [illegible] Fitzgerald, Daniel Small Morris, [illegible] Golding Steele.

Those who passed the mental and physical examinations from other sections of [illegible] State are: Walter Clyde Bailey, Ray[illegible] Henry Nelson, George Irwin Purdy and Willis Manning Thomas, of San [illegible]; Jack Cashman, Neil Howland Foley, George Perry Huff, William Milton [illegible], and James Seagrove Morel, of San Francisco.

Richard S. Andrews of Los Angeles was [illegible] only "rated" man of the Californians. [illegible] is a yeoman third class, a petty officer. [illegible] L. Farrington is a seaman first [illegible] (or will be until he enters the academy this June, when he will be classed [illegible] cadet or midshipman) as is Daniel [illegible] Morris, another Los Angeles boy. Wil[illegible] M. Thomas of San Diego is a seaman [illegible] class, and all the others are sea[illegible] second class.

[illegible] in the fifty men who [illegible] the final tests at San Diego are sixteen Californians, three each from Indiana, Texas, Washington and Montana; two each from Florida, Georgia, Idaho Oregon and Michigan and one each from the following States: New Mexico, Colorado, Nebraska, Oklahoma, Minnesota, Illinois, South Carolina, Iowa, Mississippi, Missouri, Tennessee and Wisconsin.

Good Sports

The academy class was a happy bunch of youngsters during their time at the station, and coming from many ships and many different stations in the naval service, representing more than twenty States of the Union, they got along in perfect harmony as is attested by their cooperation in all undertakings. They had a crack swimming and wrestling team, a very fine boxing squad, a baseball, football and other athletic squads, a fine orchestra, a rifle team, a dandy racing cutter crew, and, in fact, every sport that is known to the service, they found time, despite the many various and trying studies, to indulge in recreational periods.

Lieut. Benton W. Decker, officer in charge of the school, and the son of a retired admiral of the Navy, took his men on various trips on shore and cruises at sea. During the time the destroyer squadrons were holding the short range battle practice off the California coast, many of the class went on board to get "an eye full" of what it was all about. The orchestra of the class not only rendered entertainment and music for the class parties, but they went aboard destroyers and played for their crews. The smaller ships of the Navy have no orchestra, and the academy classmen received many invitations to visit the so-called "black boats."

A general report of the conduct of the men shows that all were good and excellent. In fact four men went through the five-month course without a single scratch against their records, they were: W. C. Bailey, R. H. Nelson, B. M. Chetzler and L. S. Pancake. And by a queer turn of fate, three of these youngsters are Californians.

The Tutors

In paying homage to the lucky fifty who successfully passed the mental and physical tests, it is only natural that the heads of the administration of the training station be mentioned. To Capt. Harris Laning, former commanding officer of the battleship Pennsylvania, and well known in western waters, belongs a great share of the honor of California breaking the record in point of successful candidates for the famous nautical school at Annapolis. His co-worker, Commander Bruce L. Canaga, executive officer of the station, is also well and favorably known in the battle fleet of the Pacific. Commander Canaga was formerly attached to the flagship of the destroyer squadrons as executive officer, the same capacity he now is in at the "beach job." These two fine officers have a wonderful organization, and their records of efficiency will be rewarded when the selection board meets in July—that is a prophecy.

The courses covered during the preparatory work consisted of geometry, algebra, physics, ancient and American history, English, and, of course, usual drills, manual of arms, and gunnery drills, the latter having been gained from actual association with gun crews on shipboard.

The chief petty officer in charge of the company, which started with over 100 men, was C. A. McKibben, who transferred to the inactive duty list on May 17. "Mac" had more that twenty years' honorable service to his credit and had gained and held the respect and confidence of his "future admiral" contingent throughout the semester. Aside from being an excellent drillmaster, McKibben had a fine personality, and no doubt every man of the 1927 academy class was sorry to part company with him.

Another Try

But twelve of the entire class taking the examinations failed to "make the grade," and seven of these lads will have a chance next year, as they will be within the "age limit" when the class is formed in November for the 1928 class. Men who enlist in the Navy before July 1, 1927, and who are only eighteen years of age, will be eligible for the class to be formed this year.

After having passed the mental and physical tests, a man who enters the naval academy receives $750 per year as pay from the government while attending the academy. While at the academy each midshipman draws $24 ration money aside from his monthly pay, and upon graduation from the school, ranked as one of the four best in the United States, each man receives a commission as an ensign in the navy or a commission as a second lieutenant in the marine corps, the latter being a small percentage of the graduates, and usually is by choice of the men graduating. The course is four years, and the education is said to be worth $40,000.

Each year of the academy training the men are given a cruise to interesting ports of the world. This year the cruise brings the 1500 midshipmen to the West Coast, touching at Los Angeles Harbor, San Diego and San Francisco. A slight change has been made in the itinerary this year as was previously announced: The cruise will start from Annapolis on June 3, arrive Colon, Canal Zone, June 11, depart June 15 from Panama, and arrive at San Diego on June 27. The "middies" leave San Diego on July 1, arrive at San Francisco the 3rd and remain there until the 9th, arriving at Los Angeles Harbor July 14. They will remain in port until July 18, leaving for Panama on that date. Arrival at Panama is scheduled for July 30, leave on August 2, and arrive at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, on August 5. Target practice and maneuvers will be held while in Cuban waters, and then sail for home on August 20, arriving at Annapolis on August 25.

The cruise will take the "future admirals" more than 10,000 miles, give them an excellent opportunity to see the great engineering feat at the Panama Canal, see cities of the western coast and a trip in both the Atlantic and Pacific. The cruise will last just eighty-three days, forty-four of which will be spent at sea and thirty-nine in port. The Oklahoma and Nevada, two familiar sights off the breakwater, are to make the trip with the middies. These vessels have been assigned to the eastern scouting fleet, but will be one of the first western ships to be back in home waters.

Upon their return to Annapolis, preparations will be made for the September leave period, the midshipmen being granted 30 days' leave in this month to visit their homes in every section of the country. This is one of the big annual expectations in both Annapolis and West Point, the military academy.

When the class first started last November, practically every ship in the battle fleet was represented with one or more men. The West Virginia, Tennessee and Idaho had one each in the first section; the Holland and Melville had one each in the second, and the third section was composed of men from the various ships as follows: Maryland, 5; Mississippi, 1; Tennessee, 3; Nevada, 1; Pennsylvania, 1; Henderson (transport) 1; Arizona, 4; Colorado, 2; Melville, (tender) 1; Meyer (destroyer,) 1; California, 1, and New Mexico, 1. In the fourth section there were, Marine Base, 4; Relief (hospital ship.) 2; Naval Air Station, 1; Colorado, 1; Melville, 1; New Mexico, 3; Nevada, 1; Medusa, (repair ship) 1; Oklahoma, 1; Omaha, 2, and Arizona, 2. There was one man from Guam and one from Cavite, Philippine Islands, both of whom were marines. One man was from the Asiatic fleet, having formerly been attached to the cruiser Sacramento, a member of the Chinese river patrol in the Orient.

Following are the names of the men from the west coast who will enter the "four-year grind" this July: W. H. Adams, C. W. Aldrich, A. H. Alston, R. S. Andrews, W. C. Bailey, C. H. Barr, R. L. Bence, Max Berueffy, L. J. Bickford, M. B. Blake, J. A. Carter, J. D. Cashman, H. A. Chamberlain, G. D. Cottrell, E. E. Evans, E. L. Farrington, J. A. Fitzgerald, N. H. Foley, B. M. Ghetzler, G. P. SOME REFLECTIONS

By J. A. Graves

WELL may a person of ordinary means wonder where we are going to land, as far as personal expenses are concerned. In a skirmish in a divorce case, where two of the film aristocracy are airing their woes, testimony showed that the wife, who is the plaintiff in the case, had spent, in the month of April, $1100 for servants. She has two children and nine servants. For the love of Mike, what does a woman, not long used to luxury, with two children dependent upon her, want with nine servants?" They must wait on each other. Some women take care of nine children without any servants. Then she spent, in the same month, considerably over $800 for groceries. She should buy them at wholesale. Let us see. $800 a month for groceries would amount to $26.66 per day. She must have lived on pate de fois gras and humming birds' tongues. Each of the other necessities of her household, purchased by her, was equally extravagant in price. Well may the ordinary citizen ask, "What are we coming to?"

Such disclosures would frighten a young man in the ordinary walks of life, who was contemplating matrimony, entirely out of the notion. But thanks to goodness, the majority of women are not as extravagant as this one proved herself to be. The idea of any judge listening to such rot, without rebuking the witness, is painful. The woman probably made the expenditures, but a good old-fashioned judge would have told her to cut her servants to three, to be more careful in her expenditures, to reduce her grocery bills and not come back to him again with any such a reckless exhibition of extravagance. The courts can, if they will do so, correct many abuses now prevailing. However, to further inflict an outraged public, the complacent judge allowed himself, sitting on the bench, to be photographed with this spendthrift woman while she was detailing the items of her extravagance.

This may not be as outrageous a violation of the traditions and decencies of the bench as was Judge Houser's allowing himself to be photographed with one of the arch-criminals of the age, the notorious Peete woman; but this last example is bad enough. Well may one exclaim with Cicero, "O tempora! O mores!"

The motion-picture industry has, without doubt, brought immense wealth to Los Angeles, but the immoral atmosphere which it has created, the scandals which continue to afflict the public from Hollywood, the center of the movie industry; the debaucheries disclosed as prevalent there; the universal habit of divorce among the movie stars, the suicides, assassinations and murders committed there, have exerted an evil influence upon our population that money cannot compensate for.

The very best of the movie stars, the idols of the public, have not hesitated to betake themselves to States whose divorce laws are more lenient than ours, fake a residence there long enough to comply with the law, secure a divorce, and then joyfully fall into the arms of a waiting lover, to consummate another marriage prearranged before the recently obtained divorce was granted.

If the constitution of the United States would permit of it, I would be in favor of a Federal law exempting all of the people engaged in the movie industry from the necessity of the marriage ceremony, and allowing them to live together as they pleased without being united in matrimony. Such a course would be less harmful than the airing of their numerous and almost constant divorce proceedings in the daily press.

Of course there are many noble men and women engaged in the motion-picture industry. The above criticism does not apply to them. They deserve both the respect and the admiration of all of our people. That they can be virtuous, decent and self-respecting in the atmosphere in which they live, is much to their advantage.

A Whisper of the Wild and Woolly West

Old timers discuss the days when a man's most important article of clothing was a six shooter—

By Orrie W. Robertson

"AN' WHEN I saw them Injuns coming over the hill a-headin' fer our cook wagon, which was nearest to 'em, I knowed the jig was up."

It was Frank Murphy, veteran cowboy, speaking. We were sitting around the long table in Charles Siringo's den sipping our coffee. The conversation was lively and covered events of more or less historical importance since 1870. Murphy continued:

"I roweled my horse back toward the wagon and yelled fer the cook—he was a colored man—to cut that gray mule loose, climb on him an' foller us. But the cook thought we could lick the Injuns. He whipped up his team an' got the four mules to running, whilst the rest of us—they was eleven in the crew—lit out fer Dodge City. The cook couldn't keep up and he was unarmed. When I looked back I saw them shoot him off the seat an' he fell to the ground. The team was running away when I saw 'em last."

"Why didn't yuh stop and put up a fight?" somebody asked.

"Huh, what chance did we have with six-shooters against Winchester rifles? An' I only had three ca'tridges left. No sir, they wasn't anything else to do but make a run fer it. Whilst his horse was running full tilt one of the Mexican cowboys reached down an' cut his cinch. He threw his saddle away so's his horse could run faster an' . . ."

"What year did you say that was?" Charles Siringo cut in. He leaned forward—his eyes shining. This was a gala occasion and the great cowboy was enjoying it immensely. Gathered around him here were men of his own kind—men who had seen things—and done things. Makers of western history, they were.

"That was when the Northern Cheyennes broke out in 1878," Murphy replied. "The time ol' chief Dull Knife went on the warpath and killed so many settlers an' cowboys."

"In 1878! Why man, I well remember the time. Tell me—just where was that place you speak of?" Siringo and Murphy were now talking fast. Questions and answers flew across the table. Murphy explained:

"I was ridin' fer Tuttle an' Chapman, coming up the Chisholm Trail with 2300 head—mixed herd. We was about twenty-five miles south of Dodge City on Crooked Crik . . ."

Memories

"Crooked Crik!" Our host jumped to his feet. "I know the place! We cut your trail the second day after the fight. We found where your outfit camped that last night and then the wagon tracks running in a wide circle—saw where the Redskins finished your cook—guess we weren't more'n fifteen miles from you . . ."

"Say, how many years ago was that—le's see—"

"'Bout forty-eight years, wasn't it?"

"Forty-eight years!" broke in Al Hall jocosely. "Looks like you two ol' waddies (cowboys) would of kind-a stuck around and got acquainted then—'stead f waiting forty-eight years to get together."

Laughter drowned out the hearty rejoinder.

Ah, "them was the days!" and the nights! God, what nights. A man slept (what little chance he had to sleep) with one hand on his six-shooter and the other clinging to his blankets to keep the wind from blowing them away. He slept in his clothes, all except his boots. These he removed for two reasons—to use them for a pillow and also to make certain in case he was killed in his sleep—that no one could accuse him of having "died with his boots on." The cowboys cut their hair short to cheat the Indians of the satisfaction of scalping them.

But just think of it. Those two weather-seared plainsmen, away back there in 1878—each busy with the strenuous duties of the cowboys of that day—crossing each other's trail many times, but they never saw one another until here recently. And now the stories they will tell when they get together will be worth one's time to listen to.

It was on the occasion of a recent visit to Hollywood of Maj. Gordon W. Lillie, "Pawnee Bill," that several of his and Charles A. Siringo's friends decided to take advantage of the opportunity to have the two friends meet—they not having met in forty years.

Accordingly, arrangements were made and one Sunday afternoon several cars carrying the party pulled out of Hollywood and drove the twelve miles to Altadena, passing through the towns of Glendale, Eagle Rock and Pasadena on the way. The day could not have been finer had we ordered it and each town we passed through seemed to be just a little more beautiful than the last one, until in the semitropical Altadena the air was heavy with the sweet perfume of orange groves and roses.

We stopped at the curb in front of a little cottage that set back on the lot—the home of the noted cowboy, frontiersman and author, Charles A. Siringo. He was watching for us. He came down the path stepping briskly for a man of seventy-two years. He carries a cane, but I have never seen him lean on it, although he was severely wounded once when an outlaw shot him through the knee and he has been hurt a number of times from horses falling on him—a frequent occurrence in the handling of cattle and horses and the bane of all cowboys.

A Reunion

The meeting between Maj. Lillie and his party and Charles Siringo was accompanied by much wringing of hands and slapping of backs and after the introductions we all stood back, while the two principals of the interesting affair harked back to the past and rehearsed rapidly many thrilling incidents now recorded in American history of which both men had been witnesses to or taken active part in.

Maj. Gordon W. Lillie came into prominence in 1887 when, as the elected chief of the "Oklahoma Boomers," he led an army of settlers, 25,000 strong, in a spectacular campaign against unscrupulous land sharks and politicians who were using the United States Army in obstructing the lawful and peaceful settlement of Oklahoma by home-building American citizens. He was raised out on the Great Prairie at Wellington, Kan., a little settlement in the (then) Indian country far beyond any other outpost of civilization. At an early age he started out cowboying and hunting buffalo for the market. While engaged in these vocations he led a hazardous existence and took part in numerous gun fights and Indian wars.

Reminiscence

Pawnee Bill, who is an accomplished story teller, was speaking of his experiences in the show business and he mentioned Leonard Trainor as "the wildest cowboy that ever 'topped a bronk' in my show." Leonard Trainor has played important roles in several of Hollywood's best film productions.

George Townsend Cole, "Jack" as his friends call him, is an artist and known in Europe and America. He is the son of the late Senator Cornelius Cole, the intimate friend and adviser of Lincoln.

Since Will James's first book appeared, three years ago, the press has been finding interesting things to say of him. His three books, each illustrated with sixty of his own inimitable drawings, are among Scribner's best sellers.

Frank Murphy is writing a story of his life and the book will be titled "Fifty Years a Cowboy." That's quite a long time to be cowboying. The story he tells in the beginning of this article is an incident illustrative of the constant danger to which the cowboys were subjected in the rubescent seventies and eighties.

Charles Siringo corroborated that story in his writings and he also told me that he ran into those same Indians the day before he discovered where they routed Frank Murphy's crew. There were about 250 of the Cheyennes in the band and Siringo narrowly escaped being captured by them.

Any one who has attended the 101 Ranch Show in the last twenty years has heard the stentorian tones of Tex Cooper's voice booming across the arena announcing the events. He is a Deputy United States Marshal and was a Texas Ranger for many years. He never took a drink of liquor in his life and he never used any tobacco and he is "the youngest old man in the world today," he will tell you.

Here is a trait strongly represented among these pioneers that the youth of this country might do well to emulate, for at least five of the party use neither liquor nor tobacco of any description. Frank Murphy and Charlie Siringo both have stated that they are among the living today mainly because they made it a business to "keep sober and let the other fellow do the drinking."

Loose, careless habits were not healthy when every man carried a bowie knife or a young cannon on his hip. To be ever on the alert against the approach of enemies—and ceaseless vigilance—were principles expounded to the children in the cradle and were more necessary for existence than book learning.

Emmett Dalton is the only living survivor of the nine members that composed the famous "Dalton Gang." He is a prosperous business man and active in lodge and club circles of Hollywood and Los Angeles.

Al Hall and Ed Phillipps are cowboys of both the old regime and the new. Hall and Death Valley Scotty became lifelong pals when they were "stomping bronks" together in the Buffalo Bill Wild West Show in 1894-5. Phillipps was also a member of that organization during the nineties and he is one of the originators of fancy rope spinning.

Quaint daguerreotypes and souvenirs of early day characters with here and there modern photos of noted authors and actors cover the walls of Mr. Siringo's den. Outlaws and celebrities, side by side, all combine to form what he laughingly terms his "rogues' gallery."

In this bizarre setting we thrilled to the graphic narratives of buffalo hunting; playing hide and seek with bands of marauding savages or swimming stock through raging rivers. We laughed over tales of boyish fears of night sounds in the wilderness or encounters with wild animals. Their boyhood adventures while learning the rocky life of the cowpuncher were very similar to the experiences of all cowboys just starting out. They furnished the older members of the crews something to joke about. A CHANCE TO MAKE SOME EASY MONEY

Mediums Have Offer From Hardeen

ANY hard-working spiritualist medium who feels in need of a nice long vacation may obtain same without much effort during the coming week by taking advantage of the offer made by Hardeen, the magician, who is performing at the Hillstreet. Hardeen offers $10,000 for one message from his brother Houdini, which is just about as much money as the average medium is able to obtain by getting just 10,000 messages.

As pretty nearly everyone knows, Harry Houdini, who died a few months ago in the East, was the sworn foe of "fake" spiritualists. He invariably held himself ready and willing to duplicate by trickery any of the so-called "feats" of the mediums.

When a third brother passed away about a year ago Houdini and Hardeen, who were at the bedside, made a pact with the dying man in which they agreed upon four words which they committed to memory. All agreed to keep the words secret and, when any one passed on, to attempt to communicate with the living brothers, using the secret words as confirmation of the authenticity of the communication.

Houdini and Hardeen both reported that their brother was never able to communicate with them and Hardeen says the same thing now that his illustrious brother has followed along. He says that he would like to get a message from Houdini and offers a reward of $10,000 to any medium who will give him a message received from Houdini and containing any one or two of the secret words known only to the brothers.

Message From His Brother Wanted

As soon as Houdini was dead, a number of spiritual mediums made claims of having received communications from him, citing these as proving that Houdini regretted his life-long attacks on the mediums. In fact that was supposed to be the substance of the communications. However, none of the mediums was ever able to collect on their information through lack of ability to quote any or all of the words contained in the secret compact.

When Houdini died he turned over to Hardeen the paraphernalia used by him in putting on his three-hour show with which he was touring the country and Hardeen has taken the pick of the mystifying feats and is using them in his vaudeville offering. Hardeen at one time toured the country with his brother as the Houdini brothers but when Houdini finally adopted the name as his own legal cognomen, the living brother changed his to Hardini, and later to Hardeen.

Some Reflections

gineer Shaw's recommendations as to the Adams-street storm drain extras, were defeated for re-election, and that the fearless Councilman Cobden, who fought the Wilmington Park site steal single-handed and defeated it, was elected by a large majority, ought to convince the Parrot gang that it is not invincible. The efforts to unionize all Los Angeles city employees, thereby creating a closed-shop condition among them, signally failed. I doubt if there is an honest-minded voter in Los Angeles who does not believe that if Cryer had one-half of the backbone of Roosevelt, or Cleveland, or Coolidge, or of our old Mayor of Los Angeles, Henry T. Hazard, and had gone before the Council, as he had a right to do, he could have prevented the action taken by that body on the Adams-street drain extras, and also on the increase of salaries voted to city employees to the extent of some $400,000 per annum. But such action on his part would have interfered with the looting program of his boss, Kent Parrot. Personally, I believe that Mayor Cryer was in thorough accord with the Council on both propositions, that his vetoes were merely gestures to deceive the voting public, but they did not deceive them. Of course, Cryer's political future is gone. The bosses cannot again make him Mayor of this municipality. He may well grasp at a possible appointment to the supreme bench. Such a position would provide for him for a number of years, a better salary than he ever earned as a practicing attorney.

He could recover the respect of some of our people if he would break with Parrot, kick the Parrot gangsters off of his commissions, but he can never win the confidence of the great mass of the Los Angeles voters. He is too weak a character to ever attempt to do the things suggested above. His alliance with the blatant and raucous-voiced Hiram Johnson, will not help him. He will end his term as he began it, unless he resigns in the meantime to fill some position gained by him through some political deal, each day digging deeper and deeper the political grave which is waiting for him. You cannot expect reform from a timid man who owes his political existence to a man of the Parrot stripe. He will, undoubtedly, play out the game as he has begun it, unless he is recalled before his term ends.

Hiram Johnson has begun his campaign for re-election as United States Senator. As it is always necessary for him to have a bogey man to fight, he has invented one in a so-called power trust. He has been so inefficient as a Senator it does not seem possible that the people of Southern California will support him, notwithstanding he controls the State administration, and is hand-in-glove with the Parrot-Cryer gang.

There is some talk of running Maj. Walter K. Tuller against him. He is an able lawyer, a member of one of the most popular and successful firms in Southern California. He is a patriotic citizen, who rendered valuable service to his country during the World War. He rendered a still more valuable service to California as the author of amendments to our criminal statutes which will give the people something like an even break with the criminal classes, which they have not had for many years past.

The Johnson-Young-controlled Legislature, after a visit to Sacramento by Johnson, emasculated from the proposed amendments the permission giving the trial judges the right to comment upon the testimony in a criminal case. Probably Johnson was looking forward to the time when he will no longer be a Senator and may have to make his living, as he has at times in the past, defending criminals and he did not want the noose too tightly drawn.

If Maj. Tuller can be induced to oppose Johnson for the Senatorial nomination, I, for one, do not want to see the fight made solely on the ground that Northern California has two Senators. I would be willing for Northern California to have two Senators like Sam Shortridge, rather than to see a man from Southern California, like Cryer, or "Don't-let-them-fool-you Stephens," or some other scraggly politician, equally as obnoxious, in the Senatorial chair from Southern California. The fight against Johnson should be made not upon sectional grounds, but because,

First: He is not, and never was, a Republican in principle.

Second: He has not supported his party while Senator.

Third: By not openly supporting him, he beat Charles E. Hughes for the Presidency, while he carried the State of California by 300,000 majority for himself.

Fourth: He never turned his hand to elect Harding, or Coolidge, or Shortridge, —in fact, he has snubbed and belittled Shortridge on all occasions.

Fifth: He has no standing with the administration, and no influence in Washington with his fellow Senators. Shortridge is by far a bigger man among his fellow Senators, and with the House of Representatives, than Johnson ever was, or ever will be, and has rendered valuable service to his constituents, in Southern as well as in Northern Californa.

Sixth: His record as United States Senator has been a failure.

Seventh: While a candidate, against Harding, for the Presidential nomination, after the latter was nominated, he never congratulated him on his nomination, or tendered his assistance, or assisted in his election. The commonest country boor, losing a fight for the nomination for constable, would have the decency to congratulate his opponent.

If a good stiff fight is made against Johnson upon the grounds above specified, he can be beaten by Major Tuller, the lawyer, patriot and modest citizen, who never pounds himself on the breast and declares that he is the great "I am," as Johnson does, and the latter's scalp will be cleverly lifted at the 1928 primary.

It is astounding that greed and avarice should have controlled our last State election. Two or three banks in Los Angeles seemed to have had the absolute control of former Superintendent of Banks Johnson. He granted them all they asked for in the way of branch banks and refused the Bank of Italy similar privileges. This resulted in the substantial and financial support of Young, by Giannini and all of his friends and business connections, and this influence, without doubt, defeated Friend Richardson for re-election. Giannini was rewarded by the appointment, by Young of former Superintendent of Public Instruction Wood as bank commissioner, who immediately granted Giannini everything he asked for, and the end is not yet. Rome was once saved by the cackling of geese. Richardson lost the Governorship by banks cackling over what they thought was a dead mortal cinch on branch bank privileges.

The utter collapse of the Julian Petroleum Company may teach a few speculative idiots some sense. I have no sympathy with any individual or bank who loses on Julian stock. When the Los Angeles Times a few years ago refused to publish Julian's advertisements, the investing public should have taken notice. As to the statements broadcast by Julian, everyone must consider the source from which they emanate; but if any man, no matter what his station or following may be, advised people to buy Julian stock, and profited thereby, for such a person the contempt of honest people is not sufficient punishment.

Receivers and attorneys will now proceed to pick the bones of the rotten and odoriferous carcass of Julian Petroleum. Speculators who thought they could beat his game have lost their money. Many will weep and wail, but they will soon be ready to listen to some other faker promising them immense returns on investments made.

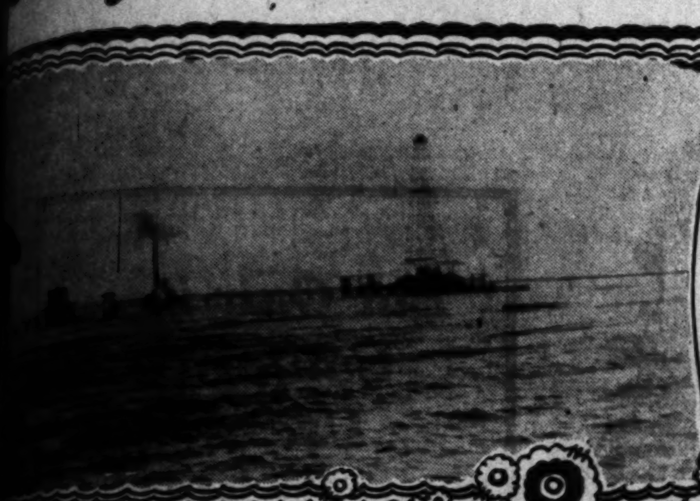
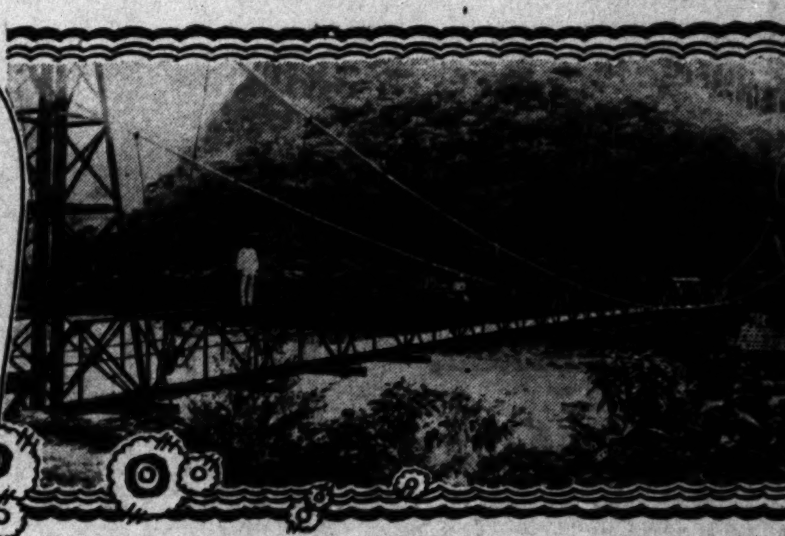
Californians Develop Venezuela Oil Fields





CHEMISTS EXPERIMENT HERE WITH RARE DYES

A DYE better and cheaper than those now largely used is the hope of University of Southern [illegible] chemists who have been working on the problem for several years.

No dyes are yet made, for the work has not been completed, but Charles F. [illegible], graduate student, and Dr. LeRoy Weatherby, under whose direction he is working, have made dyes in various shades of green and blue which would be half as expensive to produce on a large scale as the corresponding aniline dyes now in use. These dyes have been tested, and samples of dyed [illegible] can now be found in one of the little research rooms in the basement of the science building, where this work has been going on.

But there seems to the layman nothing very exciting about the discovery of a dye, even though it is cheaper to make than other dyes of the same quality. The discovery of insulin, or the isolation of the typhoid bacillus, excites the imagination. One pictures the direct application to the saving of life, the elimination of pain and sorrow. But the improvement of a commercial product may be also as far-reaching in its effects and also as significant ultimately to the man in the street.

Play Big Part

Dyes, especially, have played an important part in the history of nations, and are likely still to do so. Before the World War Germany had practically a monopoly. This she achieved through the development of research work which enabled the use of aniline dyes to take the place of products far more expensive to obtain and manufacture. German scientists were no more advanced, no more able, than English or American chemists, but government and private industry provided all the financial support required for laboratories and ceaseless study and experimentation by those equipped for it. Aniline dyes were, in fact, discovered by an Englishman, William Henry Perkin, in 1856.

But learned Englishmen would not work in a smelly laboratory, and in 1874 Sir William gave up in disgust his attempt to make dyes in England, and went over to Germany, where there were plenty of chemists "not afraid of bad smells," as E. E. Slosson puts it in his book on creative chemistry. England honored Perkin by knighting him; Germany honored him by making out of his discovery a powerful industry. By 1914 Germany was producing three-fourths of all the coal-tar dyes of the world. And still the chemists were working unceasingly at work in their laboratories. In England there were six factories making dyes, and employing altogether [illegible] chemists. One German company alone, Rochester Farbwerker, employed 307 expert chemists and seventy-[illegible] technologists.

Felt Effect

When war broke out England felt the [illegible] of her mistake. Lack of dyes was a serious matter. There is a relation in the first place between dyes and explosives. Secondly, the whole textile industry was affected. German markets in Asia and South America could not be supplied without German dyes. One and a half million people were thrown out of work. England learned—and the United States with her—that the control of dyes meant also the control of other products valued at hundreds of millions of dollars annually.

The United States presented the pretty spectacle of having to beg England to permit importation to this country on Dutch ships of enough German dyes to print our paper currency, according to one authority. The adventurous trips later of the submarine Deutschland, with cargoes of concentrated aniline dyes valued at millions, made it conclusive to all the world the weakness of a country which had brilliant men of science but did not realize their importance to the economic structure.

Awakened by the war to the importance of dyes, the United States has since developed the industry and it has had a rapid growth. From seven firms with 328 employees in 1914, the industry grew in a few years to 118 firms turning out products valued last year at $200,000,000. German dyeing patents are no longer held by German companies and the United States need no longer fear competition in the dye field.

But the last chapter has not yet been written in the history of dyes. Scientists are constantly searching for new methods of manufacture, for cheaper raw materials. Germany captured the dye industry by just such laboratory contributions. Before the development of coal-tar (analine) dyes, indigo came from India, where the crop in 1897 was worth $20,000,000 as compared to $300,000 in 1914; purple from a snail-like shell fish, the murex, found on the Mediterranean coast; rose color was extracted from the pokeberry and brown from the butternut. The collecting of raw materials for dyes was a tedious, expensive job, involving a great amount of hand labor and endless transportation. Coal-tar was considered merely a useless by-product, a sort of messy nuisance about which nothing could be done. You have here the perfect stage setting which led to the development of aniline dyes.

That stage setting has now been repeated. Many other uses have been found for coal-tar and it makes an expensive basic material for dyes. A new potential basic material has been found which is available in huge quantities. This new basic material is furfural, a product of corn cobs and oat hulls. Even though there are more than a hundred products of corn cobs, including pipes, two billion bushels are wasted every year. Of oat hulls the waste is no less. The manufacture of furfural from these wasted by-products is comparatively simple. Six men can manufacture 5000 pounds a day. The oat hulls, or corn cobs, are moistened with a 5 per cent solution of sulphuric acid applied at 60 pounds pressure per square inch, and the furfural is distilled off.

Economic Law

It is an economic law that important articles of commerce grow out of the possession of cheap raw material and a workable process of production. This law becomes increasingly important with the growth of commercial competition. The country that can first find a way to substitute furfural for a more valuable raw material—as, for example, coal tar—will earn an advantage such as Germany held in the dye industry. Who will win this time? Germany? England? United States? The answer more than likely will be given in just such a cell-like laboratory as those which are hidden away in the basement of the science buildings at the University of Southern California.

This problem of what to do with furfural has occupied the research chemists greatly during the last five or six years. Some progress has been made. Since 1922 furfural has been developed successfully for use: as a rubber accelerator in vulcanizing, a development in which the University of Southern California had a part; for the manufacture of resin; as a germicidal and fungicidal liquid to apply to tree wounds; as a fly repellent; as a flavoring for tobacco; as a solvent in shoe dyes and leather dressings; and now, through the work of the University of Southern California, as a substitute for aniline dyes.

The growing use of furfural can be measured by the market prices: Up to 1922 furfural was manufactured only on a very small scale; for 100 years it was virtually only a laboratory curiosity, and could be obtained in glass jars at from $6.50 to $30 a pound. In January, 1922, it had become a commercial entity, selling at $1 per pound. The price descended further, as large scale production increased, until in May, 1926, furfural was selling at 15 cents a pound in tank car lots of fifty to sixty thousand pounds.

More Uses

More uses for furfural are being developed constantly. Its structural formula indicates that it may be expected to form a series of compounds not hitherto available. Many derivatives are now available in commercial quantities: furan, the alcohols, glycols and hyprofuranids. But the supply of raw material is virtually inexhaustible. The completion of the research on the use of furfural as a basic material for dye at the University of Southern California will thus be a contribution to the farmer, who has the raw material; to the manufacturer who uses dyes for a multitude of purposes; and to the consumer, who will pay less for the manufactured goods. In the words of Julius Steiglitz, former president of the American Chemical Society, "The general public should realize that in supporting great chemical research laboratories of universities and technical schools, it will be sustaining important centers from which the science which improves products, abolishes waste, establishes new industries and preserves life, may reach out helpfully into all the activities of a great nation that are dependent upon the transformation of matter."

VENEZUELA is fast taking the place long held by Mexico in the oil industry. American oil concerns are beginning to realize the important part that Venezuela is destined to play in furnishing to the world its future supply of petroleum. Many oil companies have entered into active development campaigns there, and already several American companies have reached the production stage.

The scramble for potential oil lands is becoming more and more keen as the oil industry gradually recognizes the necessity for representation in Venezuela.

Credit is due to several California oil companies for their foresight in fortifying their future oil supply by their early entry into this promising oil country. The Union Oil Company of California and the California Petroleum Corporation have each separatelyly recently acquired large parcels of land in Venezuela, after exhaustive examinations conducted by Mr. Roderick Burnham, manager of lands for Union Oil Company, and by Mr. E. V. Gordon, vice-president of the California Petroleum Corporation.

RODERICK BURNHAM

Through the efforts of these men, their respective companies now own highly valuable oil reserves for their immediate future.

At the present time more than 4,500,000 barrels of oil a month are being produced in Venezuela. Practically all of this production has been built up in the last six or seven years, although Venezuela has been producing some oil since 1912. The World War curtailed active development until about 1920.

The oil being produced varies enough as to its quality so that it meets all of the requirements of a refinery for furnishing the many hundreds of refined petroleum products now demanded by the world.

Here, as in other foreign fields, the pioneer work of development now being undertaken by the Union Oil Company and the California Petroleum Corporation calls for coping with conditions which are very different from those encountered at home. These conditions range all the way from very pleasant to those in which many hardships are encountered. Tropical heat is the chief factor for causing hardship in the pioneer work, for the heavy rains and resultant dense vegetation make work there vastly different from the really ideal conditions found around Los Angeles. However, these difficulties are never insurmountable to the dyed-in-the-wool oil man, as he looks upon such things as only a hindrance to delay his objective, and not as something which should stop him.

F.V. GORDON

In using the general term "oil man," it is intended to include all of the various branches in a development campaign, such as the geological party, the transportation crews, the wildcat drillers and all of the various groups of men needed from the time that locations are made for wells until the oil is shipped to market or the refinery.

In the present development campaign being undertaken by the UnionOil Company of California and the California Petroleum Corporation, each plans to spend $3,000,000 on their separate holdings, which are scattered throughout the prospective oil districts of Venezuela. These extend from the basin of Lake Maracaibo to the eastern coast of Venezuela.

At the present time practically all of the production comes from the Maracaibo Lake basin, hence it is only natural that the easiest areas should be developed first, but the presence of oil, as shown by huge seepages, is assured in many other places besides the basin. Recently several wells have encountered oil in large quantities in the north central portion of Venezuela and some oil is being produced in the eastern area, which is an extension of the conditions found in the prolific oil fields of the Island of Trinidad.

The eastern part of Venezuela will necessarily be slower to reach the production stage, as the country here is wilder and transportation difficulties correspondingly greater.

Granting the existence of oil in large quantities in Venezuela, the greatest factor that has influenced the entry of the American oil companies is the attitude of the Venezuelan government toward foreign development. This attitude has been particularly helpful and friendly and the petroleum laws are remarkably fair and workable. The situation in this respect is ideal. Revolutions are unknown, since the population is perfectly contented with its well-managed and very stable government.

Heading this government is President Gomez, who is held in the highest esteem both at home and abroad. He holds very modern views as to the development of the national resources of his country as well as improving the living conditions through government aid. Excellent highways have been built and are still building, great sanitation systems are nearing completion and in general the government is bending every effort toward the advancement of the country.

All of these factors, coupled with the fact that Venezuelan oil can be shipped to this country cheaper than from any other foreign field at present developed, will make Venezuela in the near future an oil country of primary importance.

Our California oil companies that have had the vision and forethought to enter Venezuela at this time should be rewarded with oil production commensurate with the investment involved, and in consequence their present enviable position in the oil world will be enhanced.

TERMINAL ISLAND WAS ONCE OUR "RIVIERA"

By Mellen Chamberlain

"TRAIN now leaving for Long Beach, Terminal Island, East San Pedro, and W-A-Y stations!" My, how that announcement used to thrill me, when as a little shaver in knee pants, I boarded the train at the old First-Street Station bound for Terminal to spend the summer months. In those days Terminal was the beach of Southern California.

A single row of houses faced the ocean from behind a board walk—Gee! how many slivers from that walk I've pulled out of my bare feet—There was just an even mile of houses strung out from the Brighton Beach Hotel to the "pavilion" at Terminal station. In the picnic grounds back of the pavilion were lunch tables under some trees, and swings for the kids. Great was the excitement when the little train puffed into the station and disgorged a load of perspiring Mas and Pas, carrying crying babies and herding a flock of wild older ones ahead.

Residents

Near the other end of the row were the houses of the summer residents, who rather looked down on the "day trippers." Many of these houses were of quite good size and all were of frame; stucco and plaster being as yet too fancy for the beach.

One of the families who had a very pretentious summer home was that of J. A. Graves, the present head of the Los Angeles Clearinghouse Association. Their trim little launch, the Pasqualito, was so named after their ranch at San Pasqual.

Another nice place was owned by the Ferd K. Rules; the sons of this family are now identified with the Pacific Finance Company.

Most of the old families were only known to me by their children with whom I played; one of these was Florence Willard, whose father, C. D. Willard, was a very clever writer of that time on the staff of the Los Angeles Times, while another was Ruth McConnell, daughter of Lea McConnell, a prominent real estate operator many years.

The Patterson family, who had a home near ours, had as a frequent visitor Harry Callender. He later married their daughter and is now of the firm of Wright and Callender.

Charlie Sumner owned a nice summer home and also the launch Hornet.

Harry Carr, author of "The Lancer" in the Los Angeles Times, was a frequent summer visitor.

The house which we owned was originally built by a banker, C. D. Woolwine. His brother, Thomas Lee Woolwine, was recently District Attorney of Los Angeles.

Fishermen

Every Sunday morning there was a great crowd of business men who came down from the city to try their luck fishing on the piers. In order to accommodate them the railroad ran an extra train which we used to call the "Fishermen's Special." It left Los Angeles at just about dawn, giving them a long day at the beach.

Down the coast lay East San Pedro, with its smelly sardine cannery, and beyond this the breakwater which ran out to Deadman's Island. On the bay side of this breakwater were a lot of fishermen's shanties stuck up on rotting posts and piles; these were of great interest, as here could be seen tubs of fish, lobsters just out of traps, and nets drying; to say nothing of the fishermen themselves. In those days the fishing was in the hands of white men, and for the most part they were a kindly lot; some even willing to spend an hour or two yarning to some sprig of a kid.

Cat Farm

There was one old fellow named Curly Brown, who was very fond of cats and booze, and as a consequence he was usually to be found sprawled out in his hut dead drunk, while all over the place were sleeping cats. There were fat ones and lean ones, old ones and young ones, Maltese and callicoes, tigers and spotted, every variety known to the cat family. This same old fellow used to boil lobsters while we waited, and sell them to us at 25 cents for a third of a burlap sack.

Across the bay lay old San Pedro, her streets lined with saloons. There were plenty of sailors in those days, for there were at least ten sailing ships to one steamer. All the lumber from the North Coast came by sail, and there were many old brigs and barks from all the ports in the world. Out among the residences, were several churches. One of the memories that clings is the sound of those church bells on a drowsy Sunday morning coming across the water.

The only means of crossing the bay at that time was a rowboat manned by an old sailor named Duffy, who made trips only when traffic demanded, which was not often. If you happened to be on the opposite side the ferry, it sometimes took a lot of loud hallooing to wake the old man from his day dreams.

Sometimes the fishermen would bring their seines and draw them on the beach at Terminal, and when they did, you may be sure, there was lots of fun for everyone. The housewives came with a pan of some kind in which to carry back some fish, while every kid on the beach was on hand to help pull on the net. When the catch was finally hauled wriggling on to the sand, there was an awful hullaballoo over the strange creatures it contained. There were all kinds of fish, together with baby leopard sharks, starfish, sting rays, shovel-nosed sharks and usually some strange-looking shells.

Down near the main station of Terminal lived a little old lady known to the children and grown-ups too, as Gam Bocky, so named by little Anita Thomas who could not say Grandma Boschke. She was mighty good to all the kids and often gave them ice cream and cake on her broad verandas, which were crowded with numerous relics of earlier days. She was a real old timer, building, it was said, one of the first houses on the island. A couple of sea-going sons visited her at times, but for the most part she lived alone.

Most of the old houses in those days had a couple of white whale ribs, six or eight feet long, and many had quite elaborate chairs made out of whale vertebrae together with other bones.

Near our house lived an old hermit, who had a firm belief that there was another flood coming. In order to be prepared he hung up rowboats all around the edge of the porch to his shack, which was built high off the ground. He kept these boats provisioned and in repair at all times so as to be ready to push off as soon as the water should rise to that level. He was intensely religious and was always ready to prove by Scripture that the first flood was only a warning of a greater one to come.

Big Hotel

At the end of the beach nearest Long Beach stood the Brighton Beach Hotel, a big, rambling, frame structure of no special design, but looking rather homey for all that. This was run by Harry Fryman—now owner of the Hayward Hotel—and in the summer months was the Mecca of many of Los Angeles' prominent people. With a broad veranda looking off across the blue Pacific, it was a mighty nice place to spend some time.

On the bay side of the island were interesting mud flats and twisting channels, where cockles and other shell fish were to be had for the digging. These channels were full of charm as places to be explored by a barefoot crew in a ramshackle boat. Some of the regular summer residents had nice rowboats and a few owned canoes. These were kept in a small building—about the size of a two-car garage—called the Boat Club.

Wilmington

Off across the mud flats lay Wilmington, a sleepy little village of adobe huts and frame buildings, with a rickety landing on a small channel where a few rowboats swung. At low tide even the channel dried up, so it behooved a visitor to get there and away again before the water was gone.

The South Coast Yacht Club had their original clubhouse at Terminal and many of the trim little boats lay off the pleasure pier all summer. Once, in a big southeaster, there was such a surf that all the yachts were in danger of being driven ashore. One member took a chance and swam off to his boat, got up sail, and won around to the bay. Believe me; he was some hero to the kids after that.

Terminal today. Well, to see the present wreck of the once trim little beach, is rather disheartening, and while we would none of us want to halt the wheels of progress, it hurts to see what they have done to old Terminal Island.

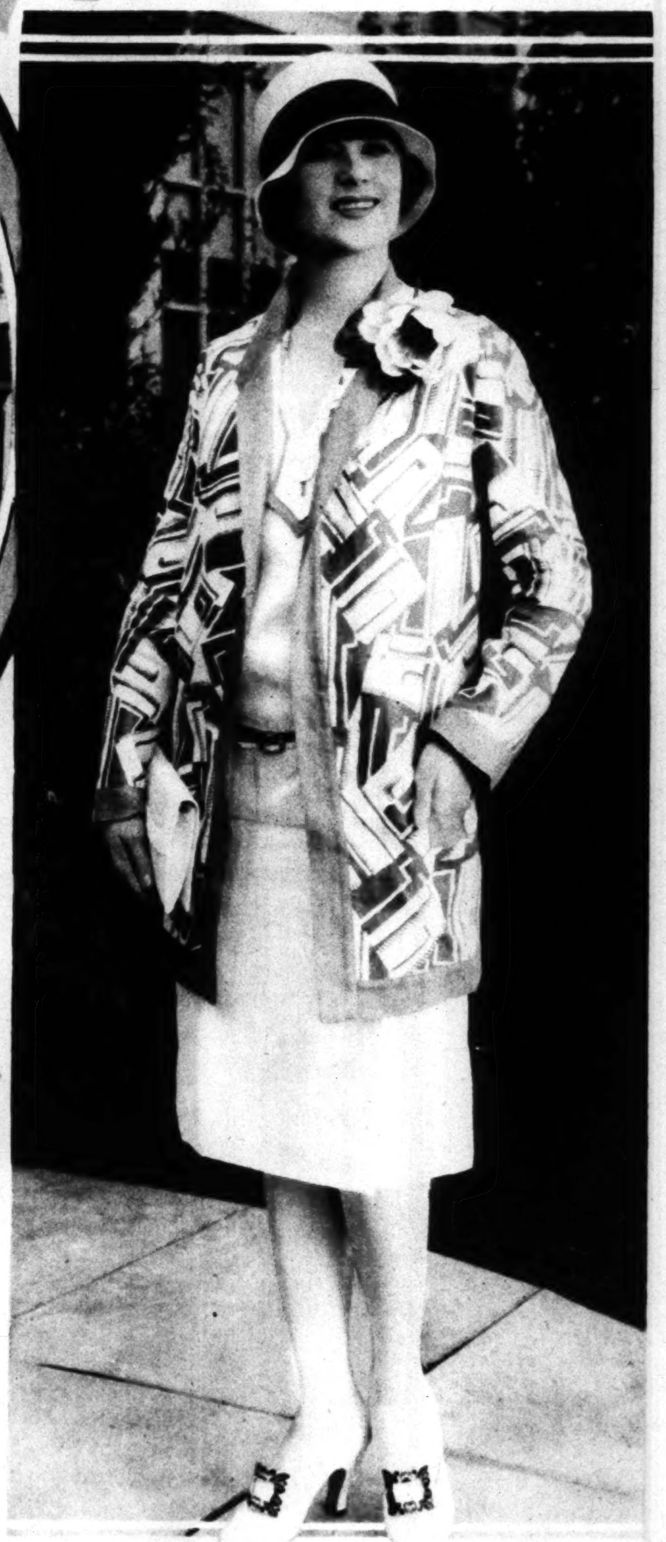
William Hepner, who has just returned from New York, is more enthused than ever over the growing popularity of the "Halotres." He says many women of Washington and New York have acquired the "Halotres," and find it indispensable. It is especially attractive to the silver haired woman, as displayed here by Gertrude Pedlar. Announcement is also made that special attention is being given, at Hepner's Beauty Salon on West Seventh Street, to permanent waving, which is extremely practical for the swimming season.

Colburn's exclusive fur shop, of South Flower Street, favors the fox collars and scarfs for sports as well as street and dress wear. In other words, the summer wardrobe is incomplete this season without these flattering skins, which are being worn in two or three skins, natural tones, or combinations of colors such as black and white, brown and beige, etc. Ruth Clifford chose from Colburn's new collection this luxurious white fox scarf, which can be worn with numerous costumes and various colored frocks, as well as fastened to the summer evening wrap of satin or brocade.

Walter Switzer's, Inc., of Westlake Square, and The Fashion Salons of the T. W. Mather Company, Pasadena, have received many very striking early fall coats to meet the needs of the traveler who wishes to visit, during her vacation, lands where a greater warmth is needed than is offered by the summer wraps. Shown here is a sport coat of tan and brown fancy plaid with facing of brown velvet and beaver collar. With it is worn a tailored two-piece dress of cocoa Elizabeth, square of neck, and horizontally tucked; rose beige felt hat with silver eyelet trim; bag of rose beige suede; gold link choker and bracelet. This complete outfit is from Switzer's, Inc.

For the fashionable woman who is selecting her various slippers to harmonize with her many summer frocks, The Bootery, exclusive shoe shop of West Seventh Street, introduces these two individual slipper modes. Patent leather pumps are especially attractive with flowered silks, as well as tailored street costumes, and may be worn with a fancy buckle or the pump—one of the most practical slippers for the woman whose wardrobe is necessarily limited. The opera pump shown here can also be had in black satin, and is patterned with the much wanted short vamp and high heel; the other has a small patent leather tailored bow.



Harris and Frank, realizing the Parisian flair for linen, introduces here a striking three-piece suit of hand-blocked linen, having sleeveless dress; Crofut-Knapp French felt hat; smart straw bag with kid trimming. Margaret Livingston poses here in this charming composé, which she found in the interesting Women's Sport Shop of Harris and Frank.

ROMANCE OF CALIFORNIA

"Old San Francisco." Intriguing in name, suggesting an atmosphere of color and fiery life, its theme one of more than passing interest, the days of the early California settlers and their descendants have been vividly set forth through the medium of this Warner Bros. production.

It is rare that San Francisco of old is pictured upon the screen—yet there can be no doubt that its picturesqueness is unique. Quite true, the major portion of the picture deals with the northern California city during that period immediately prior to the earthquake, but a prologue of the days of long ago, the days of the dons and caballeros, is sufficient incentive to arouse an interest not at all jaded by an over-abundance of pictures of this subject.

The story itself revolves about the last of the old Vasquez family, Don Hernandez and his granddaughter, and the attempts of a crooked political boss to obtain possession of the vast family estate. Dolores Costello and Joseph Swickard enact the last of the line, while Warner Oland assumes the character of the politician. Alan Crosland is said to have done an admirable piece of direction.

All the colorful romance of the past is vividly related in the prologue of "Old San Francisco." With the personalities of a proud and wealthy Castilian family as subjects, the picturesqueness of those early California days is said to be accurately brought to the screen.

Chinatown plays a major role in the unfolding of the story of "Old San Francisco."

It is Warner Oland's characterization of the grafting politician that provides most of the thrills. His kidnapping of Dolores leads to the ultimate unmasking of his Chinese lineage and the destruction of his power in the city's political ring.

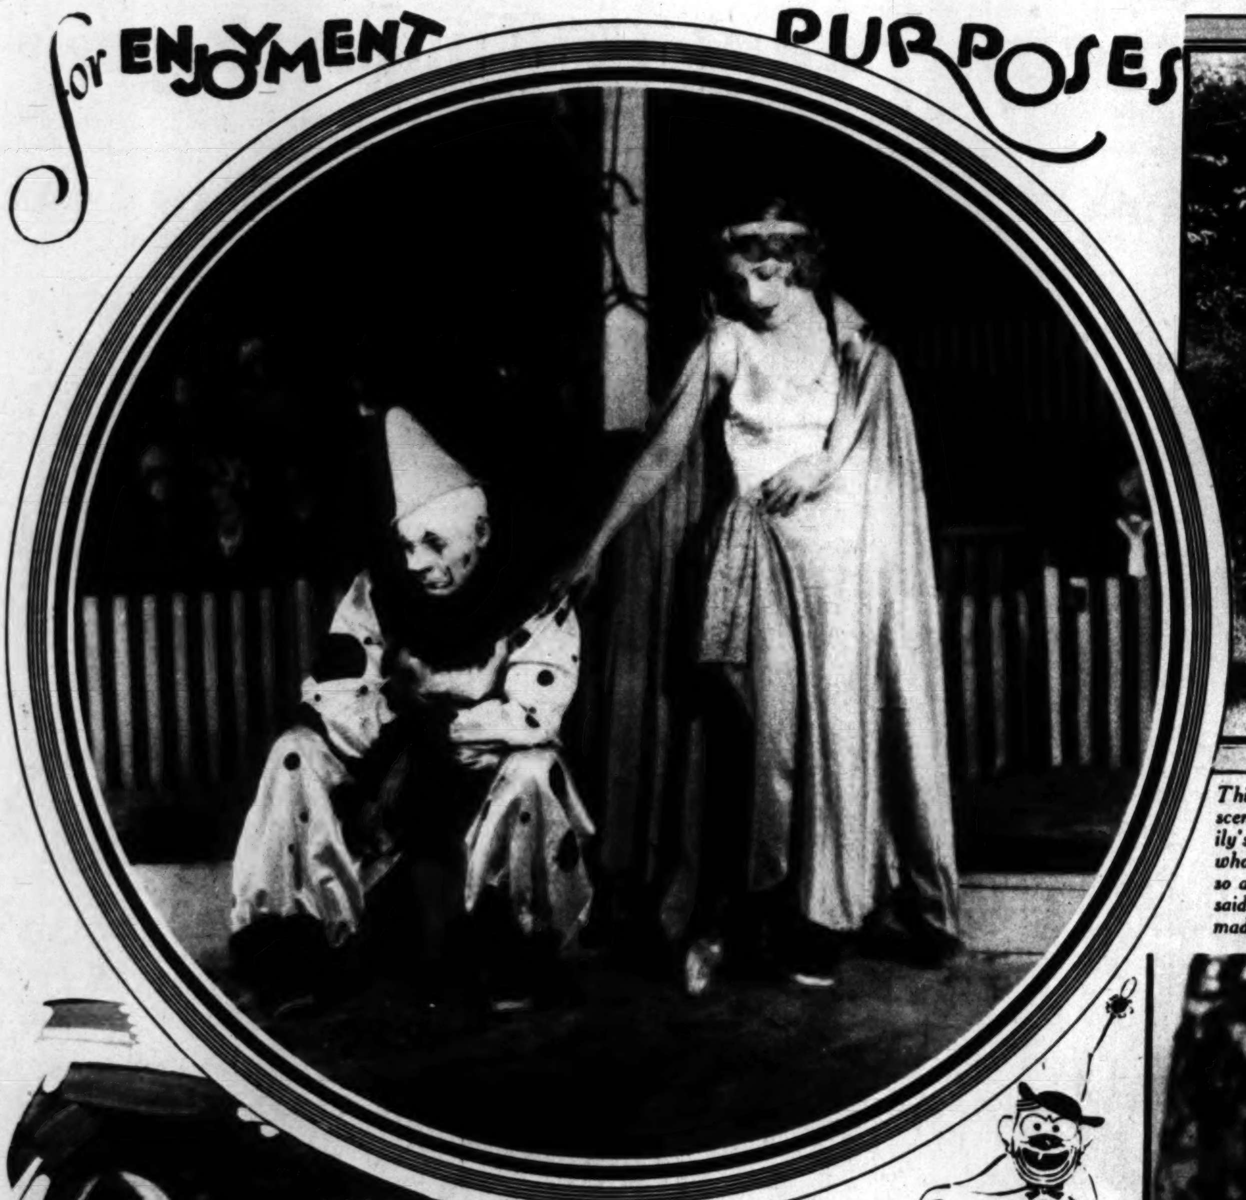
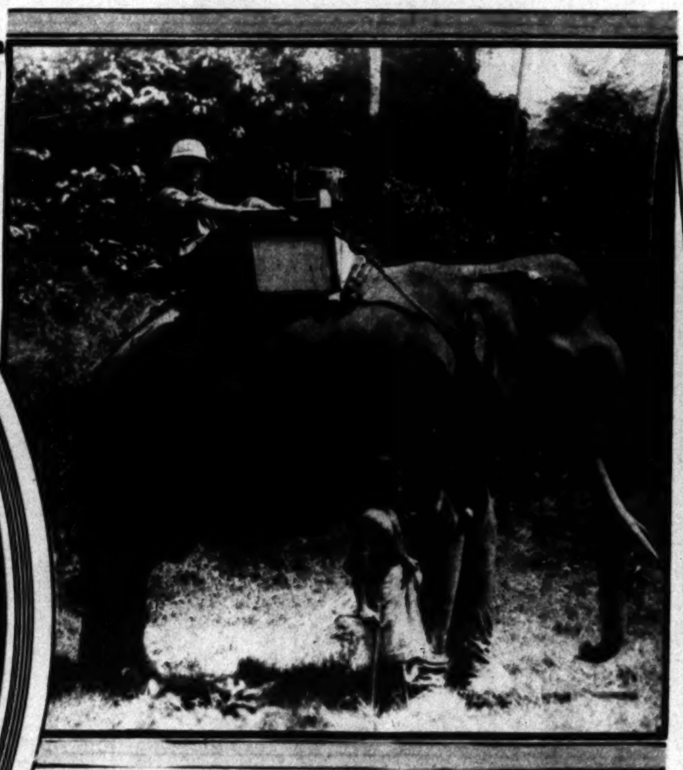
for ENJOYMENT PURPOSES





This is the method whereby many of the most unusual scenes in "Chang," the pictorial story of a Siamese family's life in the jungle, were filmed. Ernest B. Shoedsack, who, with Miriam Cooper, produced "Grass" a year or so ago, acted as cameraman for this production, which is said to be one of the most extraordinary pictures ever made.

'Tis a hard go, the movies. "In "Betty's a Lady," Charles Ray enacts the role of prize-fighter, the first time he has assumed such a part since he made "Scrap Iron" several years ago. James Gleason, co-author and co-star of the stage play, "Is Zat So," plays Ray's fight manager, a character not so unlike that he interpreted in the play.

When "The Shanghai Gesture" is ready for the screen, Jetta Goudal will be waiting to portray the leading role, a part of more than passing interest. Miss Goudal's greatest interpretation was seen recently in "White Gold," William K. Howard's directorial masterpiece, and it is expected that her characterization in the screen version of the much talked-of New York stage play will meet with as great acclaim.

"The Champagne of Ginger Ales"

THE witchery of a wonderful flavor h made "Canada Dry" the outstanding ging ale success of all time.

Somehow it seems as if the very spirit of the snow-clad hills and the stimulation of mountain air have been captured within each crested, emerald bottle. Poured into fragile stemware, this fine old ginger ale bubbles and dances like a time-mellowed champagne and bids you drink and be merry.

"Canada Dry" is a better, finer ginger ale because we make very definite efforts to have it so. In the purity and quality of its ingredients, and the perfection of the methods by which it is made, it stands absolutely alone. There is no other ginger ale like it.

Serve it tonight at dinner or when good friends call to spend the evening with you. It's a real treat for all the year—for every occasion.

Ah! LOVE!

Dolores del Rio and Victor McLaglen in one of the fiery love scenes from the elaborate screen version of "Carmen."

From the sewer and street cleaner of "Seventh Heaven" to the Arab noble in "Prince Fazil" is a long step—but Charles Farrell appears to have bridged the gap quite effectively in this scene with Greta Nissen.

"Faint heart ne'er won fair maid"—hence Clyde Cook takes some heart-strengthening exercises in his latest feature, "Simple Sis."

Faith, and no wonder they call the likes of her Colleen, with lips a-rosy and eyes a-twinklin'. Madge Bellamy and Charles Morton in "Colleen."

Ai, ai, love IS blind! A bench in the park serves as the romantic setting for Cupid's daily dozen in "Simple Sis." William Demerest is the powerful-minded gent whose heart is not to be touched by Louise Fazenda's wily wiles.

Universal claims that next to his love scenes with Margarita Fischer in "Uncle Tom's Cabin," Arthur Edmund Carewe's tete-a-tete with Claire Windsor in "The Claw" is one of the most artistic examples of love-making ever filmed.

The BEST for MR. HORTON!

In which that comedian of parts, Edward Everett H., sets himself up in the two-reelers, and is making comedies of high-calibered quality

No wonder Mr. Horton falls in love with Viola Bird on first sight. Any easterner would—or westerner, either.

A cinder's a cinder—but to Josephine Crowell, in "Dad's Choice," it's just an attempted flirtation.

In the typical Horton manner, Edward Everett disregards the bully's gun and gives the cup to the wrong girl. One of the amusing scenes in "The King of Spades."

Now that Edward Everett Horton has cast his lot, temporarily at least, in the two-reel comedy field audiences may not find it amiss to plan upon a highly hilarious summer. The comedian is making a series of short subjects for Hollywood Productions, and judging by the first two, "Dad's Choice" and "The King of Spades," his talents for entertaining have by no means been forgotten.

Horton apparently has set a mark of high standard that he does not mean to lower. Both comedies are rollickingly funny and the gags and situations in each are above those of the average two-reeler. "The King of Spades" particularly is suitable material, in fact, for a feature-length comedy, and its two thousand feet of action are crammed with amusing incidents.

In these comedies, too, more perhaps than ever indicated on the screen before, is the personality that won for Horton so great a following on the stage. That manner of insouciance that has so characterized his work is delightfully manifested, and the deft fashion in which he extracts himself from troublesome and perplexing problems is quite logically and satisfactorily pleasing.

Of the two, "The King of Spades" is possibly the more entertaining—though "Dad's Choice" gives the comedian ample opportunity to present a humorous performance. In the former, Violet Bird plays his leading lady, and the remainder of the cast includes Jack Raymond, Richard Neill and Jack Curtis. In "Dad's Choice" he is supported by Sharon Lynn, Josephine Crowell, Otis Harlan and James Gordon. All add to the quality of the pieces, which are directed ably enough by J. A. Howe.—Whitney Williams.

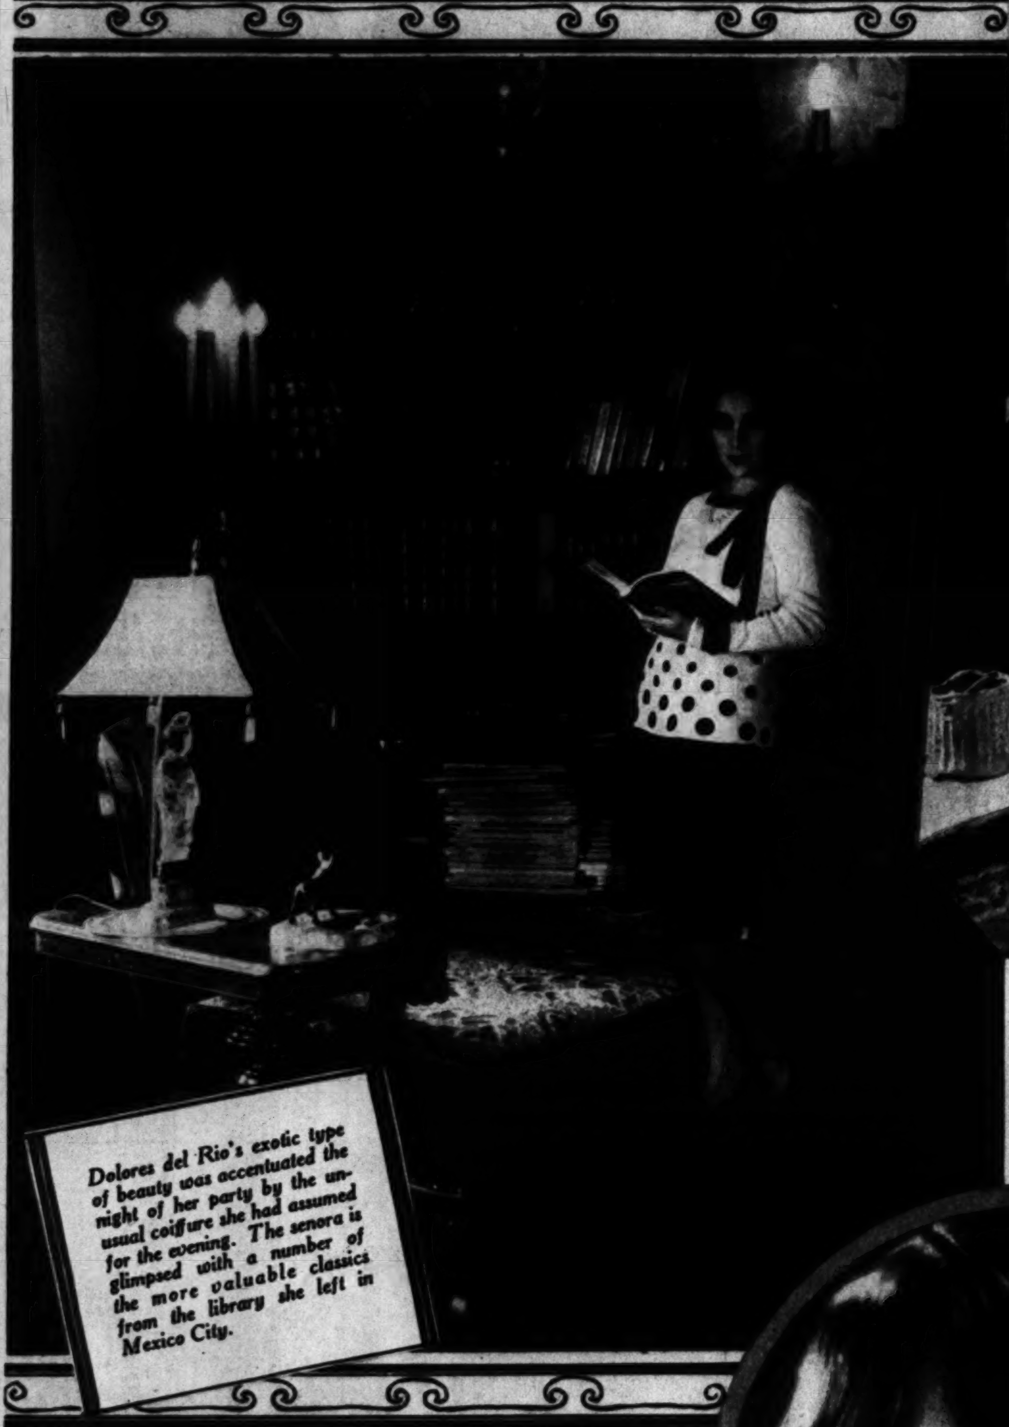
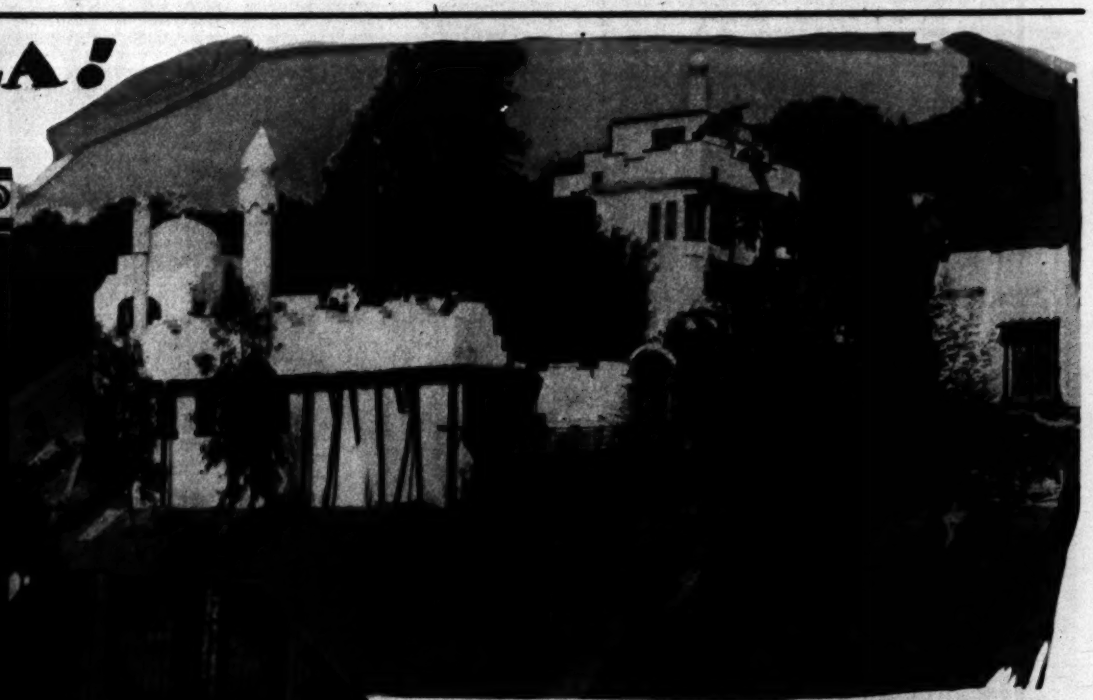
TWO PARTIES—and STELLA!

The gay star-gazer of Hollywood is one of Dolores del Rio's guests—and is entertained in Oriental fashion by Jack MacDermott



Dolores del Rio's exotic type of beauty was accentuated the night of her party by the unusual coiffure she had assumed for the evening. The senora is glimpsed with a number of the more valuable classics from the library she left in Mexico City.



To visit Jack MacDermott's home is a veritable trip to the Orient. Both inside and out his house is constructed to resemble those of the various nations of the East. MacDermott has built much of the building himself, and is an expert tile matcher.

Claire Windsor's blonde beauty was a distinct contrast to the dark loveliness of Dolores del Rio. —Photo by Louise.

By GRACE KINGSLEY

JUST gorgeously beautiful was Dolores del Rio the other night, on the occasion of the charming party she and her husband, Jaime del Rio, gave at their beautiful Spanish home in the Wilshire district. She wore a lovely shade of scarlet velvet trimmed with bands of brilliants, and her hair was more severely coiffed than usual, pulled straight back to a knot on the back of her neck, and revealing her ears.

"Just about one person in one million could wear her hair like that," remarked Stella. "But it simply makes Dolores more lovely."

THE DARK Dolores and the fair Claire Windsor, chatting in a corner for a moment, constituted a beauty show all in themselves that a lot of people would have liked to see. We asked Claire when she rejoined a group of us on the sofa what she and Dolores had been talking so confidentially about, and she said that Dolores had been telling her what a very caliente picture "Carmen" is!

"And when Dolores came up here to go into pictures," confided Stella, "her husband, Jaime del Rio, said he would let her go into pictures because she seemed to desire it so much; but that one thing he would never permit and that was for her to kiss a man in a picture!"

Miss del Rio has a handsome cousin who has just arrived from Mexico, and who has been doing a little in pictures. He is Carlos Asinusolo, but as nobody ever will remember that name, he has changed it to Carlos Amor, which is much more reasonable, as Stella says.

"It sounds sheikish, anyhow, and will give the boy a good start," she explained.

DON ALVARADO, who is said to be very wonderful in "Carmen," was there with his beautiful wife. It was such a blow to Stella to find out that Alvarado is married.

And there were Joseph Schildkraut and his witty and adorable wife, Elise Bartlett.

"Altogether what a wonderful collection of soulful brown eyes!" whispered Stella. "Don't you adore brown eyes?"

"Yes, but I like blue ones, too," put in Dolores.

"Too cold," remonstrated Stella.

"It is interesting to see them warm up," answered Dolores.

"I like mine warmed up already!" retorted Stella.

WE WERE chatting with Elise Bartlett, and Elise was telling us how she wanted to play characters in the movies, but all they wanted her for was silly ingenues, and she simply couldn't do them.

Joseph Schildkraut didn't dance, but did converse with people a little bit, after which he withdrew to the top of the Spanish stairway with its iron balcony, and gazed down with a glint of philosophic amusement in his eye at foolish humanity capering about below. He should be a very nice dancer, should Joseph, but nobody so far as I know has found out whether he is or not.

Johnny Hines came alone, I think, which is probably wise of him, since he is both such a comedian and such a sheik that he must necessarily neglect any feminine partner he might fetch.

Johnny put a napkin over his arm and pretending to be a waiter brought us supper on a tray, explaining solemnly:

"I get five dollars more for doing this!"

BILLIE DOVE looked wonderfully decorative, dressed in a long, white, filmy gown with many tiny ruffles which made her look, as Rex Leahe put it, with unexpected poesy, like Venus dressed in sea-foam. You never can tell where Rex is going to break out, which is one of the things about him that makes him so interesting.

Billie was allowed only a moment or so by herself, but during that moment looked lovely as she sat in a big chair under a tall lamp with her filmy white dress flowing demurely about her clear to her tiny feet.

Vivian Duncan was there with her fiance, Nils Asther, and they are charming together. Rosetta was ill, so she couldn't come, and we missed her deeply. Vivian played the piano, and Vernon Rickard sang in that gorgeous voice of his, which, I learn, he is cultivating for grand opera.

Eddie and Mary Carewe, of course, were there, Mary looking more like a beautiful Madonna than ever, and Finis Fox brought his charming young wife. Rita Carewe came with that nice Tommy Brown, real estate man, to whom she is supposed to be engaged. Rita looked lovely in a long, blue, tight-bodiced and floating-tulle-effect skirt. She had been ill, she said, but Dolores del Rio had kindly taken her away to the seaside for a few days' vacation, and she was looking quite radiant.

"That's just the way Dolores is," declared Stella. "She is always looking out for people, to see that they take care of their health and their interests. I don't know how she manages it, busy as she is, but she does."

THAT handsome and very splendid actor, Victor Varconi, and his lovely little wife were there.

Harry Crocker, as usual, never let the party sag for a minute—even if it had been inclined to, which it wasn't. He presented one of those brilliant little impromptu sketches, in which he, Vivian Duncan and Johnny Hines took part, and in which Johnny would improvise lines, nearly breaking up the show.

"Harry is one of those thoroughbred human beings, brilliant, charming, who never can fail at anything he undertakes, and partly," confided Stella, "because he is always considering everybody else as well as himself."

Harry danced quite a lot with Betty Morrison, to whom, I believe, he was once reported engaged.

Raoul Walsh was there, of course delighted that he is to direct Gloria Swanson in "Sadie Thompson," and there were Mike Levee and his wife, and many others.

DOLORES danced for us—one of those unearthly beautiful Spanish dances, full of fire and melting grace and allurement.

"You just never," said Stella, "feel that you have seen dancing before when you see Dolores dance."

It was very late when we left, and Stella declared she had never had her hand kissed so often in one evening.

"But thank goodness," she remarked, "I remembered to put my very best perfume on my hands. One always does at these Latin parties, doesn't one?"

"JACK MacDERMOTT has built the oddest, quaintest, most interesting house you ever heard of, all with his own hands, and out of props and bits of sets he brought from the studios!" exclaimed Stella. "And we are invited to a party there. Do hurry and get ready. John Miljan is taking us. We must wear comfortable shoes, because we have to walk a mile from where we park our car, over the hills. Can you imagine it—walking to a party, with the accent on the 'to'?"

"Well, as for me," I retorted, "I'm going dressed right for a party if it kills me! I'm going to wear my highest heels."

"Well," responded Stella, "that will make it necessary for John to hold our hands going over the rough places in the road."

"See if I care!" I retorted.

It was bright moonlight, and the moon shone over those Mulholland Drive hills. Suddenly, as we mounted a hilltop, we saw what looked like a fairy palace in the valley below, among the trees. That was Jack MacDermott's house, John Miljan told us.

WE DESCENDED rapidly, and at the bottom of the road, in a sort of summer house, we found some men dressed as Arabs, who handed out to each of us a gaily striped burnoose which they insisted we put on over our party clothes.

We were glad we had as things turned out, since we had to enter the house through a long, tortuous, winding, underground passage, dank and "dark as the inside of an infidel" except for the faint light of the lantern with which John had been provided to guide us through.

That passage prepared us to be thankful for any escape, but we weren't prepared even then for the gorgeous Oriental charm of the room which we entered suddenly through a trap door! There was a huge, glowing fireplace, decorated with bizarre bits of carving and mosaic from some picture set; there were silken Oriental couches, a rug or two, a charming latticed window, some soft lights in Oriental lamps.

Syd Chaplin came with our host to greet us, and after we had rested a minute we were taken down to an odd little court, with a duck pond at one end and on which a lone duck was swimming, and in the center of the place a huge fire over which bits of elk meat were sizzling on long spits. That elk meat eaten with French bread, after that long walk, was the most delicious food I have ever tasted.

The rooms of the house ramble this way and that, on different levels many of them, and all furnished in Oriental fashion. The dining room is off by itself across the court, is lacquered, and has cushions around its low table.

AFTER we had tried to see the whole house—but one couldn't in one visit, it is so odd, quaint and interesting—we gathered in a large room with couches, rugs and cushions, and everybody sat about, mostly cross-legged on cushions, and chatted while they drank Turkish coffee.

Syd Chaplin and Carter de Haven kept us all amused with their yarns and their fun.

"Whoever," demanded Stella, as we took our leave of that delightful place, "whoever alluded to the 'unspeakable turk'? I think I could be perfectly eloquent about him this minute!"

Gayest of Frocks
Sheerest of Light Summer Things
Wear them under the most trying hygienic handicap

Utter protection and security, plus an end to the problem of disposal

By ELLEN J. BUCKLAND, Registered Nurse

SUMMER days and moonlight nights, dances, tennis, motoring, yachting—don't let them bother you because of a difficult hygienic situation.

The old-time "sanitary pad" has been supplanted. There is now protection that is absolute, positive and certain—a new way that will make a great difference in your life; that will provide peace-of-mind under the most trying circumstances.

Kotex — what it does

Unknown a few years ago, 8 in every 10 women in the better walks of life have discarded the insecure "sanitary pads" of yesterday and adopted Kotex.

Filled with Cellucotton wadding, the world's super-absorbent, Kotex absorbs 16 times its own weight in moisture. It is 5 times as absorbent as the ordinary cotton pad. It discards easily as tissue. No laundry—no embarrassment of disposal.

It also thoroughly deodorizes, and thus ends all fear of offending.

Only Kotex itself is "like" Kotex

It is the only sanitary napkin embodying the super-absorbent Cellucotton wadding. It is the only napkin made by this company.

See that you get the genuine Kotex at better drug and department stores everywhere simply by saying "Kotex." Comes in sanitary sealed packages of 12 in two sizes, the Regular and Kotex-Super. Supplied also through vending cabinets in rest-rooms by West Disinfecting Co.

New Flowers

Shasta Daisy, Gloire De Vitry

This magnificent new Shasta Daisy hails from France and is a giant flowered type of greatest merit. The pure white flowers are simply enormous, often attaining a diameter of five inches and over, the yellow disk in the center being comparatively small. The stems grow to the height of three or four feet with the immense flowers beautifully poised at the tips.

These Shasta Daisies are absolutely perennial in nature and will make a fine growth in the garden, increasing in size each season. They can be divided after the first year if so desired.

Price: Each, 35c. Per Dozen, $3.50

Scabiosa Caucasica, New Hybrids

A superb new strain evolved from the well known species of the same name. These new hybrids bear flowers on strong, slender stems, which reach a height of some two feet. The blossoms are beautifully frilled and lace-like in their appearance. They occur in single and semi-double forms. The colors shade from light blue to deepest lavender.

Not withstanding the delicacy of their appearance these new scabious are splendid for cut flowers. In California they bloom right through mid-winter and for this reason alone will surely be a welcome addition to the many other fine novelties we have brought to California.

Mixed Shades Only. Price: Each, 25c. Per Dozen, $2.50

Erigeron—Quakeress

This lovely new improved form of Erigeron has proven to be one of the daintiest and most useful herbaceous plants of recent introduction. The single starry aster-like flowers are a delicate shade of rosy lavender and are borne in profusion throughout the entire season. In this particular climate it has the distinct advantage of flowering during mid-winter or the early spring months, at which time there is usually a dearth of flowers in the garden. For cutting purposes this lovely new Erigeron is especially valuable.

Price: Each, 25c. Per Dozen, $2.50

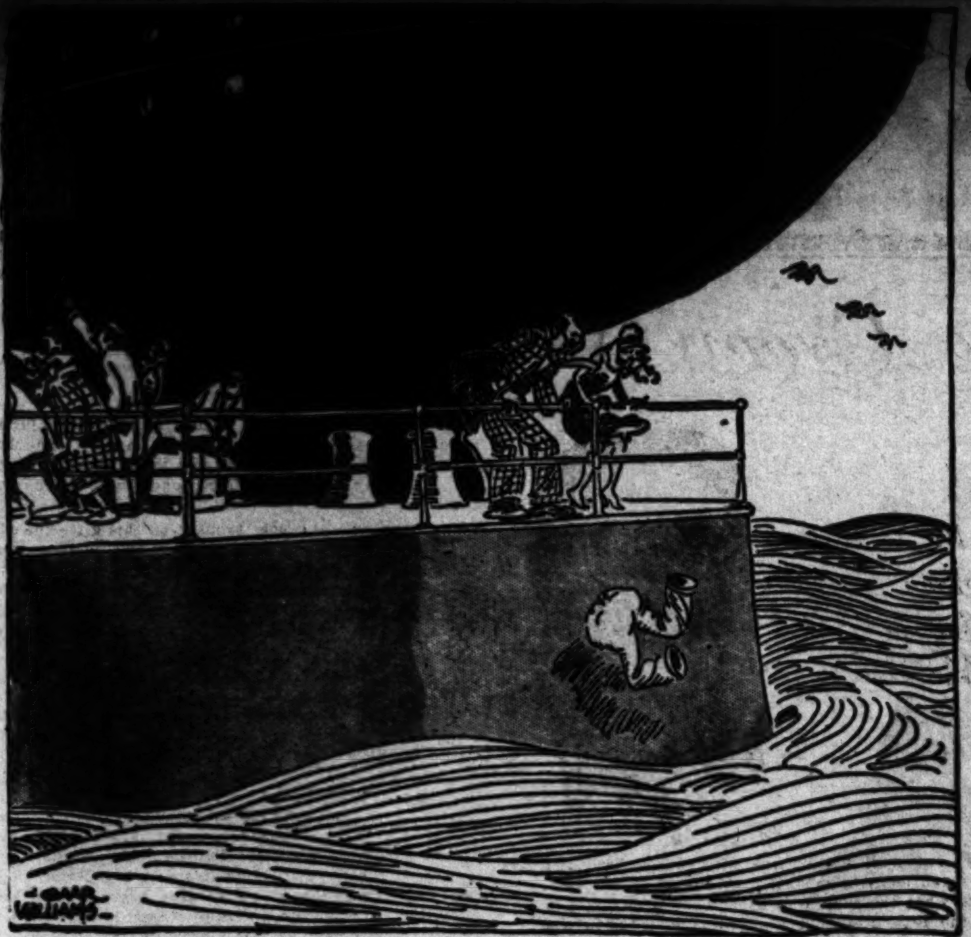
The OTHER DAY

By Donald Ogden Stewart

Illustrated by Gaar Williams



One pair of trousers slipped off my arm and into the water.

MY WIFE and I were in our stateroom packing when the tender which was to convey us to French soil drew alongside our ship. The steward knocked at our door and asked if our bags were ready.

"Our bags will be ready in plenty of time to be taken off," I replied, a little testily, for we had left our packing until the last minute and things weren't fitting in very well.

But the steward did not go away. His idea evidently was to confuse me.

"You go ahead about your duties as a sailor," I said to him, "and I will take care of the bags myself. You surely must have other things to be doing in connection with tieing a big ship like this to a tender."

I saw that I was not making my point, so I tried taunting. "Or perhaps you aren't good enough at tying knots. Perhaps they let the other boys tie the ship to the tender and make you hang around passengers' staterooms?"

To all of this the steward only smiled, which was just as well, as I was in no mood for an argument. I had just found three pairs of extra trousers, which I was sure I had not brought on board with me and which would not possibly fit into my suit case.

"These aren't your trousers, are they?" I asked the steward. "You haven't taken to leaving your personal things about in my room on the way across, have you?"

"I don't think that he speaks much English," said my wife.

"I notice that he speaks enough English to have taken my tip," was my caustic reply.

"But you haven't tipped him yet," said my wife. "That was the bath steward you tipped."

"Oh, the bath steward, eh?" I sneered. "And yet they complain of the low birth rate in France. Quite the reverse, I should say." And with that I plucked off a crisp French note. "Here, take this, my good man," I said, thrusting it into his hand, "and this"—shutting my suit case at one corner and hanging it on his hand—"and this"—giving him my wife's suit case—"and these"—draping the three pair of trousers over his shoulder—"and the next time don't go leaving your belongings in decent people's staterooms."

And with that we were out of the little room which had been our home, and down the gangplank to the tender which lay alongside.

Aboard this little boat all was bustle and confusion, while above us the side of the ship we had just left rose to what seemed a rather silly height.

"I didn't know it was such a big ship," said my wife.

"You will find things like that all through life, my dear," I said a little sadly. "We never know how big our experiences are until after we have left them."

"You frighten me when you talk like that, dear," she said, clinging to my arm.

"There, there, I'm sorry," I reassured her. "I was a brute. Let's talk of cheerier things. I don't see our bags anywhere, do you?"

"Yes, there they are over there in a pile with all the others," she said, smiling through her tears. "At any rate, mine is. I don't see yours." And she laughed prettily.

I went over to the pile of suit cases and found mine under the three pairs of trousers.

"I almost wish that we had taken a Dutch boat," I said. "The Dutch sailors are not so excitable."

I picked up the trousers and hung them neatly over my arm. "Let's go up here in the bow," I said, "and wait for the tender to start."

In the bow there were not so many people, and we stood letting the sea breeze blow through our hair.

"That is America over there," I said.

"Where?" asked my wife.

"Well, in that general direction," I replied, motioning vaguely so that one pair of trousers slipped off my arm and into the water.

"You will have to get those pressed," said my wife, watching them slither softly through a wave. "I never liked them, anyway. They made you look old. Why don't you let them go?"

"I've a good mind to do just that," I said. "It would be simply quixotic to jump in after them, I suppose."

"You have me to think of, too, now," she said softly. "You can't take the chances you did before you were married."

"Not for some time yet, anyway," I agreed. And when we looked again the trousers had disappeared.

"I wonder what the name of our tender is," said my wife. "It would be nice to remember—the name of the first tender we ever rode on together."

"It is probably the Douglas," I said, hardly able to hold back a smile.

"Why the Douglas?" asked my wife, totally unaware of the treat that was in store for her.

"Don't you remember the old poem, 'Douglas, Douglas, tender and true'?" I asked, and laughed in spite of myself.

"Oh, dear," said my wife, "I do hope that you aren't going to be that way."

"What way is that, my dear?" I asked, pretending that I hadn't heard what had been going on.

"Making up jokes about names," she pouted, "or speaking Irish dialect."

"I didn't speak in Irish dialect," I said, a little hurt.

"No, but you looked as if you were going to," she replied.

This seemed to me to be a rather unfair criticism, but I said nothing. Most of the passengers had gone below by this time to avoid the chill wind which had sprung up, but still there was no sign of the tender's casting off.

A porter came up and said something in very bad French, some local patois, I suppose, for I didn't catch a word of it.

"He wants to know if we want to take our bags off when we land," I explained to my wife. And to the man I said "Oui." I also carefully draped the remaining pairs of trousers over his arm and gave him three francs. He seemed very displeased and departed.

"I am sorry, in a way, to be leaving the old ship," I said, looking up at it towering above us in the deepening dusk. "We had many a good time aboard her."

"Name one!" said my wife, aggressively.

I ignored her remark. "A ship is, in many ways," I said, "like a woman—"

"—but a good cigar's a smoke," said my wife, throwing me all out of the mood for further reverie. And, anyway, the porter was approaching us again.

"He probably thinks you want those trousers pressed," suggested my wife.

"No, no!" I explained impatiently. "He merely wants to know if we don't want to go below. We probably are about to cast off. What do you think?"

"I'd rather stay up on deck here, if you don't mind," said my wife. "If all those people are below, it must be awfully stuffy. I rather like to have the sea lashing my face."

I turned to the porter. "Nous restons ici," I said, only in French.

He shrugged his shoulders and disappeared down the companionway. We were left alone on deck with a few officers and a few of the braver passengers.

"They must expect a rough trip in shore," I said, looking at my watch. "I guess we can stand it, however. Do you know any hymns for those at sea?"

Things weren't fitted in very well.

"I know the piano accompaniment to one," said my wife, "but not the words."

"Words mean nothing at a time like this," I said, turning up my collar. "Can you hum the accompaniment that you know?"

"It's just the bass accompaniment," said my wife, apologetically.

"I guess that would probably get us in worse," I said. "You snuggle up to me and we'll face it alone."

An officer came along the deck and saw us. He must have admired our courage, but he did not show his feelings. Fortunately he spoke English.

"When do we push off, captain?" I asked. They always like to be called "captain."

"You can push off now whenever you like," he replied.

Could it be that there had been a mutiny and that I was in commmaand of the tender?

"Are we in any danger?" I asked.

"Not unless you walk backward off the dock," he said.

"Off the what?" I asked, as quietly as possible.

"Off the dock—off this dock—off the dock you're standing on now," he replied, a little gruffly, I thought.

I looked at my wife, but it was so dark that I couldn't see her face. Perhaps it was just as well. I remembered now that this steamship line put in directly at a dock, thereby avoiding the long tender ride. I don't know why it hadn't occurred to me before. Perhaps it was the three pairs of trousers.

"And the train for Paris?" I asked.

"There is a little dandy in the morning," he answered. "It goes by way of Belgium. Do you know Belgium at all?"

"When does this ship go back to America?" I asked.

"In two days," he replied.

"Come on, dear," I said to my wife. "Let's get aboard now and get our passage. Perhaps we can sleep in our old room tonight. That would be fun, wouldn't it?"

RADIUM
Now Used for Rupture Treatment
A Great Boon to Rupture Sufferers

This remarkable new element that has brought relief to so many sufferers from many diseases, is now being used in the treatment of rupture with remarkable success.

Radio-Activity is found to generate a super-circulation wherever it is applied. This abundant circulation around the distended tissues aids nature in re-adjusting the ruptured parts.

The Radio-Active Sta-Put Truss is constructed along entirely new mechanical principles. So light, so flexible, that after a few days wearing you don't know you have a truss on. The next thing you know some day you'll take off the truss, and—blessed thought—be well again.

Sold on a fifteen days' test proposition. You are thoroughly satisfied it is helping you before the appliance is yours. Nothing to do but wear it. No trouble or added expense, and the most wonderful fact about the appliance is that it is sold so reasonably that it is within the reach of all, both rich and poor.

If you are an old or a new sufferer from rupture, we will be very pleased to send you literature on Radium. It is both interesting and convincing. Science has taken another step ahead in relieving human troubles. Why wait and suffer? Remember, you wear this radio-active truss fifteen days at our financial risk. Call or write Radium Truss Co., Dept. B, 616 Homer Laughlin Bldg., 315 Broadway, Near 3rd St., Los Angeles, Calif. Evenings by appointment. Telephone MUtual 4706.

ARE YOU SUFFERING from painful affliction of the feet, broken down arches, callouses, bunions, etc.?

Ready-made Arch Supports are an unsatisfactory makeshift because everyone's foot is different and the displaced bones, enlarged joints and deranged ligaments complicate matters still further. We make supports from carefully prepared plaster of Paris casts and alter them to accommodate changes brought about by the wearing of the supports. In order to give relief and lasting satisfaction it is imperative that the foot be restored to as normal a shape as possible. We have an extensive experience in the correction of flatfoot, broken down arches and other deformities of the feet, and are able to promise our clients comfort and relief in every case.

It is not necessary to wear clumsy shoes with our supports; on the contrary, we often restore daintiness of appearance to feet badly deformed and unsightly.

SAFETY IN ALUMINUM

The hen is one of nature's most efficient aluminum factories.

She ranks right along with the cow and the cherry tree when it comes to producing aluminum for human consumption in the way that Old Mother Nature provided.

Fact of the matter is, the entire crust of the earth is approximately one-sixth alumina—the oxide of which aluminum is the base—speaking in terms of the chemist. Trees and plants transfer this mineral matter into human and animal food just as the laboratory transforms common clay into an aluminum cooking utensil or automobile part.

This mineral, which runs second to iron in prevalence on the earth, is taken into the human body directly in food.

Bread, ripe apples, peas, rhubarb, blueberries, grapes, milk and eggs, and the water we drink carry a considerable amount of this most interesting mineral, according to the chemists.

The average human being who gets his three meals a day takes into his system approximately one pound of alumina every week. Alumina is the yardstick the chemists use to classify this group of particular compounds, which vary with the type of food.

"Every person or animal has considerable aluminum in his body at all times," says Gustave A. Kirchmaier.

"We get it in various ways. The use of city drinking water and alum baking powder and the consumption of vegetables for food are the most common methods by which we obtain our natural requirements of this mineral."

Modern cooking and dietetic science has greatly emphasized the retention of vitamines and mineral salts in the vegetables and other types of foods consumed by human beings.

The fact that all of the minerals in proportion are needed to maintain a balance in the human system is emphasized by the prevalence of goiter in regions where there is a deficiency in iodine. The Great Lakes region, scientists point out, is a territory where iodine taken in through drinking water, vegetables and other foods is relatively scarce. Health authorities are urging the supply of this mineral through artificial means.

Minute amounts of minerals are added to foods usually through the cooking process, too.

But whether the utensil be of copper, tin, aluminum or granite ware, the amount of oxide added to the food is only a fractional mite as compared with what the food itself carries.

In eating a pound of peas one would take into the body eighty-five times as much as from dissolving the metal itself. Same quantity of eggs would yield 8300 times as much. A pound of ripe cherries would give one 1440 times as much. And milk would yield sixty times as much if a quart were taken.

That indicates what fine producers of alumina the hen, the cherry tree and the cow actually are and gives the blue ribbon to Mrs. Biddy.

"If you want to eat these foods and get this large amount of mineral absolutely free from what is added by cooking utensils it has to be taken raw," declared the scientist.

Chemists have tried cooking tomatoes in these various kinds of utensils and found, much to the surprise of the average housewife, that the common granite ware dish and the aluminum kettle gave off to the foods almost the identical minute weight of alumina.

Taking 200 grams of raw, ripe tomatoes, the chemists found there was 63 ten-thousandths of a gram of alumina.

In raw canned tomatoes, taking a similar amount, there are 54 ten-thousandths of a gram. Then the given amounts were cooked in various utensils. The tomatoes in the ordinary granite dish showed an increase of 81 ten-thousandths of a gram of alumina and those cooked in the aluminum utensil showed 84 ten-thousandths of a gram. All of which goes to show that this tiny touch of added oxide comes with almost any kind of a utensil and is scarcely significant beside what is already in the tomatoes as they grow out in the field.

Speak to a chemist and he will almost convince one that the human animal should be in the class with mineral resources of the country.

"Have you had your iron today?" may some of these days be framed into "Have you had your alumina?" or possibly "Have you had anything to eat?"

Seen from the Green Verdugo Hills

By John Steven McGroarty

Views Upon What Folks Would Like Done

One way of looking at it, the subject that was discussed on a certain night not long ago by our neighbors in the green Verdugo Hills, was not what you would call a pleasant thing to think about. It was the subject of death and burial.

But, in another way of looking at it, it is a subject that might well be as pleasant as any other. For, is not death as natural as life. And is it not true that every man born of woman must die?

It is a thing that we all must meet, sooner or later. Then why not meet it calmly with brave hearts and believing minds.

Well, anyway, it was of death and of burial that the neighbors were talking as we all sat together in peace and in love for one another. And God's quiet stars shone above us in the blue night skies. The crickets were in full chorus in the chaparral. The great hills held us in their safe and strong embrace.

It was in the little gray house in the hollow that has the two big rocks behind it and the lilac bush in front that the neighbors were gathered. And the lilacs were in full bloom, the fragrance of their blossoms filling the air.

The way the talk came up was that a day or two before, or maybe three, the ashes of the cremated body of a dead woman had been flung to the winds from the summit of the mountain that bears our name and that stands back of our little high house in the hills. You will know it from the cross of San Ysidro looking down upon you as you trudge the high road.

It was the woman's wish that her ashes should be scattered to the winds from this mountain top which she had lived in life and toward which her eyes had often turned at dawn and at eventide.

I don't know, said the man who plays the flute, but it is as good a way as any, Although it may not be orthodox.

Well, anyway, remarked the man who has the phonograph, it seems less dismal and less oppressive than being buried in a grave with a big tombstone on top of you. But, I am not saying which way is the right of it, and I don't wish to be regarded as being heretical. Besides, what do I know about it, if it comes to that, he said.

If only our old Parson were with us he could straighten it all out for us, but he has gone, never to return, said the man who lives in the little gray house in the hollow, sadly.

It was at this juncture that the man who used to be a statistician spoke up.

If we are not careful this pleasant evening is likely to turn into gloom, he said. Let us be more cheerful, and let me tell you what I would like to have done with this poor old body of mine when its veins have ceased to throb and its last fluttering pulse is stilled forever.

At this everybody in the room laughed rather foolishly, as we thought. Then the pipes were filled for the third smoke, the room was soon in a blue haze, and we all settled back in our chairs to hear what the man who used to be a statistician would like to have done with his body when he dies.

And what he said, as we remember it—although his words were far more eloquent than ours could ever hope to be—ran like this:

If I were a sailor I would like to be buried in the sea. To be sunk under the billows upon which I had braved the wind and the storm. To sleep there until Gabriel blew his trumpet and God had called back the sea. And to rise with all the old sailormen who had gone before me—with the old Phoenicians who were first to fling a sail on blue waters; with Nelson's men and the black-bearded fighters of Spain's lost armadas; and those who went down with the Flying Dutchman.

But, I have been a land lubber all my life. Yet, I do not want to be buried in a grave. Nor do I want my body to be burned.

What I would want done with this poor old shell of mine is to have it put up on poles as the Blackfeet Indians do with their dead. They wrap the dead in winding sheets. In the old days before the white man, they clothed the dead in sheaths of bark, gently wound. And they placed them high above the ground on poles, leaving them thus until the sun and the wind had their will of them.

It is so I would like to be when that hushed hour comes when my heart beats no more and my lips shall not speak again. I shall not then be entombed in any sepulcher, but shall still be one with the sunlight and the stars and summer moons.

This is what the man who used to be a statistician said in the little gray house in the hollow when the neighbors were gathered together, and the talk was of death and the grave.

And, somehow, it seemed to us that we had never listened to anything more beautiful.

The Bark of a Gray Birch Tree

In common, glory be, with all other men of the world, we have been the recipient of gifts from time to time at the hands of both old friends and new. Many people have been very kind indeed in remembering the Conductor of this poor blundering page, and he is duly grateful for it all.

One time a man brought us a stone from the Temple of Solomon. Another brought us fourteen stones, each one from a different temple of the Acropolis; and some Western Ranger boys once dragged a great boulder from the summit of Mt. San Gorgonio to make a gift of it to us.

We did not ask for bread, therefore, it was all right for them to give us stones. And once upon a time a man gave us a kind of whistle that you can fool a wild turkey with. And we were glad to get the whistle although there do not seem to be any wild turkeys anywhere anymore. We have used it on the orioles and the linnets and the mocking birds who are neighbors to us in the green Verdugo Hills, and the whistle seems to work as well on them as it might have worked on a wild turkey.

We might go on telling of all the things that have been presented to us, the same as every one else in the world might go on with the same kind of a list. But, lately, we have been the recipient of what we think is an exceptional gift. At any rate, it is dearly prized by us.

The gift we are talking about is a slender cylinder of bark—the bark of a birch tree that grew in Penn's Woods where we were born, and where there are still many birch trees.

In the old blue hills of home we have had, when a boy, our arms around many a birch tree. And on many a birch tree we have cut the initials of our name and perhaps the name of another or two that need not be mentioned now. There is no use in a man conjuring up old ghosts to haunt him. And, anyway, time has covered the scars that we made on the birch trees, even though it may never be able to cover the scars on our heart.

A woman who is a poet brought us this gift—the gift of the bark of the birch tree from Penn's Woods. And inside the gray cylinder we slipped a long glass receptacle for flowers. And in the glass we put poppies. It is a great combination. Pennsylvania and California. It is a pair hard to beat.

A Journey of Twenty Miles Each Week

We felt very much puffed up and proud there awhile back when we took from the mail sack that we had dragged up through the fragrant trails of the chaparral to our little high house in the hills a letter from a man living somewhere near Chicago who makes a journey of twenty miles every week to purchase a copy of The Sunday Times for the sole purpose of reading this poor blundering page.

When we read this letter we gave a great shout and called the attention of our Yellow Cat to it. By gollies, Yellow Cat, we said, this is a great feather in our cap, and we mean to tell the world about it. It is not every poor devil of a scribbler that can boast of a reader who travels twenty miles to a roaring town and twenty miles back again to stick in his pocket the scribbler's printed page.

Our Yellow Cat then said to us that this might all be very well but that we should not make the fatal mistake of letting pride enter into our heart. Pride goeth before a fall, said our Yellow Cat. And next thing you know maybe nobody will cross the street to get hold of what you write; maybe it will come to pass that nobody will give three whoops whether you write anything or not.

And so this slowed us down to a walk, as the saying is—this thing that our Yellow Cat said to us. And we remembered then many another scribbler we had known upon whose poor head this very fate had fallen. Scribblers who once strutted their little hour with the limelight full upon them. And then came a day when their tired brains forgot their cunning and their hands no longer guided golden pens.

Oh, well, we said, if this is what is ahead of us, let it come. Better men than we are, scribblers the latchets of whose shoes we are not worthy to tie, have suffered this sad fate. And if it comes to us we shall brave the thrust of the lance as best we may.

All is vanity, sayeth the preacher.

An Indian Who Asked for a Job

An Indian who is a friend of ours was telling us the other day that when he asked the owner of a large garage for a job, the owner told him that he did not employ foreigners.

But, said our friend, I am an Indian. And the owner of the garage answered and said, yes, he said, I know you are an Indian, that's why I can't give you a job. I do not employ foreigners.

So it seems to have come to this that a man who probably was born in some alien country himself but who has taken out his citizen's papers in the United States, regards an original inhabitant of this country as a foreigner.

And in a way it would really seem that the Indian is a foreigner—a foreigner in his own land. The first and original Americans might as well be foreigners to all intents and purposes. The naturalized German, Frenchman, Englishman or Irishman has a say as to how the country should be run, but the Indian has no say.

Moreover, these broad acres that stretch between the Atlantic and the Pacific and from the Great Lakes to the Gulf that the Indian owned and that were taken away from him mostly by fraud and theft, and often by sheer murder, are now held by white men who are Americans only for a few generations or for no generation at all. And they keep pushing the Indian back, and have pushed him back, until now he cowers like a whipped dog in some desolate and God-forsaken corner of the country that was once all his own.

And it has come to pass that the alien born or the son of the alien born calls an American Indian a foreigner to his face.

Spring comes upon me like a haunting pain,
A dullened ache of half-remembered things—

Odd stirrings that the smell of moist earth brings.

Spring comes upon me with a vacant stare,

Oh, God, like the green fields,
Make me young again!

CARE OF THE BODY

misunderstandings about the X-ray and the human body.

In a limited sense, the X-ray may be compared with any other heat ray. It produces somewhat similar burns although at the time of the burn no sensation is felt.

Its use in hair removal should also be understood.

If you believe that it burns out the hair follicle without, at the same time, destroying all the adjacent structures imbedded in the skin, disillusion yourself.

A statement of simple anatomical fact can convince you.

In a square inch of skin we find not only hundreds of hair follicles but also sweat glands, all glands, muscles, nerve endings, capillary blood vessels and numerous other structures.

It is a sheer impossbility to isolate a microscopic hair follicle and destroy it without impairing the rest of the tissue.

Every time a hair follicle is burned by the X-ray, the adjacent tissue is equally burned.

On the next question, stimulating the fat cells, much misinformation is also passed out.

Millions of dollars' worth of creams, oils and other cosmetic lubricants are sold under this delusion.

The growth of any particular group of cells is directly dependent upon the systemic nutrition. Nutritional absorption can take place only through the agencies that Nature intended; the stomach and the digestive system, whence it goes into the blood circulation.

Neither the X-ray nor any other form of external treatment can do for the fat cells what sane nutrition and normal, intelligent hygiene can accomplish.

Big Muscles

As an ardent believer in the value of muscular activity, it amuses me greatly to study the advertisements in some of our health magazines.

The big-muscle boys with their bulging torsos are given forth as examples of the "before's and after's," provided you purchase the course and follow the system, et cetera, et cetera.

Undoubtedly, thousands of young men, and many women are enticed by these fatuous examples.

We all like to picture ourselves in hero roles as strong, virile and all-supreme over our competitors. The result is that thousands of boys make the objective of their physical culture work muscular size and muscular measurement.

Nothing could be more detrimental to the true purposes of physical culture.

Huge muscular development bears absolutely no relationship to good health. If anything, it is a detriment. The fate of famous prize-fighters and wrestlers is well known. They die and are subject to disease long before the sedentary business man thinks of retiring.

With them, huge muscles become the ultimate desideratum. The tax on the heart, on the arteries, on the nervous resources, in order to maintain huge muscles, is too great.

Cessation of the tremendous activity which formed these huge muscles speedily spells fatty degeneration with its whole train of symptoms.

The objective of exercise should be litheness, gracefulness, agility, skill, muscular co-ordination, correct posture, normal breathing, perfect relaxation and muscular control. These are quite sufficient. More than this is superfluous.

Ringworms and Diet

Los Angeles, Cal.

Dear Dr. Lovell:

In December my three-year-old daughter contracted several ringworms on her arms, chest and face from an angora kitten. I put iodine on these and they disappeared in three or four days. I later discovered one large and one small worm on her scalp. I applied iodine to these a week or more until the worms seemed dead but then a crust formed which looked like dandruff or milk crust. This crust appeared where the worms had been and then spread, making ten or twelve small spots.

I can't get rid of them. I used iodine, then a salve made of vaseline and boric acid, and now I am using listerine. When I stop using this the crust spreads more.

Can you tell me what to do?

The hair has come out where the large worm was, the size of a dime.

It may be something lacking in her diet. Do you think so?

Breakfast, orange, grapefruit, prunes or figs, etc. Wheatena, grapenuts, shredded wheat or pep. (Occasionally omelette instead of cereal.) Cup of raw milk. Slice of whole or cracked wheat bread with butter.

Mid-morning, orange, raw prunes, apple or raw figs, or occasionally two Cubbison's flaxseed or fruit cookies.

Lunch one or two vegetables, or a raw salad, or soup (once a week, an egg.) Cup of milk. Slice of bread with butter and honey (occasionally peanut butter.) On rare occasions, two spoonfuls junket, gelatin or tapioca custard (these sweetened with honey.)

Mid-afternoon, same as mid-morning.

Dinner, vegetables, cream soup, or cereal. Cup of milk. Slice of bread. Never any candy, cake or the like.

A READER.

In a pile of fly-infested filth, which came first? Did the flies bring the filth or did the filth develop the flies?

Let's use common sense.

Parasites, analogous to flies, infest some portion of the body. Could they do so if the body did not contain the debris on which they grow?

Isn't it much more logical to cleanse the system through diet when a parasite infestation takes place than to add a double poison to the already existing poison?

Besides, any drug strong enough to kill a bug is sufficiently potent to destroy living tissue.

Worm parasitism could be better treated through diet.

In analyzing this mother's diet schedule, my main criticism concerns the refined and concentrated foods.

Refined, predigested, precooked, presalted, preflavored cereals are certainly inferior to the natural whole grains, home-cooked and home-prepared.

Under condition of toxemia, always present with worm infestation, it would be better to eliminate cereals entirely, likewise milk, eggs, junkets and gelatins. Then give the child nude sun baths within the limit of toleration. Permit her body to perspire through vigorous outdoors play. Nightly apply a drawing poultice such as bread and milk, flaxseed, wet corn meal, or any one of a dozen others.

Then, at least, the infection will not spread, while the solution to the problem is basic instead of superficial as in the poisonous application of strong drugs.

Jaundice

The pasty, sickly, yellow complexion is one of the most frequently encountered symptoms of jaundice.

Our skin complexion, whether it be in the face or in any other area of the body, is determined by the pigment secreted through the blood into the skin.

One of the ingredients of this pigment is bile. When, through disease, the bile is prevented from acting in a normal manner, undue quantities of it are discharged into the blood and thence into the skin, creating the characteristic sickly yellow complexion of jaundice.

We have this in pernicious anemia, in chronic constipation, in auto-intoxication and in regular yellow jaundice.

Sometimes it is due to the interference of gallstones, which prevent the bile from going into the digestive system.

Sometimes the bile duct is inflamed and contracted.

The cause is invariably dietetic—a long preceding history of wrong eating, producing constipation and intestinal catarrh.

A fruit-juice fast of two or three days, sun baths, sweat baths, exercise to the point of perspiration and vigorous manipulation are the best measures applicable for such conditions.

Outdor life, particularly with sun baths, when applied with a sane fruit and vegetable diet, will go a long way toward overcoming this basic condition.

Proper Care of Your Feet
Dearest Mae,
I've been down town all afternoon fitting myself out for the best vacation of my life!

Last year all of me had a rest but my feet — they came home so battered from the walking and dancing of those two gay weeks that I thought they'd never get over it. But this time I have bought them a "through ticket to Well-ville" in the shape of two darling pairs of MAIN SPRING ARCH SHOES!
First I chose a pair of blondes to go with my sports suit. They have a contrasting trim of darker leather which makes them adorable with my sweater and skirt, too, and with one or two other darker things I wear. And then I got me a pair of white ones that are just too lovely with the tub silks and white things I expect to keep cool and beautiful in during afternoon and evening hours. I don't know which ones you'll like best—but I think you'll want to steal them both!
Hurry up and get ready to start — I'm crazy to see you and to start our annual playtime.
Yours with love,
BABBETTE.

BREAKFAST at the PLAZA

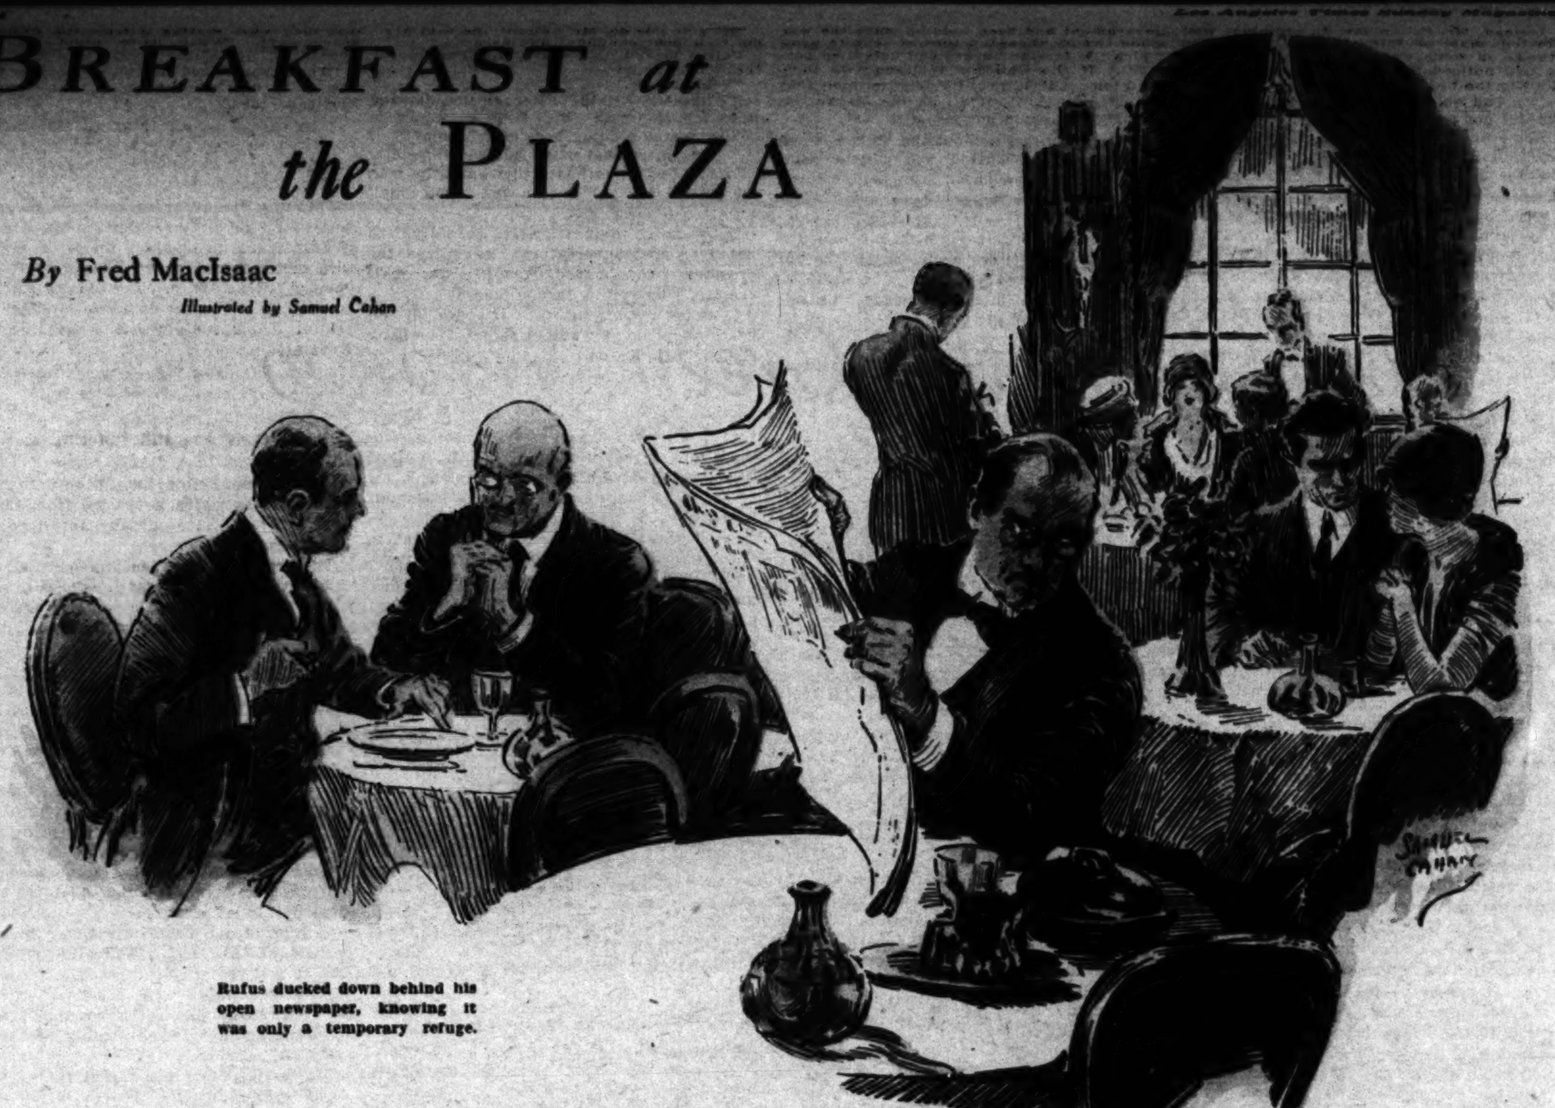
By Fred MacIsaac

Illustrated by Samuel Cahan



Rufus ducked down behind his open newspaper, knowing it was only a temporary refuge.

THIS story can happen but once in a lifetime—and it happens in very few lifetimes at all. It's all wrong, no question about it, and the author should be expelled from the authors' union, if he happens to be a member.

But what are you going to do when you are dealing with facts? Should you distort them to conform with copyreaders' whims, or lay them down fearlessly and ask what the other fellow has got?

There was a chap named Rufus Wilkins who had worked up to be chief clerk in the office of Felton Amalgamators, which are something that you fasten to something else which gives better results than if you didn't—at least, the salesmen so claim.

Rufus Wilkins had graduated from Columbia at the usual age, full of pep and education and with so much ambition that it didn't look as if anything could stop him from being the youngest bank president or the most successful captain of industry at the age of thirty that the world had ever known. Something stopped him; it was a blond stenographer he married a year after he got a job. If she were not enough of an obstacle, she presented him with three assistant obstacles, named Mary, Eloise and William, during the next six years.

So we find Rufus Wilkins, Columbia 1910, of the age of thirty-five, asleep in his bed in his flat in East Forty-ninth street upon the morning when this truthful tale begins. As a result of sixteen years of close attention to business, Rufus had risen to be chief in the executive office of Felton Amalgamators, with a salary of $65 per week and a reputation for punctuality and dependability that must have been very gratifying to the high officers of the company, if they knew of it.

He had a bank balance of $235. If all his creditors were assembled in one spot at the same moment, it would have looked like the annual meeting of some popular society. Mrs. Wilkins had been one of the prettiest stenographers who ever misspelled a word, and she had developed into an obese lady who thought the world was treating her badly and it was her husband's fault. Rufus himself was no longer the dashing youth of Columbia, class of 1910; his ambition had lowered its aim until it was pointed only at holding his job. Most of his hair had gone; he had developed one of those bookkeeper's mustaches, wore nose glasses, ready-made clothes and an air of apology.

Just the same, Rufus Wilkins was not an ordinary bookkeeper. There was something in him, a remnant of the fire of youth, a justification for an expensive education. To look at him, you wouldn't think it was there, but if he had been a regulation bookkeeper he wouldn't have done what we are about to relate.

So he was asleep in bed on this spring morning, sleeping as peacefully as though he had not forgotten to set the alarm clock and was already late for work. He went right on sleeping, past 7:30, 8:30, 9:30 and 10:30. For the first time since his marriage he woke up without being nudged, woke up completely rested, full of satisfied nerves, with a sense of well-being most unfamiliar to him.

For a moment he blinked contentedly at the bright light. Then he wondered where the family might be. Ah! He remembered that they had departed in a body the previous afternoon to visit his wife's father, who was dangerously ill, probably about to die. If there was any doubt of it, the arrival of the Wilkins contingent would cause him to make up his mind.

By the time Rufus got dressed and bathed and shaved it would be noon, half a day gone. Why not be hanged for a sheep instead of a lamb and take the whole day off? Heaven knew he was entitled to a holiday if any man in the organization might be. A holiday without a clamoring wife and sticky children to absorb his attention, a day in which he was absolutely free! He fondled the idea until it became a determination.

Grinning like a truant schoolboy, he called his office and asked to be connected with the second vice-president, John Thompson, his boss.

"This is Wilkins, Mr. Thompson," he said, "I won't be able to be down today."

"You won't? Why not? A heck of a time you selected to tell me. Things are all balled up because you are not down already. What's the matter with you?"

The lack of consideration evinced by the second vice-president toward this man whose punctuality was noteworthy in the office slightly angered Rufus Wilkins.

"I'm not sick," he retorted. "I just happen to be unable to come to the office."

"If you're not sick, what in Hades is the matter with you?"

"A private matter."

"Attend to your private matters outside of office hours. I need you right away. Jump into a taxi and be here in half an hour."

—A streak of stubbornness developed in the bookkeeper. He had waited long for this holiday and the second vice-president was not going to bully him out of it.

"Sorry, Mr. Thompson," he said calmly. "I won't be down today."

"But I have to have those estimates on the Grew job!"

"Get somebody else to do them."

"Nobody here knows the facts."

"Then they'll have to wait until tomorrow."

His impudence almost terrified him. He cringed, for he expected Thompson to say:

"If you can't come now, don't come at all. You are fired."

Thompson, however, did not say that. He sputtered, grumbled and finally remarked, "If your business is so important, all right."

Wilkins hung up, then smirked at his reflection in the mirror. The telephone conversation had been a triumph, for it had convinced him of something that he had long suspected—his standing in the office was secure. An ordinary clerk who would not explain the reason for his absence and who refused the appeal of his boss to do a certain piece of work would have landed on his ear on the sidewalk. Thompson had caved in, and Wilkins knew that they couldn't afford to discharge him.

By George, he felt like a fighting cock! He had talked back to the second vice-president and got away with it. Now he was free, nothing to bother him, no wife or children around. Why, he was like a bachelor, a clubman, a man about town! What the deuce would he do with his leisure?

Well, he wouldn't cook his own breakfast. He would don his best suit; buy a flower for his buttonhole and breakfast in the Hotel Plaza. It would set him back a couple of dollars, that breakfast, but this was a red-letter day; a fellow was entitled to indulge himself once in fifteen years.

Half an hour later, Rufus Wilkins strolled out of his two-by-four apartment near Third Avenue in the East Forties, and sauntered through pleasant side streets to Fifth Avenue, where he joined the well dressed and leisurely throng which moved slowly northward.

Entering the sunny breakfast room of the big hotel, he allowed the head waiter to conduct him to a well located table. There he settled himself, ordered a few dishes from the menu and accepted the morning newspaper from an attentive waiter.

The room was not full; it was dotted with rich looking and contented gentlemen and a few rather plump and expensive appearing ladies. He glanced leisurely over the front page of the newspaper, then let his eyes wander about the room.

Crash!

It was the collapse of his pretense. Only a few tables away were two men, one of them, a portly, red faced and irascible looking person, was no other than Benjamin R. Felton, president of Felton Amalgamators.

Caught!

Rufus ducked down behind his open newspaper, knowing that it was only a temporary refuge. Presently they would set food in front of him and he would be forced to lay down the journal and eat. Then Felton would see him, demand to know what he was doing there and why he wasn't at the office.

For fifteen years Wilkins had been seeing Felton, though the president rarely spoke to him. The old man represented Jove with his thunderbolts; minor gods transmitted his instructions. Of course Felton would know his chief clerk, and though Thompson hadn't felt like discharging him Felton would do it without hesitation.

Like a condemned criminal waiting for the order of execution, Rufus cowered behind his newspaper and heard the president ordering breakfast for himself and his companion.

By and by the waiter, with a breakfast in dishes with silver covers, stood expectantly before Wilkins. He ignored the servitor as long as he could, but, in the end, surrendered. Rufus folded and put down his paper. Mr. Felton looked at him—and through him.

His heart stopped beating for a second as the old man gazed, then shifted his eyes to his plate. Glory be, the president, had not recognized him!

Of course it was not extraordinary, after all. Felton knew Wilkins when he wore his office face and suit; in his proper environment the president would have recognized him instantly. The Plaza, however, was not his regular environment, and Wilkins did not wear his nervous, business wracked, sleep lacking office face.

CARE OF THE BODY

tion of considerable quantities of free hydrogen sulphide, the chances are that the cause will be found in the over-consumption of protein.

Analyzing this woman's diet as she briefly stated it, she is probably consuming too much bread, butter and milk. All three of these, wholesome and excellent foods as they are, when eaten in excess and unassociated with exercise are far too concentrated to be digested normally.

There is no sense in taking soda. Even though soda gives temporary relief, it does more than neutralize the acidity. Being a strong caustic irritant, it inflames the mucous membrane lining, irritating an already over-irritated tissue. Thus, it not only defeats its own purpose but accentuates the original condition responsible for malfunction.

I have never yet seen, known nor heard of a case of hyperacidity or gaseous fermentation being cured by soda. The temporary relief furnished is paid for in the long run by making the condition chronic and sometimes incurable.

In this particular case, the general rules to be followed are: First and most important, No big meals. It is much more advisable for the pregnant woman to eat five, six, or even seven meals per day rather than one or two huge ones.

Of course, more frequent feedings should not be made up of large quantities. The "eat-for-two" is nonsense. The quantity should be just barely enough to satisfy hunger.

Until the symptoms are entirely relieved it would also be advisable to eliminate from the dietary all breadstuffs and dairy products. Later, especially during the nursing period, these items may easily be included without detrimental effects.

Incidentally, where the gas pressure becomes severe, the pregnant mother, as well as any other adult, can very nicely go for twenty-four to forty-eight hours on naught but fruit juices.

"Give the digestive system a rest" is just as true during pregnancy as at any other time.

After-Effects of Tonsil Surgery

Some time ago, in a check-up of one hundred and ten boys of the sixth, seventh and eighth grade groups, 68 per cent were shown to have had their tonsils, adenoids, or both, removed.

These boys constituted a typical cross-section of our local social organizations.

They came from every class of home, from that bordering on extreme poverty to the ultra-wealthy.

Undoubtedly, the same relative proportions applied to other sections of the country.

In a recent survey of school statistics showing the cause of absences, the respiratory diseases such as colds, bronchitis, pneumonia, asthma, tuberculosis and similar ailments overwhelmingly led all other causes.

Bear in mind that approximately 68 per cent of these children have had their tonsils or adenoids removed.

The surgical removal of enlarged tonsils and adenoids is not in accord with Care of the Body teachings. It has been our contention for years that the surgical excision of the tonsils or adenoids exposes the child who has had these structures removed to the respiratory diseases far more than the child who still happens to own his tonsils.

It is quite logical in theory as well as in practice.

The tonsils stand as the guarding sentinels at the portals of the respiratory system.

Serving in the capacity of manufacturers of white cells, the tonsils protect against invading bacteria, dust, dirt, foul impurities and other irritants.

Remove these defenses and disease readily takes place.

Hair Removal and the X-ray

Los Angeles, Cal.

Dear Dr. Lovell:

Will you please give me some information? I know of several cases where the faces of people have been damaged by application of X-ray for the purpose of removing superfluous hair, and by this time their faces are pretty well wrinkled up.

Now, what are the future danger points that will develop from the use of the X-ray? Is there some treatment to put their faces in shape from wrinkling and to stimulate new fat cells in their skin as the fat cells, etc., are all dried up?

At times the skin breaks up and it causes much suffering, due to the skin's being very tender from the X-ray.

Why does the Board of Health allow the use of X-ray to damage the faces of people for the purpose of removing superfluous hair?

A READER.

Some time ago I ran across the expression, "high science."

The various branches of modern medicine are "high" in the sense of popular understanding. We trust agencies, about which we know very little, for tasks involving life itself. The why and the wherefore are far beyond the ken of understanding.

Millions of people subject themselves to X-ray treatment for every conceivable purpose. They do this without ascertaining one iota of information.

Were we to have more knowledge and less faith, the statistics in our national health would not be such gloomy reading.

This letter shows some of the general

DR. FRANK McCOY
AUTHOR—EDUCATOR—SCIENTIST

Instead, Mr. Felton saw an ordinary, well dressed man of thirty-five or forty who seemed in some way familiar. Very likely he had noticed this man on previous occasions in the breakfast room of the big hotel. Felton had only given him a casual glance, and did not consider him further.

However, the danger was not over. Wilkins fell upon his food and tried to keep his face down; his idea was to eat rapidly and get away before the big boss threw him a second and perhaps recognizing glance.

He could overhear the conversation at the president's table; as it was shop talk, it interested him. It seemed that Felton's companion was one of those wonderful persons called supersalesmen, the rare kind who evade purchasing agents and deal directly with big executives. This man was trying to land a big order of something. As Wilkin's superior, Mr. Thompson was purchasing agent for the company, and as Wilkins actually did most of the investigating and made the recommendations for purchases, in his opinion he was justified in his eavesdropping.

The conversation was exciting. The salesman represented an importer who had come into possession of a huge shipment of Chilean zennite, an ingredient which entered into the construction of the Amalgamators. It seemed that the importer had secured two thousand tons of the metal, through the failure of a foreign firm to complete payment for it, and was able to dispose of it at five cents a pound less than the market price, provided the entire shipment was taken. They did not have much time to waste on Felton; other amalgamator companies were in the market and President Felton would have to decide immediately if he would buy.

Zennite was ordinarily purchased by the one hundred pounds; two thousand tons would last Felton two or three years. As the market price was twelve cents per pound and it was being offered to him at seven cents, it seemed a bargain, but it meant a big investment. Naturally Felton talked terms.

"If you will accept a payment of fifty thousand dollars and take notes covering two years, coming due three months apart, I might consider your proposition," said the old man.

"We have to have one hundred thousand dollars cash."

"I can't do it."

"Let me step to the telephone. Perhaps we can come to terms," said the salesman.

Felton waved his hand. The salesman rose and walked out of the room.

Rufus Wilkins was in a terrible predicament. He knew all about zennite; he was, perhaps, the only man in America who did know all about it. He knew that the Chilean government had been holding since the war some twenty thousand tons of zennite upon which the foreign buyers had defaulted payment. If the Chileans released two thousand tons of it, it meant to Wilkins that they intended to throw it all on the market, as fast as they could get rid of it.

When the news got out the bottom would fall out of the market and shipments to come would be sold for very much lower prices than the seven cents per pound which Felton proposed to pay. The Felton Amalgamators would be loaded with a commodity which its competitors would be able to buy more cheaply and would be forced to go through with the bargain, because the selling concern held its notes as security for payment.

Wilkins was a very thorough person Everybody had forgotten this hoard of zennite in the hands of Chile, because it was eight years since they had seized it, and twenty thousand tons was considerably more than the world's yearly production of the metal. Even with the Chileans dribbling it out a tenth of their supply at a time, the price would flop on them and they would get only a cent or two for their last few shipments.

Felton's competitors, buying at such prices, could undersell him and put him out of business. Wilkins had never forgotten the Chilean supply of zennite and had always expected it to come out some day; therefore he had seen to it that the company was never oversupplied with the stuff. Probably the president had gone over his supplies, seen that he had very little zennite ahead, and had grasped at what he thought was a bargain, without consulting his office.

As an employee, it was Rufus's duty to warn the president instantly. To do so, however, meant to introduce himself, to call attention to his own absence from duty, to permit Felton to know that a clerk was giving himself airs in an expensive hotel. Suppose the old man refused to listen to him, put the deal through and fired him? Rufus' knowledge that the company would be out of business in two or three years would be small satisfaction for his own starvation and the suffering of his wife and children.

The world is full of capable, competent men who have a delusion that there is no other job for them than the one they hold; once out from under cover, they believe they will die of unaccustomed exposure.

Wilkins was loyal to Felton's; he had seen the rise of the company; he could not stand by to see it fall when he could save it. Even if he was to be fired, he could not permit the president to be tricked in this manner. He pushed back his chair, with the boldness of desperation, and sauntered over to his employer.

"How do you do, Mr. Felton!" he said, trying to appear confident and assured.

Felton looked up pleasantly. "Good morning, Mr.—er—aw——"

"Wilkins, sir."

"Wilkins! Wilkins!" Recognition dawned upon the old man; his face grew stern. "What are you doing here at this hour?"

"Never mind that now," advised the clerk. "Fortunately I overheard that bunk the man who just left was handing you. You didn't fall for it, did you?"

"How dare you question me? How dare you listen to my conversation?" exclaimed the president, who pushed back his own chair and stood up with a flushed face.

"I've been working for you for fifteen years and I don't want to see the company ruined," said Rufus.

"It need interest you no longer! You are fired!"

"Sssh! He's coming back," warned Wilkins. "Listen! There are eighteen thousand tons more of zennite coming out of Chile, after you've bought this shipload."

"All right, Mr. Felton," said the salesman heartily, as he pulled out his chair, but remained standing because of the intruder. "The boss says that he will take fifty thousand dollars from you, but no other concern could get such terms."

"I have an important office matter to discuss with this gentleman," said Felton, rather embarrassed. "This is Mr. Wilkins—Mr. Monahan. If you will excuse me for a moment, I'll step outside with him."

"Meanwhile, I'll tell them that we have closed," remarked Monahan.

"Not so fast!" returned Felton. "I haven't accepted your terms yet."

Monahan concealed his anger with a bland smile. "Don't delay too long. We have several salesmen out," he warned.

"I'll chance it. Come, Mr. Wilkins."

They walked into the lobby, where Felton confronted his clerk excitedly.

"Now, young man, repeat what you were saying in there!"

"I'm through," said Wilkins quietly. "I'm discharged."

"Don't be an ass!" said the president hastily. "I was a bit hasty, but I couldn't understand why you were not at the office. Never mind that now. How do you know there are eighteen thousand tons of this stuff to be released?"

"It's my business to know," replied Wilkins. "I read Spanish, and since we have been buying this stuff I have been reading the Valparaiso papers. I know they took over from their own people some twenty thousand tons of zennite in 1917. They have held it, waiting for a favorable time to sell it. There is a new government down there that wants cash and it is evidently shipping the stuff out quietly. This fellow told you that they were getting it from the Chilean government. What more proof do you need?"

"Thompson talked this purchase over with me. Why didn't he know about this twenty thousand tons?"

"He should have," returned Wilkins. "I told him about it six years ago. There has never been an occasion to speak of it since, and I suppose he forgot it."

"Hum! Damn expensive bit of forgetfulness! I'll have your statement verified, Mr. Wilkins, and meanwhile I'll let somebody else secure Mr. Monahan's bargain. If what you say is true, the price of zennite will drop to nothing. Go right down to the office and tell Mr. Thompson not to buy anything until I see him."

"He wouldn't make any purchase without consulting me," said Wilkins jauntily.

"Indeed! Hurry along now."

But Wilkins was still suffering from his dementia.

"Pardon me, Felton, but I have urgent private business which keeps me from the office today. I have already informed Mr. Thompson of this."

The president regarded him speculatively. "It's fortunate your private business brought you to the next table. Do you mind phoning the message to Mr. Thompson?"

"Not at all, sir."

"Thank you, Mr. Wilkins."

The old gentleman returned to the dining-room, but Wilkins phoned the office and finding Thompson out, left the message for him. Then Rufus paid the waiter for his breakfast—for the man was hovering outside the phone booth with his check—passed through the lobby and stood upon the steps of the hotel, contemplating the lovely spring day. There was a touch on his shoulder and he turned to see the angry countenance of Monahan, the supersalesman, much too close to his own to be friendly.

"Say," demanded the salesman, 'what in hell did you say to old Felton to spoil my sale?"

Wilkins regarded him coldly. While he might be afraid of the president, he wasn't worried about salesmen, today or any other day.

"I gave him certain information."

"What information?" demanded the man less truculently. "I offered him one of the biggest bargains ever set before a business man. He was ready to close when you butted in and handed him some bunk. What was it?"

Wilkins was a free man on this day. He had escaped with credit from a great danger a few minutes before, and he was unperturbed. His brain was well oiled and functioning smoothly. That the salesman was really perplexed indicated to him that the man himself was deceived, that he did not know that he was selling something not worth selling. And it occurred to Rufus Wilkins that his information might be of great value to the seller, as well as the buyer.

"There's a reason why your proposition was no bargain. I know it and you don't," he declared. "Why should I give you valuable information?"

"See here, if you've got anything up your

Surgery and the Library

Suppose you had to buy an automobile. Suppose you had never seen an automobile before and knew nothing about it.

Is it fair to assume that you would first familiarize yourself with the relative values, the quality of material and other attributes of the cars on the market?

Is it fair to assume that you would make a study, brief or terse though it might be, before you buy?

Now suppose that instead of selling you an automobile I were to try to convince you to buy something far more serious than an automobile—an operation.

I may cheat you of your dollars, of your possessions, and you may acquire new dollars and new possesions, but once the surgeon's knife has touched your body, there is no power on earth that can replace that which he has despoiled.

Is it asking too much to advise that you study the question?

Medicine is not a closed book. Thousands—aye, millions of volumes have been written about the human body.

Every library, from the smallest to the largest, contains innumerable books on the subject.

Then why not find out more about it?

If you are persuaded to have an operation for a definite disease, go to the public library wherever you may be. Learn all you can about the disease. Read text books, authors, conflicting opinions and authorities. Learn the attitude of the different schools of healing.

Don't be a "sucker!" Don't be cheated—especially if the information is available so that you may know!

There is no credit due the one who trusts blindly, faithfully, insipidly and stupidly, merely because the opinion comes from the "high moguls" of so-called "authority."

The avenues of knowledge are open to you. Learn before you venture on such an important step as an operation!

Heartburn

Long Beach, Cal.

Dear Dr. Lovell:

I wish you would advise me as to how to cure heartburn. I have been having it regularly for the last few months and I guess I have taken at least a package and a half of baking soda.

I am five months pregnant but never had any trouble with my stomach. I have not even felt the least bit nauseated in the mornings.

I eat scarcely any meat but lots of vegetables, whole wheat bread and butter, and milk. I don't take very much exercise—just do my housework and the odd things about the place. I am not troubled with constipation.

I would appreciate it if you would give me your advice as soon as possible.

A READER.

In reality, there is no such disease as heartburn. I assure you that if the temperature of the heart were to vary even but a few degrees, few of us would be alive to tell the tale.

Heartburn, as it is commonly called, is really a burning sensation in the vicinity of the heart, usually caused by the presence of hydrogen sulphide.

Hydrogen sulphide (H^2S) is a by-product of the decomposition of protein. Sulphur is found in no other food but protein. It is not contained in starch or in sugar, in fats or in oils.

During pregnancy there is always a special liability to digestive disturbances, associated with the customary increasing pressure of the fetus against the digestive system.

The mechanics are fairly simple to understand.

The uterus, which, in a nonpregnant state ordinarily takes no more than four or five inches of space, during pregnancy expands to as much as twenty-two inches. All of this expansion is upward and backward. The entire digestive system is compelled to bear the brunt of this pressure.

Unless the conditions of health are good, there is a greater liability to digestive disturbances during pregnancy than at any other time.

sleeve, we will make it worth your while."

"What do you mean—worth my while?"

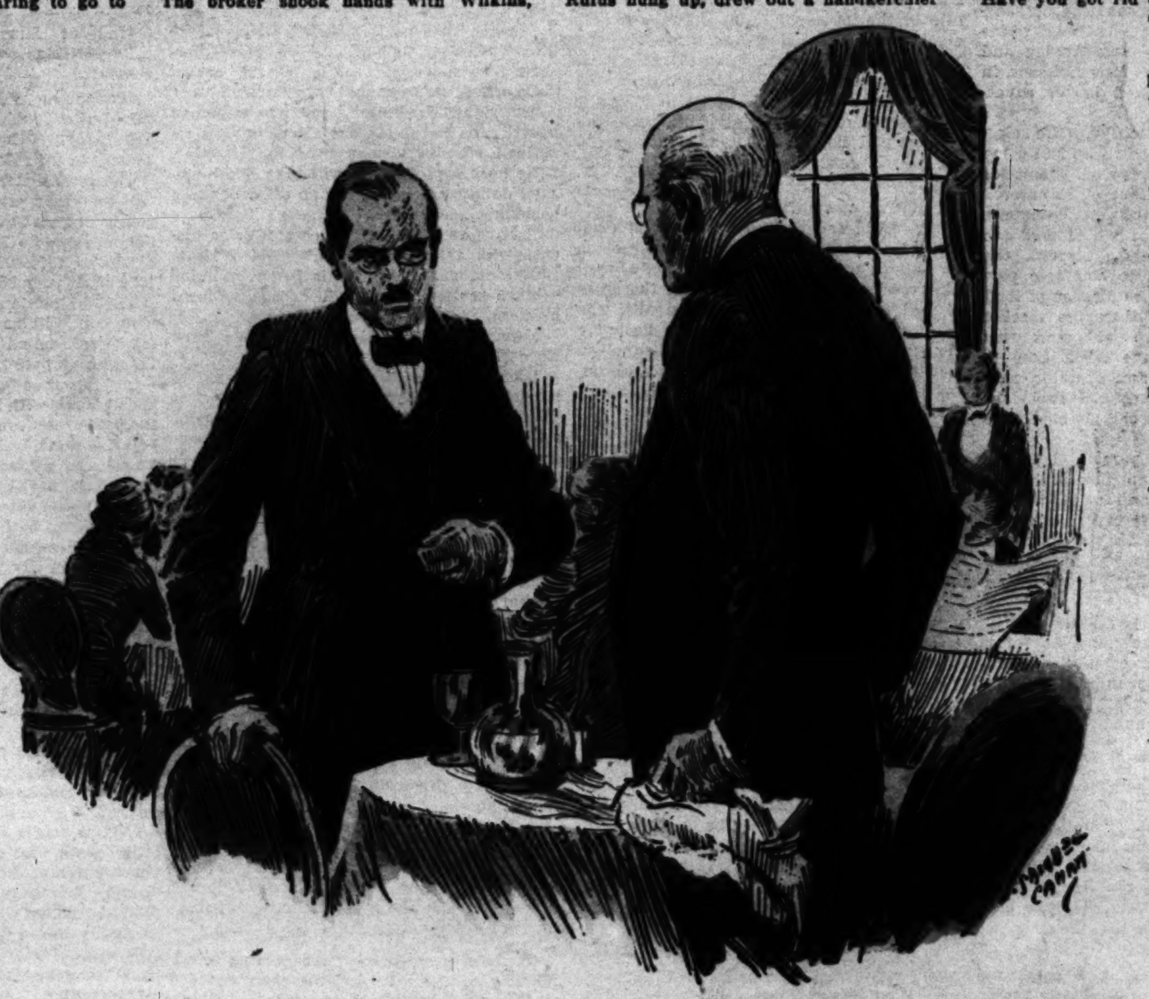
"Will you come with me and talk to my employer?"

"I might. I haven't anything special to do."

Monahan clutched the clerk by the coat sleeve and drew him into a taxi, which went dashing through traffic; on downtown until they were very close to the jumping off place.

Wilkins was thinking furiously during the journey. Suppose this importer was stung, too! Suppose he didn't know that Chile had something up her sleeve! Unless the importer sold his zennite quickly, he was apt to lose a lot of money.

They entered the private office of Nicholas Redmund, head of the firm of Redmund & Walsh, just as he was preparing to go to lunch.



"How dare you listen to my conversation?" The president pushed back his chair and stood up with a flushed face.

"Hello, Monahan!" he said cordially. "Close the deal?"

"No," replied the salesman, in disgust. "I had Felton all sewed up and this fellow whispered something to him that finished me. I brought him down here to tell you what he told Felton."

"It's Felton's bad luck," said Redmund easily. "The shipment will be snapped up. We have two other bids for the lot."

Wilkins saw that Redmund believed his own statement; evidently he didn't know of the big supply of zennite in Chile.

"My information will save you a couple of hundred thousand dollars," said Wilkins, "if acted upon immediately."

"I doubt it!" remarked Redmund, with a grin.

"It was sufficient to unsell Felton."

"What do you want for it?"

"Five thousand dollars."

"I'll see you hung first!"

"As you please! Perhaps it is my duty to give it to the trade."

"Just a minute." Redmund took off his hat and sat down. "How do I know that your information will be valuable to us?"

"Give me your check for five thousand," returned Wilkins. "If the information doesn't satisfy you, stop payment on the check. Then I shall tell the trade. I can always do that."

"It's fair enough," reflected Redmund. "If you hand me a lot of bunk, I'll stop payment quickly enough!"

"I'm satisfied."

The importer wrote out a check for five thousand dollars and handed it to Wilkins.

He scrutinized it and put it in his pocket. Outwardly he was self-possessed, but inwardly he was jubilant. A check for more than a year's salary as a result of a breakfast at the Plaza!

"You purchased this zennite from Chile?" he asked.

"Yes."

"They have eighteen thousand tons more to sell as soon as they get your money."

Redmund turned pale. "How do you know?" he demanded. "You must be crazy. There isn't that much of the stuff in the world."

Wilkins told him what he had already told his employer, adding additional details. "They are out to get all the money they can as quickly as they can and you are the first to be stung," he went on. "Now that you have the dope, you ought to be able to verify it."

"Our agent in Valparaiso must be a crook," declared the merchant. "I don't know whether you are right or not, Mr. Wilkins, and I am not going to waste time trying to verify your statements. We haven't paid for the shipment yet and we can get out of it."

"You were selling it before you bought it?"

"Had to do that in such a big deal. We couldn't swing it all ourselves. We just have an option on the stuff. Now that I have the information you gave me, I could stop payment on that five thousand dollar check and let you give the news to the trade. You're not as smart as you thought you were."

Wilkins' heart dropped into his boots.

"But I won't," went on Redmund with a smile. "Your dope was worth it."

"How about a commission to me out of that check?" Monahan asked Wilkins. "I brought you here, and you cheated me out of a big one."

"Ten per cent," declared Wilkins happily. "You are on."

The broker shook hands with Wilkins, who, accompanied by Monahan, went to the bank to cash the check so that he could pay the salesman his commission. The money came into his hands and he counted over five $100 bills to Monahan.

"Do you know what I'm going to do with this?" asked the salesman.

"No. What?"

"Sell zennite short. You'd better do the same."

Wilkins allowed himself to be persuaded. They sold zennite on a ten-point margin. An hour later the financial sheets got the Chilean dope from three different sources and when the market closed everybody was selling zennite.

It was the telephone bell which finally drew him from his deep slumber; there is something about a telephone bell which will penetrate any trance. He rolled out of bed, glanced at the clock and saw that it was ten-thirty.

Felton himself—on the phone! The president was speaking: "Mr. Wilkins, why are you not at the office?"

"You fired me yesterday, sir. Why should I be there?"

"I fired a clerk. I am now speaking to the second vice-president. Thompson is through. I investigated yesterday afternoon and found out he didn't know anything about anything. Apparently you have been the whole works in his office. And now, Mr. Second Vice-President, will you kindly come down so that this establishment can function?"

"Yes, sir, at once!"

"And say, Wilkins, did you have anything to do with the panic on zennite? The bottom dropped out of it this morning."

"A little sir."

"Hope you made a killing. I did!"

Felton rang off. Wilkins, in a dream, moved about his chamber. The job of second vice-president had paid Thompson $10,000 a year. It was unlikely that they would start him in at that figure, but he would surely get $7500. What a surprise for his wife! Although she nagged and grouched, she loved him and was loyal. He could do things for his family now. And if there had been a panic in zennite, he must have made a lot of money. He had sold the stock of the Zennite Corporation of America short at eighty-two. With trembling hands he grasped the telephone and called his broker.

"This is Rufus Wilkins, a customer, speaking. What's zennite quoted at this morning?"

"Selling at forty-five and no buyers. It will hit the bottom before night," replied the clerk on the other end.

Rufus hung up, drew out a handkerchief and wiped the beads of perspiration from his forehead. The money he had played on the market had certainly multiplied! He had made a fortune. It could not be true.

Well, he was entitled to it. After all, he was an able man, the only person in America who had all the facts about zennite. How lucky it was that he had remembered! He had even preserved the Spanish newspaper which contained the article regarding the seizing of the Chilean supply eight years before. It was somewhere in the apartment. How lucky he had learned Spanish! How fortunate he was in every respect!

He went to his desk and looked for the newspaper upon which his prosperity was founded. He discovered it eventually in a pile of papers. He took the sheet to a table and spread it out, running his finger down the columns for the item. Here it was. He read it. Then his eyes dilated; he sank into a chair; his heart pounded furiously. Could it be possible? No! He read it again.

There it was, in black and white. The Chilean government had seized a supply of zennite upon which the buyers had defaulted payment. It amounted to two thousand tons. Not twenty thousand tons—two thousand tons. He had remembered the item all these years, but remembered it inaccurately; two thousand tons—that was all there was.

Mechanically he took the phone to call his broker. He gave the number and got the clerk with whom he had done business.

"Oh, Mr. Wilkins," said the clerk, "Zennite is down to thirty. Want to buy?"

"Buy? Buy?" said Wilkins stupidly.

"O.K.," said the clerk and hung up on him.

Wilkins tried to get the number again, but failed. What was the use? The jig was up.

Bowed and stricken he sat at the phone for five minutes, then it rang sharply.

"Mr. Wilkins," said the broker's clerk. "Bought your stock at twenty-eight. Congratulations! You make more than twenty thousand dollars."

When he had hung up, Wilkins lifted his head. He had a ray of hope. He might make some return to the firm which had trusted him. He would make over the twenty thousand dollars to President Felton. But that wouldn't save his job. And then he got the big idea. Excitedly he called Redmund & Walsh, and asked for Mr. Redmund. His name brought the importer to the phone.

"Good morning, Mr. Wilkins! Thanks for your tip yesterday. I'm about fifty thousand dollars ahead on the market."

"Have you got rid of your option on the Chilean zennite?"

"No," replied Redmund. "I guess I'll have to forfeit the five thousand dollars I paid for it."

"Want to sell it to me for five thousand dollars?"

"Yes. You can have it. Cash! What do you want it for?"

"It's a deal," returned Wilkins. "I'll be down and take it up."

In this way he repaid Redmund for the five thousand dollars paid him for his false tip. That was something. But the idea was getitng bigger. There was nothing the matter with zennite: In a day or two the truth would become known and it would shoot up again. Meanwhile Wilkins held the option on two thousand tons of it, and he could turn it over to Mr. Felton. Thus the firm would profit by his mistake.

Felton greeted him cheerfully. "Seen zennite lately?" he demanded. "It's down to twenty."

"Close your account up quickly—at once, Mr. Felton! I'll explain when you have sold."

"Not me," retorted the old gentleman. "Tell me first. It's still going down."

The confession was very hard, but Wilkins managed to get it out in time. The president began by being very angry; finally he began to laugh. In the end he patted Rufus on the back in friendly fashion.

"You pulled a bone," he said. "You were too damn cocksure. But as a result of your error I have made one hundred thousand dollars. Furthermore, I'll take that shipment of zennite off your hands. I imagine Redmund was paying about five cents for it and we were willing to pay seven yesterday. So that's a big profit.

"Now I'll take my winnings and buy Zennite Corporation Stock, which will shoot back to seventy or eighty as soon as this flurry is over. The only person who is stung is Redmund, and it serves him right for not verifying your statement. Besides, he was selling something he hadn't bought, and that is reprehensible—if you're caught at it."

"I don't suppose you want me as vice-president after this!" said Wilkins.

"Not keep a man whose mistakes make big money for the firm? You bet your life you stay! I fired Thompson because he was generally incompetent, not because of that zennite matter. Now do you want to take your profits and buy zennite along with me?"

"No, sir. I'm through with the market."

"Good! I don't like to have my officers speculating—though this is a sure thing. Go over and take up your option and turn it over to me. Then go to work. Vice-presidents are supposed to be in at ten, young man."

"Yes, sir," said Wilkins.

Did you ever hear this fable? A Traveler met Plague on the highway. "Where are you going?" he asked. "To Bagdad to kill 5000 people," said Plague. A few days later they met again. "You said you were going to Bagdad to kill 5000 people, and you killed 50,000," said the Traveler. "No," answered Plague, "I only slew 5000. Fear killed the others."

I want to tell you Fear is man's worst enemy. Fear of leaving orthodox healing methods behind keeps thousands of people sick, who could recover buoyant health by natural healing methods. At the first sign of a cold they run to the medicine chest—at the first pain in the abdomen they think "appendicitis." Instead of suppressing your trouble with drugs, instead of running into the surgeon's knife—have the courage to help Nature eliminate the cause of the ailment. Come to the Health Center Clinic, 1000 West Seventh St. We will gladly give you a free consultation any weekday between 8:30 a.m. and 6:30 p.m.

If you could see the remarkable recoveries that I see here at the Health Center—the successful treatment of such serious diseases as inflammatory rheumatism, diabetes, gout, asthma, neuritis, tumors, obesity, hemmorhoids, etc.—you would have perfect confidence in Natural healing methods. The secret of natural healing is elimination—and that is the basis of our Hydralite Bloodwash Baths, color light therapy, actinic rays, colonic lavage, scientific massage, corrective exercise, the Ehret "Mucusless Diet" and other treatments.

We have just published a beautiful de luxe illustrated booklet in colors, describing these Hydralite Bloodwash Baths fully. You can secure a copy free of charge by writing the Health Center. Send for it.

It is easier, I know, to follow the old habits of thinking, eating, "doctoring," worrying than to change. It takes grit to make new decisions, to get out of the sloughs of despondency and poor health. But it is easy enough to follow right habits of living once they are formed.

Many a person has been helped to form correct diet habits by eating at the Health Center, 1000 West Seventh St. Try dinner there some evening. I promise you the delicious non-clogging menus, rich in vitamines, are anything but hard to take.

Have you noticed how a good pore-cleansing bath stimulates self-confidence and a courageous outlook on life? Inner-cleanliness has the same effect—only more so. Thoroughly remove the morbid poisons and long-accumulated waste matter coating the walls of the intestines and see if you don't feel able to "whip your weight in wildcats."

I do not advise the use of the usual "physics." But Innerclean Intestinal Laxative is different. This is a harmless compound of aromatic herbs and vegetables perfected by the famous Prof. Arnold Ehret, who originated the "Mucusless Diet Healing System." Innerclean is really cleansing, and it is invigorating as well. I know of nothing to equal it. You can get a big package for 50 cents at the Health Center or any druggist. And the Innerclean Mfg. Speaking of good habits, I think of one which is rapidly spreading among the housewives of Los Angeles and neighboring territory. And that is the good habit of supplying the home table regularly with unsulphured sundried pears, figs, prunes and raisins from the Health Food Store at 1000 West Seventh St., or 217 W. One of the most inspiring and encouraging books I ever read is Prof. Arnold Ehret's "Mucusless Diet Healing System." It is more than a complete 25-lesson course in therapeutic hygiene—it is a whole philosophy of happy, successful living. These lessons cost $100 when taught personally by Prof. Ehret, but you can get the book for $1.50, postage paid anywhere in the U.S.A. correct than are the results of a lay student's personal experiments.

"There is wisdom in the words, 'Take no thought, therefore, what ye shall eat nor what ye shall drink nor wherewithal ye shall be clothed.' But we would preface this by recommending that a simple, sane, moderate plan of life be adopted. Then 'take no thought' and you will find 'life more abundantly' than can be gained by teasing kind nature for the benison which she is so ready to bestow unasked.

"And so in the manufacture of our perennial crop of invalids there are two factors; one, excessive anxiety about external matters, worldliness; the other excessive anxiety about oneself, introspection. Both are signs of progress; both, perhaps, are good in that they help to eliminate the unfit. Who shall dare to judge? But both excesses can be and should be avoided. Man can, by right living, physically and morally, practically extirpate at once weakness and disease from his life; and, as a little child, enter again the long lost paradise of health, simplicity and happiness."

Lime Waters

Elmer Cary of the research department of a bottled-water concern, has made some interesting investigations on the subject of alkali waters.

Much "hokum" has been and is being dispensed on the curative values of mineral waters.

The "We-need-plenty-of-lime-to-build-bone" fable has long ago been exploited. It is ridiculous on the face of it!

Mr. Cary's data and quotations are herewith summed up. The authorities he mentions are men high up in the medical world.

"Lime water or other alkalies do not need to be added to the milk mixtures of healthy babies."—United States Department of Labor, Children's Bureau, Publication No. 8.

"Barley water may sometimes, with advantage, be used, but lime-water is better avoided." . . . "The idea once entertained, that salts in hard water aided the growth and nutrition of the bones in children, has been abandoned as untenable."—Hygiene and Public Health, Parkes and Kenwood, pps. 323 and 58.

"The idea seems to be current that lime water used in cow's milk is a valuable addition to the baby's diet, and will prevent rickets. The impression holds that the baby is going to get needed lime out of the lime water.

"People who entertain this notion are entirely oblivious of the fact that milk itself contains more lime than does lime water. Another important difference is this, that the lime of the milk is organic lime, organized lime, lime that is ready to be assimilated, whereas the lime in the lime water is dead lime, mineral lime. There is abundant evidence that this mineral water can not be assimilated by the body, and very little of it can be used.

"Nor is this all. The lime water may do harm. Lime is an alkali, it neutralizes the hydrochloric acid of the gastric juice, and so injures digestion. There is already too much lime in cow's milk for the baby's needs. Mother's milk contains only three grains of lime to the pint, instead of twenty-six, as in cow's milk."—John Harvey Kellogg, M.D., Health Question Book, p. 18.

"I am amazed by the number of physicians who still advise mothers to feed their babies on sweetened, condensed milk. Many still prescribe lime water, forgetting that milk contains all the lime a baby needs. They also forget that a baby's stomach contains very little hydrochloric acid, and that lime water at once converts an equivalent amount of this acid into chloride of lime. This interferes with the digestion of casein. No wonder casein curds appear so frequently in the stools. Unfortunately, most of the authoritise on pediatrics recommend the use of lime water. I beg mothers not to use it."—From leaflet by Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, entitled "Artificial Foods for Infants."—Dr. Wiley was formerly with the United States Bureau of Chemistry, and was active in enforcing the Pure Food and Drug Act.

"Cow's milk is especially rich in calcium and phosphorus. These salts are in excess of the infants requirements even when the milk has been modified.

"The addition of lime water to a formula, as a routine measure, should probably be discouraged, as alkalis serve to neutralize the free hydrochloric acid of the gastric

OH, LAW!

I WAS BORN A BRITON, and everybody knows Britons "never, never will be slaves." But just to make it doubly sure I come over and get myself legally adopted in the land of the free and the home of the brave tc let freedom ring.

And then I get in on the "votes for women" and register so that all the candidates write me nice letters and send me little handbills telling me how good they are, and I thus acquire the ultimate glory of freedom. And I get in on the "economic independence," too, and the "right to select the father of my children," so one way and another I'm about as "free" as any respectable woman can hope to be. I even bobbed my hair and shortened my skirts freely and unmolested.

But all the same, I seem to spend my life obeying laws. And if I didn't the goblins would get me. They began by teaching me the catechism and the Ten Commandments when I was very little. Luckily the Ten Commandments are mainly addressed to men. Which makes it easier for women to keep them.

But the laws of etiquette and good social behavior seem to be mainly addressed to my sex, and oh, they hammered them into me. The world seemed to be chock full of jolly things I must not do, but which my young brother could get away with with impunity.

I wasn't so very old before I realized the laws of fashion and that "it is better to be out of the world than out of the fashion." Nobody admitted it, of course, but I did rather gather that following the laws of style with nice conservative judgment was quite as important to my social standing as not stealing or committing murder. And much more important than keeping the Sabbath Day holy, for instance. Every so often I have rebelled against style laws and vowed I would never, never obey them, so there.

A fellow once wrote that "You cannot break the Ten Commandments. They break you." And, as every woman knows, that is just as true of style commandments. Just try wearing your skirt short when everyone else is wearing 'em long, or wearing a crinoline when everyone else is wearing bolster-skirts and see what happens. Right away you are "peculiar" and the psychopathic ward is staring you in the face.

As I reached years of comparative discretion, I found that more laws, laws for every tiny activity of life, abound on all sides and must positively be obeyed. Try playing bridge without obeying the laws. Try playing golf—and ignoring the laws that come out of St. Andrews. Try working in a newspaper office without obeying the laws of one's newspaper. Try attending a fashionable banquet without obeying the laws of good table manners. Join even the most frivolous of social clubs—and get the booklet of by-laws with your membership ticket. Read over the laws governing any and every religious creed. Try going to school or college—and gasp at the multitudinous laws and rules about everything, every day, every hour.

Try joining a fraternity or a sorority—and see the appalling rules and laws the dear kids lay down for themselves

Try joining any sort of organization, whether it is the Masons, the Rotarians, or the P.-T.A. or an Opera Arts Club or any ordinary woman's club—and see what happens if you are not up on and obedient to all the laws they have provided for themselves.

Start studying music or art or literature—and the first thing one has to learn are laws, laws, laws. Dear Heaven, one can't even be a stenog or a laundry-maid or a parlor-maid or a brilliant society hostess without learning wads of new laws—and obeying them.

But even if one doesn't risk joining or doing any of these things, but rests content in being a mere unoccupied drone of a citizen, one still discovers that the nation, the State, the county and the city are busy passing new laws for the order of one's conduct at the rate of several thousand a year.

There are laws galore just appertaining to a little stroll in the park. If one breaks out into an automobile—phew! Automobile laws are vast and numerous and different in every city, county, village and State. There never was an automobilist yet who wasn't a law-breaker—even if some lucky devils never do get caught.

There are laws about taking a little swim at the beach or playing a game of tennis . . . . both the laws of the sport and the laws of the city fathers. And any number of laws about the books we shall read and the plays we shall see and the ways we may dance . . .

Laws about garbage cans, laws about watering lawns, laws about keeping chickens, laws about dogs. Laws about everything from every angle. When they aren't Federal or State or civic laws, they are social or technical laws—and generally all of 'em.

If one is not breaking a law on some statute book one is breaking some social law, some law of health, diet, etiquette, speech, art, music, style, sport, or ethics. It simply isn't possible to get through a day without committing some unlawful offense in connection with something or somebody. If one does nothing worse, one can surely be counted upon to break the laws of grammar, or the laws of good taste, or the laws of correct breathing, or the laws of posture, or the laws of scrupulous hygiene.

And, mind you, ignorance is no plea. If we are nice normal free citizens in good standing we are expected to be up on every kind of law there is appertaining to every possible interest and activity. Even these statistical chaps who like to work out how many after-dinner speeches it would take to reach to the sun in a million years have never tackled the job of telling us how many laws, ordinances, rules an average civilized human being is expected to know and obey. There are not enough figures in arithmetic to total those in a single State. The automobile laws alone would exhaust them all.

I simply bubble with pride when I think how many laws I do know and the enormous number of them that I faithfully keep. My record must be one of amazing law-abiding virtue. I tried to keep tab on myself yesterday and out of 4,958,642 laws governing the conduct of my day, I only broke a quarter of a million. And a thousand or two of those were the laws of arithmetic, trying to achieve the necessary book-keeping.

The worst offense I committed was deliberate, cold-blooded, a realm in which I callously confess to being an old and hardened "repeater." I cut my heart-of-a-lettuce salad with a knife and brazenly faced seven haughty, shocked society matrons. Even the waiter eyed me with scorn and conspicuously removed the knife to the meat plate. But that came at the end of my day, after my law-book-keeping, and noting my extreme law-abiding virtue, I feared to become a bumptious prig. I never could stand self-righteous people, so I had to shame myself before that authoritative company.

Besides, I never could manage heart-of-a-lettuce with one of those darned little salad forks.

COLLAPSIBLE CHARMERS

In the days of Thackeray and Vanity Fair, fainting Amelias were quite comme il faut and no gallant beau could safely walk abroad without some smelling salts. But fainting Amelias have been out of style for quite a while now. They lacked conviction with the make-up for one thing.

However, a new vogue has set in lately that seems to meet the emotional needs of the day. The lovely actress rushing to her lover's bier "collapses." A lady accused of conspiring to precipitately dispatch her husband "collapses" on the stand. The beautiful charmer impersonating a statue in a famous play "collapses" on her pedestal. A mother, informed of the hasty misalliance of her society daughter, "collapses" when she hears who her new son-in-law is. A lovely baby star, stirred to emotional excitement over new glory showered upon her, "collapses" with ecstasy.

And, judging by the photographs, there is just something about collapsing that is a vast improvement over mere fainting—it isn't half so hard on the make-up.

CARE OF THE BODY

By Philip M. Lovell, N.D.

Exercise

How much exercise should the average man take and how should he take it?

It may astonish you to know that I do not believe in exercise as it is commonly understood.

The formal one-two-three-four bend, twist or turn is typical of the seriousness with which we take most of our endeavors.

When exercise becomes work, when it becomes a serious objective, the same as a dose of castor oil, it would be better if it were not taken.

Exercise should always be in the form of play. The spirit of exercise is more essential than the actual muscular movement involved. The game or the sportsman's attitude is of greater importance than the stress of muscular contraction.

Have you ever observed a group of adults trying to play a muscular game?

How serious it is! How few know how to unbend!

How many of them are able to lose the dignity, the austerity, the serious-mindedness which is part and parcel of American psychology?

Rare, indeed, is the man or woman who knows how to be childlike, particularly when they play their games! Instead of that, they go to it with a grim setting of lips and with a determination to get it over with as soon as possible, provided, of course, victory is achieved.

There is no exercise superior to sports or to games played with vim, zest and childlike, whole-souled enthusiasm.

The health benefits from the glowing exuberance which comes from sports immeasurably outdo the formal one-two-three-four.

Unless you can put the zip, the spirit, the vital zest behind your muscular work, it would be better to not do it at all.

The joy of exercise lies more in the mental attitude than in the muscular contraction.

A Nation of Invalids

(A radio talk given by Dr. P. M. Lovell over KHJ, The Times.)

With much pride we are accustomed to pat ourselves upon the back as "having arrived." We gloat over our statistics, our gigantic industrial production, our oil wells and mines, our factories and cities, our skyscrapers and automobiles—aye, in every phase of our industrial and productive life we excel.

No nation comes within a long distance of achieving that which this young country has produced.

Our hearts glow with pride as we point to our mass production figures, to our mass achievements, to our mass possession.

Mass Invalidism

But our glow of enthusiasm wanes as we consider a product of which little is said and less is done—our mass invalids, the great group of people who have sacrificed health, virility, strength and power on the shibboleth of acquisition and possession.

Millions are dependent upon the drugstore for health and for vitality. Countless millions more are continuously under the care of their physicians, while still more millions are undermining that heritage of strength, that primitive dynamic force given to us by our parents and their parents.

Health Repair Machines

In the production of invalids and near-invalids, this country stands supreme, largely because we stand at the pinnacle of our civilized processes and pay the price for our civilized acquisitions.

Perhaps many of you may question the accuracy of these facts. They are not so much subject to statistics as to common experience, observation and knowledge.

The number of doctors per capita, the constantly increasing number and size of our institutions catering to health, the huge production and consumption of drugs of every kind and description—these tell their story in a language far more eloquent than dull statistics.

For each ounce of gold we pay the price. For each acquisition of civilization thus far the human being has yielded of his power and strength.

The Struggle For Acquisitions

To demonstrate the causes would, in a sense, be analogous to intimating the cure. We must deal with fundamentals, the gross causative factors lying behind this mass condition.

A study of the individual reflects the tempo of the mass.

Dissociate yourself, at least for the purpose of introspection, so that analysis may be clearer. Study your own state of mind, the attitude with which you view life, its conquests, its power, and above all, its possessions.

Analyze the effect upon you of temporal power and acquisition.

To gain advantage over our fellow men, to control their destinies and actions, to gain power and usage over possessions and acquisitions—are these not the aspirations of the great mass?

Affluence Verus Abstinence

The age when we suffered from adversity, from want, from abstinence, is gone. That which became staunch by adversity, that which was tested through the pain of hunger, has now become softened by a greater adversity—luxury, excessive comforts, supernervous refinements and the general softening effects of overpossessions.

We have too much. We own too much. We indulge too far and speed too fast. The human nervous system cannot keep pace.

Never before were the productive efforts of life so easy, so effortless.

We Lose Within to Gain Without

We have become lethargic because we no longer need to train.

The objectives, inner calm, inner peace, self-possession, culture, beauty, aestheticism, all those nobler virtues which should mean so much, have given place to a more dominant force.

We preach the gospel of success, of power, of acquisition. This means far more to us than those sublime virtues which make men great.

Success is now measured in terms of external possessions rather than in terms of internal acquisition.

The result is it has made man weaker in direct ratio as he increases in power over external things. He cannot apply his energy both within and without himself.

To quote Dr. Latson, writing in Health Culture:

"The quintessence of what we call education for the child may be embodied in the words, Strive, excel, acquire, control; sacrifice all to those ends. And the misguided child, ignorant, hot-blooded, primeval, is fired by these admonitions; and responds often with such alacrity as to leave school, the grammar school, broken both physically and morally—forgetting that his body is the temple of the Great Life, forgetting those noble words: 'Love ye one another.'

"And later in the child's life, at college, in shop, or store, or office, the same counsels, the same ideals, the same temptations. So, through the life of the average man, the typical man of our day, rush, hurry, effort, application, cruel disregard of the needs, the rights of others; only the one great fixed purpose—success. While always the inner, deeper, truer self is urging counsels of rest, peace, health and brotherly love; while always the soul spurns the tawdry spoils offered it, and cries for the living water.

"And all the ills of modern life, all the influences producing our vast crop of invalids, arise from this fundamental mistake—this seeking of happiness is external prosperity. Overwork, worry, insomnia, nervousness, sedentary living, improper feeding, stimulation—all those are as noxious plants growing in unclean soil. And that soil is Externalization, Worldliness.

"But there is in the manufacture of invalids one phase not covered by the above. One factor, and a factor rapidly increasing in proportions, is strangely enough the effort to be healthy. The body was designed to act automatically, or rather to put it more correctly, the body has become adapted to acting automatically. Its various functionings, respiration, circulation, digestion and so on, go forward best when we thnk about them least. The healthiest man is the man who thinks least about himself.

"To one who, from a cursory study of medical literature or from perusal of popular writings on health, has acquired a smattering of knowledge on such subjects there is always strong temptation to self study, experiments and dogmatic extremism. Such a mental action soon becomes habitual; and when the habit of watching oneself is once formed, the person is generally doomed to life-long invalidism. For a function which is thought about is a function deranged; and when the habit of thinking about one's functions is persisted in those functions become in time hopelessly deranged. The writer might cite scores of cases, both in his private and in his sanitarium practice, where the most marked invalidism—where incurable chronic disease has resulted from such perverted habits of thought.

"And just here someone is sure to ask: 'Does this mean that we are to pay no attention to hygiene? Are we not to govern ourselves in accordance with the teachings of physiology?'

"In answer it may be said that a simple and healthful mode of life covering the needs of the body, of the mind and of the soul is essential to healthy and happy living. A rule of life should be adopted and then followed without qualm or question. Such rule of life may be based upon the teachings of any one of a dozen highly trained specialists whose views are the result of many years of careful study, collocating the observations of thousands of keen observers all over the world—these utterances are not final, and are not assumed to be. They, are, however, more likely to be

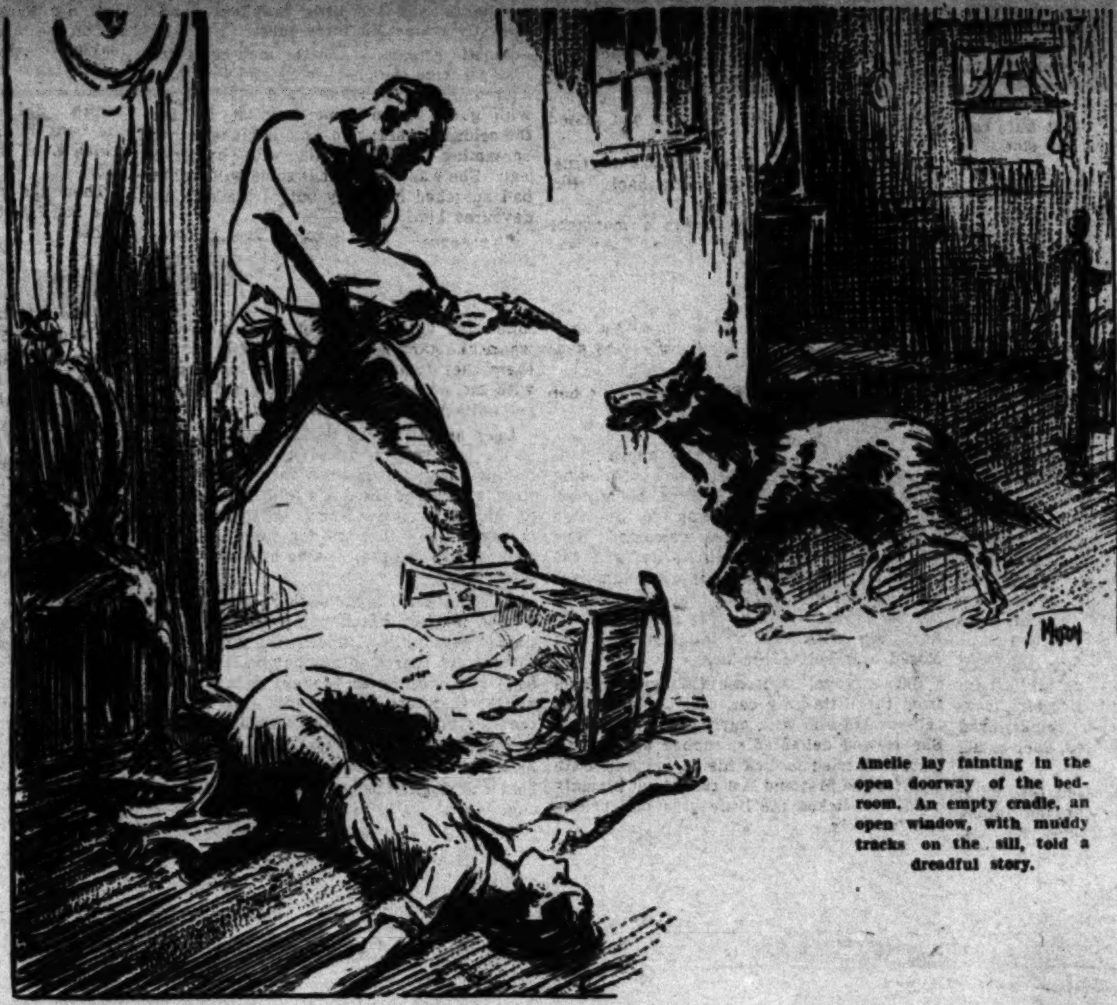
THE SOUL OF CALIBAN

By Emma Lindsay Squier

Illustrated by Rex Maxon



Amelie lay fainting in the open doorway of the bedroom. An empty cradle, an open window, with muddy tracks on the sill, told a dreadful story.

FROM French Louie I had this story. You will accept it as true, or scout it as impossible, according to your liking and knowledge of dogs. For myself, I think it is true, for he was not blessed—or cursed—with imagination.

French Louie for many years lived in the northern woods. He has always loved animals. One day, when he heard a visitor to the menagerie remark that it was a pity that animals had no souls, he flew into a rage and was still sputtering French and English when I dropped in upon him.

"No souls, they say!" he snorted, spreading his hands and puckering his lips in contemptuous mimicry. "Faugh! They give me this gran' pain! The only animal they ever have, I bet you, he is a canary bird that say 'Pretty Poll' all day long!"

"That's a parrot," I said mildly. But he only snorted.

"No soul, they say! Listen, I tell you some'ing I bet you nobody believe. Or they say: 'Oh, dat dog he obey hees instinct." Bien, all I say ees, who know what ees instinct and what ees soul? And I bet you many a man he ain't got the soul that that dog got instinct—no."

It was in the sheep country of Alberta that Louie knew the dog, Caliban. Leon Surprenon was his owner, and Louie used to visit the sheepman at his ranch, far removed from civilization.

"Leon he was one fine educated man," he told me. "Books—with pictures—he had many of them in hees 'ouse. Dat dog, Caliban, he name heem from a pleh by Shekespeare—you have heard of heem?"

"Yes," I said.

"You know a pleh with a dog name' Caliban in eet?"

"Not a dog," I answered, "but a poor imprisoned monster, ugly, deformed, and very wicked, yet somehow very pitiful."

French Louie nodded vigorously.

"C'est la meme chose," he assured me. "Dat dog Caliban—oh, he was ogly! Hees lip she always lifted up like zis—in a snar-rl—all the time dat lip! And hees eyes—leetle, mean-looking eyes, wid a frown between dem always, and teeth dat would snep together—clop! No tramps ever came near the place of Leon Surprenon. Dey knew dat dog, Caliban; he was not a beast to be trifle' with."

"What kind of a dog was he?" I asked.

He shrugged his shoulders, spread out his hands and shook his head. No kind, and every kind, was what I gathered from his description—a big, shaggy dog, as large as a sheep dog, and much more stockily built. His hair had no silky smoothness to it. Rather, it was like the rough, matted fur of a wolf—and Louie maintained that Caliban had wolf blood in him. There was a strain of bulldog, too. His underjaw came out pugnaciously—always with that lifted lip which was no fault of his, but which gave his face a perpetually savage expression.

Ugly he must have been; yet useful, too. As a guard against tramps and the lawless characters who are to be found in any part of the country where civilization is at a distance, he was invaluable. As a sheep dog, too, he had not his equal in Alberta.

Perhaps it is too much to say that he could count the sheep his master owned. But true it is that he would watch them, passing into the big corrals, his sharp, shaggy ears pointed, his small, close-set eyes never wavering in their intense regard, his whole body taut with concentration. And, if any lingered, or did not come, Caliban would need no word of command to stir him to action. Like an arrow he would dart out, snapping at the lagging heels, turning in a scatter-brained ewe, or dashing off across the fields to find a sheep which he knew had strayed, or had fallen into the river.

A dog of strange, tumultuous jealousies, and incomprehensible tenderness. So rough was he, when herding the sheep, that Leon Surprenon was always shouting: "Caliban, stop biting that sheep, or I'll beat your ugly brains out!"

Caliban would stop short, regard his master with a long, disdainful stare, and then look back at the sheep, as if to say: "Those silly things! What difference does it make whether I bite their heels or not?"

And yet—that was the dog that, after seeing the sheep into the corral one winter afternoon when a blizzard was threatening to blow down from the north, did not come into the house to dream and twitch under the kitchen stove, as was his custom. When darkness fell, Leon noticed the dog's absence with unconcern, and then with growing uneasiness. The rising wind flung itself viciously upon doors and windows, the white snow whirled up against the panes with sharp, sibilant flurries. Leon went to the door and called. The blizzard drove his voice back in his throat; the wind hurled him against the portals, and drove an icy blast of snow into the hall.

Leon Surprenon was not the man to be daunted by a storm. He remembered that, after the gates were shut, Caliban had stood steadily gazing away toward the dim fields, where the menacing curtain of oncoming wind and snow was blotting out the contours of stream and distant forest.

So he took a lantern and fought his way out into the terrible night, out toward the sheep corrals, and then out toward the invisible fields beyond the stream. A mile he went—perhaps more—fighting his way against the fury of the storm. It was out by the cluster of trees that marks the east line of the ranch that he met Caliban.

The dim light of the lantern threw a weak golden circle against the driving white mistiness of the snow. And into the nebulous ring of light came Caliban, grim, staggering, a grotesque monster looming out of the white darkness, his mouth strangely misshapen by something he was carrying—a lamb, newly born.

Beside him, struggling weakly, yet valiantly, against the driving snow, came the mother sheep. Caliban was coming slowly, adapting his pace to hers, stopping when she would stop, yet with unmistakable signs that he expected her to struggle forward with him. And the lamb—the weak, bleating little thing swung from his teeth as lightly as if it had been a puff of thistledown.

Caliban never begged for caresses. He was not the sort of dog to leap and bark and wag his tail when the master came home. Between him and Leon Surprenon there was an understanding—a man's understanding of mutual respect and restraint. A word of commendation sufficed him, or sometimes a pat on the head. But never, as long as Leon had owned the dog, could he recall a time when Caliban had ever sought to ingratiate himself by being friendly and playful, as the other dogs would do.

Nevertheless, Caliban had his jealousies, fierce, deep, and primitive. He killed a dog that Leon petted casually; he took it by the throat and crushed it with his great teeth, then flung the quivering body down and stared at it with those baleful, close-set eyes. There was blood on the perpetual snarl of his lifted lip.

Then fearlessly he awaited his punishment. Leon beat him cruelly. But Caliban never flinched or whimpered, just stood there hunching himself up and shutting his eyes, licking his lips a bit as the blows hurt him more and more. When it was over, he shook himself, stretched, then pricked up his ears and looked Leon in the face, as if to say: "Well, that's over. Now have you any orders?" If he had whimpered once—but he did not. Leon swore furiously, and had the dead dog buried in the meadow. He did not caress the other dogs after that. They were valuable to him—but Caliban was priceless. And Leon knew that the only way of breaking his stubborn spirit would be to kill him.

Caliban had one abiding hatred; Cats. Whereas the other dogs chased them joyously, or ignored them as inferior creatures, Caliban loathed them, chased them savagely, killed them mercilessly. He had a short, brutal way of doing it; if he caught a luckless cat—and he could run like a yearling buck—he would give it one shake, like the crack of a whip, and then toss it into the air. It usually died with a broken neck and a broken back. And, by the law of the survival of the fittest, the cats that escaped from Caliban's savage sallies were wise in their generation and kept out of his way.

But there was one small cat, not yet out of kittenhood, that had either come recently to the ranch, or else, by an accident, had not crossed Caliban's path—a gentle little cat, all gray, with a white paw which she was always licking, as if proud of it.

One day she sat sunning herself on the porch before the house. Caliban came by that way and saw her.

With a savage, deep-throated growl that the other cats had learned to fear as the most deadly thing of life, he leaped at her, caught her, flung her up into the air.

Perhaps it was her supreme ignorance of danger that saved her from death. For the gentle little cat had not tried to run from the oncoming whirlwind of teeth and gleaming eyes. She lay where Caliban had flung her, dazed, inert, staring at the terrible dog, with round uncomprehending eyes. He saw that he had not killed her. He came nearer, ready to shake her with the peculiarly deadly twist that he knew so well. Still she did not move. She could not. She only mewed, a very small, pitiful mew, and her stunned body twitched a little.

Caliban hesitated, sniffed at her, turned away. After all, he seemed to tell himself, you could not kill a weak, helpless thing like that—a thing that could not run.

Leon Surprenon came out and found the little cat. He took her up very gently, and she tried to purr, as he stroked her quivering, hurt body.

"Caliban," said Leon sternly, "that was not a sportsmanlike thing to do. I am ashamed of you!"

And, to his great surprise, Caliban, the insolent, the ever-snarling, put his tail between his legs and slunk down the steps. He, too, was ashamed.

But Caliban, that ugly, misshapen dog with the perpetual snarl on his lifted lip, could make amends. And to the best of his ability he did it. The gentle little cat did not die, but never did she fully recover the use of her limbs. She had a slow, halting way of walking, and running was an impossibility. She would have been an easy prey for the joyous, roistering dogs that chased cats, not from enmity, but because it was the proper thing to do.

But Caliban stood between her and eager, sniffing dogs, like a savage, sinister warrior. Too well did the other ranch dogs know the menace of those close-set eyes, the ugly, undershot jaw, and the snarl that showed the glitter of deadly, clamping teeth. They learned—through experience—that the little gray cat was not to be molested.

Not only did Caliban become the little gray cat's protector; he became her friend She would sit on the fence and watch for

She's the Whole Show All by Herself

By Preston Wright

OF THE many changes in human fortune wrought by the World War which has more romantic aspects than the rise of Ruth Draper?

In the last year columns and columns have been written about the art of that other great diseuse, the Spanish Raquel Meller, and the bizarre, vagabond obscurity from which she sprang. Meller's press agents surrounded her with an aura of exotic mystery, and presented her as supremely unique. But the truth is that Meller, neither in her art nor her individuality, possesses uniqueness outrivalling that of Ruth Draper.

The chief difference is in nationality. Meller is Spanish. Miss Draper is American. The whole idea behind the latter is typically American.

Meller, somehow, contrives to move mystically about the world in an atmosphere of splendor, reinforced, but at the same time shielded, by a retinue of managers, secretaries and servants. However, this remoteness, this aloofness, is no more effective than that attained by Miss Draper in quite a different way.

Let me cite an incident in explanation.

Ruth Draper played a first engagement in a mid-western city.

"By George," said the local manager to the treasurer, "this is a strange cast. Miss Draper has no manager with her—nor a secretary.

"She told me," replied the treasurer, "that she'd see me after the performance to close up the business."

The stage manager happened to be in the office.

"She seems to be the whole show, inside and outside," he said. "Did you know that she has no maid? Also, that after the cyclorama had been placed, and the lights adjusted, she told us just to carry the 'props' on the stage and she would place them? Of course, there were only two chairs, a stand, and a table; but the table was a bit heavy and it was a surprise to see her lift it about so easily."

The manager shook his head.

"Most unusual," he commented. "I've never seen anything like it."

Except when conditions demand otherwise, Ruth Draper travels about the country in a most unusual solitariness. But it is not the loneliness of a misanthrope. It is the loneliness of a throbbing, vigorous genius interested in but one thing—the development and the expression of an art peculiar to itself. This is the explanation of the circumstance that the public, when it thinks of Ruth Draper, recalls only a name, a strikingly beautiful woman, and a rare and finished art.

It was while American audiences were going wild over Russian art players and imported French stars that Ruth Draper went to Europe and established herself as one of the supreme artists of the theater. But there is a story back of that, in which the World War figures.

Tom Masson, former editor of Life, was one of the first, perhaps the first, to perceive the real genius of Miss Draper.

Unlike Raquel Meller—and uniquely, too—Miss Draper is descended from distinguished lineage. Her father, William H. Draper, was a noted New York physician. One of her grandfathers, was Charles A. Dana, famous editor of the New York Sun and assistant Secretary of War under Abraham Lincoln. Her family has always been socially prominent.

When Ruth Draper was a little child, parents still taught their children to recite. If visitors came to the house, there inevitably arrived the moment in which little Willie or little Helen would be thrust forward to "speak" his or her "little piece."

Moments of smothering boredom, in which millions of us have been crucified on the cross of parental pride! But little Ruth Draper was not of that vast juvenile army. She liked to recite. More than that, she mimicked everybody, old and young, in little sketches she composed herself.

In her case it was not the invitation of her parents that brought her frequently into the limelight. It was the earnest pleas of their friends.

Through girlhood and young womanhood this continued. At every social function, ultimately, the hostess would say:

"Ruth, do please give us some of your sketches."

And everybody else joined in:

"Yes, Ruth, p-l-e-a-s-e do!"

One night Tom Masson was present on such an occasion. "Young woman," he told Miss Draper, "you ought to be drawing good pay for these performances."

Now Miss Draper hadn't ever thought of becoming a professional. There was no need of it. But the idea of a career and an independent income was enticing. She began asking remuneration for her entertainments.

At first she appeared only at social functions and before clubs. But she felt there must be something bigger and better for her. So she made a round of the agencies which book concert artists, lecturers, entertainers and the like.

"Sorry, but we can't use you," she was told everywhere. But often she was advised: "Go up to Pond; he will be more likely to do something for you than anyone else."

The name of Pond is famous in the agency field. Major J. B. Pond founded his bureau in 1873. He is dead, but his son, James B. Pond, carries on.

An assistant in the outer office first talked with Miss Draper. She impressed him and he hurried into Pond's office.

"There's a girl outside who looks very promising," he said.

"Bring her in," Pond said.

Miss Draper signed a contract to appear under Pond's management.

This was in 1917. Before bookings could be arranged, The United States entered the World War. Miss Draper, of course, wanted to do her bit, and she turned doughboy entertainer. At first she worked in this country for the Red Cross; but later she went to Europe for the Y.M.C.A.

How modestly she viewed her attainments is proved by a letter she wrote back to New York from France.

"If I can't get $150 for each of my performances," she said in it, "I would be very glad to accept $100."

She didn't realize that in almost no time at all eager audiences would be paying thousands to see her every time she stepped upon a stage.

The war ended. She could return to America, but an idea came to her. Why not hire a London theater and give a performance or two before she sailed?

It was then that the biggest development of her career came. London critics praised her extravagantly. The Times called her the most accomplished of living reciters.

Back in New York again, the American critics took up the chorus where their British brethern left off. "The best actress in the world," they described her.

And that is how Ruth Draper reached the heights.

The Press Agent

If you should read, amidst the news,
That all the lions in the zoos
Have scurried forth, unfettered, free—
Remember, that's Publicity.
You'd be surprised what he will do—
This Baron of the Ballyhoo—
To brighten up the pallid flame
Of picture's, star's, or magnate's name.
One day he wrecks a ship off Brookline—
A ruse the public swallows hook, line
And sinker. Then he plans a duel
In Central Park; all this for fuel
To warm up interest to a glow
And call attention to his show.
More similes and adjectives
Than Wilstach quotes, Roget's book gives
Are flung before the public eye—
That he who reads will also buy.
The vacant field, the open space,
The pole, the tree—each is a place
To paste and tack alluring lines,
For movie fans believe in signs.
This very moment, as I'm typing,
He comes in, on his round of sniping,
And on my back he sticks a card...
To post an unsuspecting bard!

Altruism

If the sun were only as white as the moon
And the moon as red as the sun
Think how dark it would be at noon
And how light when the day is done!

It mightn't be pleasant for you and me
To sleep when the sky is bright,
But how nice for the cats and thieves it would be
Who have to go 'round at night!

Rural Plaint

When I was young I loved the spring;
I do not love it any more,
Nor do I love the birds that sing
Outside my gloomy cottage door.

Nor do I love the things that grow
From bulbs and seeds; and in my soul
I know that I shall never know
The tulip from the oriole.

My heart is tortured all the day
And restlessness imbues my feet,
As down the mudded lanes they stray,
With longing for a city street.

And when the lilacs flood the air,
There grows a dim, forgotten want
Within my heart, and I despair
For long-lost scents of Houbigant.

For you the blooming apple tree,
For me the spring foulard cravats;
For you the hawthorn hedge, for me
The flowering of summer hats

Give me the scent of push-cart fruits,
The cries of peddlers, boys at play,
The windows full of bathing suits,
And you may have your new-mown hay.

And you may have your dewy fields,
Your woodbird's call, your thrush's moan;
A wilder, sweeter music yields
The wailing of my saxophone.

And when the rural night grows drear,
I shall be dancing, high, aloof,
Nearer the stars than you, my dear,
At midnight on some singing roof!

Houses

I built a house above the sea,
With iris climbing up the path,
A granite hollow for my bath,
Refilled by breakers faithfully;
And, silhouetted on the sky,
Great vessels nodded, passing by
My little home above the sea.

I built a house within the wold;
A wild rose tendril held my latch
And leaves supplied a dappled thatch,
In April green, in autumn gold.
Soft beds of hackmatack I made,
Benignant pines bent down to shade
My little home within the wold.

I built a house upon a hill,
From lowland lives aloof and far;
A tree my candlestick, a star
My candle, and my glass a still,
Deep tarn. The silence was my friend
And no north-sired wind could bend
My little home upon the hill.

I built these houses—in my dreams.
In city pens my life is pent,
For rondeau will not raise the beams
Nor sonnet sequence pay the rent
Of homes that poets build in dreams!

the sheep dogs to come up to the house, after the day's work was done. When the other dogs fled past her, she paid no attention, realizing perfectly that they dared not harm her. But, when Caliban came, close at the heels of Leon Surprenon, she would yawn and stretch, purr loudly, and drop squarely and lightly on the big dog's back. He would carry her gravely into the kitchen, lie down while she got slowly off his back, and would lie under the stove, with the little cat purring and rubbing about his face. It was not in him to show affection. But he permitted her carefully to wash his face and ears, tug at burs that matted his heavy coat, and to sleep between his forefeet.

Now it was at this time that Leon Surprenon married Amelie Morin, from Dubiqui, and brought her to the ranch that was bounded by dark forests and deep, turbulent rivers. She chafed a little under the isolation of the place, and shivered when the wolves howled, far back on the distant slopes. But she loved Leon Surprenon, and in time became reconciled to the loneliness of the ranch—still more reconciled when a son was born to her, and was strong and healthy and beautiful.

Caliban had accepted the girl, Amelie, stoically, without apparent resentment. It was as if he knew that, sooner or later, his master would bring home a woman to share the lonely ranch house. But the baby—that was a different thing. He had not bargained on the small intruder who became at once the lord and tyrant of the household. When Leon took up the baby in his arms, Caliban growled, and his eyes became a baleful red.

When Leon put the baby in its crib, and spoke to it foolishly, fondly, as all fathers do, Caliban came and stood beside him, looking down at the red-faced, crinkly-eyed baby; and again the dog growled, deep in his throat.

One day, when Leon caressed the child, Caliban sprang, trying to tear the infant out of his arms. Leon knocked the dog furiously aside, and beat him with a leather whip.

"Caliban, you fiend," he panted, between blows. "If you ever touch that baby, I'll kill you!"

And, as if the dog understood, he hunched himself and shut his eyes, licking his lips as the heavy lash fell, again and again. Then he shook himself, stared at his master with somber, unwavering eyes, and went out of the house, without once looking back.

—For a whole week he did not return. One of the men reported that he had seen Caliban in the forest, that the dog had mated with a female wolf.

Leon Surprenon said that it was not true, and that Caliban would come back. But Amelie cried out:

"No, no! That dog, he is a monster! Never again would I feel that my baby was safe!"

"You misjudge him," Leon said soothingly. "He is a little jealous of the baby, it is true, but he will overcome that in time. An ugly-looking dog, I grant you, but he is very gentle, nevertheless."

"Gentle—that beast!" The girl shut her eyes and shuddered.

Caliban did come back. He appeared at the door one day when Leon was out looking after the sheep—sullen, defiant, his glittering, close-set eyes seeming to question whether or not he would be welcomed. The perpetual snarl on his lifted lip, and the ugliness of his powerful body made him ever more repellent to Amelie, who snatched up her baby from where he was playing on the floor, ran with him to the bedroom, and closed and bolted the door.

But a royal welcome Caliban received from the little gray cat. She dragged herself toward him with purring sounds of joy. She mewed delightedly, rubbed against his legs, and tried to lick his face. And Caliban, for the first and last time, bent his ugly head, and licked the little gray cat, briefly and furtively.

The dog had learned his lesson as to the status of the baby. And, whether or not his heart was scarred with that savage, primitive jealousy which he had shown at first so plainly, no hint of it now appeared. At first he ignored the child, even when it crawled toward him as he lay under the kitchen stove.

Later he would watch the round-faced baby with rigid, attentive eyes—eyes in which there were blue-green wolf gleams behind the honest brown. Sometimes he would sniff at the child questioningly, as if trying to ascertain for himself what charm such a helpless, crawling little animal could possibly have for the man who was his master and his idol.

Little by little Amelie's distrust of him lessened, and she was willing that the baby should lie in his crib on the sunny porch, when Caliban was stretched out on the stove with the little gray cat sleeping between his paws.

Then one day, after a morning of housework within doors, she came out to take the baby—and he was gone. The crib was empty, the little blankets were rumpled into confusion. Caliban still lay sleeping upon the porch, and the little gray cat purred drowsily against his furry chest.

Amelie screamed, and the men came running up from the sheep pens and the barns, snatching up sticks of wood, or fumbling with guns. Leon came running, his face the color of chalk; and Amelie clung to him, screaming, sobbing, wild with hysterical fear. She was certain that some wild animal had snatched her baby out of his crib and devoured him.

"Nonsense!" said Leon Surprenon positively. "No wild animal could come near the house with Caliban on guard."

After an hour of frantic searching, they found the child. Back of the ranch-house where the garbage was dumped and burned, there they found the baby, playing happily with an old tin can, dirty and bedraggled, yet quite unhurt and unharmed.

Leon stood in deep thought, staring down at Caliban, who returned his look steadily, unflinchingly, as was his wont. For the first time, a doubt of the dog's integrity came into his mind. He knew Caliban's great strength, knew that the dog could have carried the baby as easily as he had carried the lamb.

And the garbage pile—there was a grim humor in that which pointed to Caliban's line of reasoning. Undesirable things were thrown out there; things put upon the garbage pile were never brought back into the house; therefore, if the baby were put out there, with the rest of the rubbish . . .

"Caliban, you fiend," said Leon Surprenon, between clenched teeth. Yet he could not beat the dog. The evidence was only circumstantial.

"Caliban," said Leon Surprenon sternly, "you have spoiled my belief in you. I will never be able to trust you again."

The great, ugly dog stared at him with those glittering, close-set eyes, then turned away abruptly and lay down. It was as if he accepted the defeat of his plans, the humiliation, the loss of his master's trust, with stoical resignation. It was almost as if he had shrugged his shoulders.

Now there came the winter—a lean, terrible winter, when the wolves howled about the ranch, sometimes becoming so bold as to come close to the barns, and corrals, and the house.

The spring was late, and, even when the snow began to melt, and the first warm breezes to come up from the south, still the howling of the wolves was heard on the distant hills, and still tracks were found in the crusted snow about the barn and the sheep corrals.

One day in the spring an urgent message came to Amelie Surprenon, begging her to come to a neighboring ranch, where a woman lay in childbirth.

She could only go on horseback—and the need for her help was imminent. She saddled her horse herself, for the men were out on the ranges. Then she hesitated as to leaving or taking the baby.

But Leon had said he would return at noon, and the sun was then almost at the zenith. She scribbled a note for him, put the baby in the bedroom in the little crib which Leon had made for it, and shut the door.

Then she mounted her horse and rode hard and fast to the woman who was in need of her.

Leon Surprenon did not get the note. A hint of sickness had come upon some of the sheep, and he worked all through the morning and late into the afternoon with sheep-dip and sprays.

When he was about to return to the ranch-house, one of the men told him that he had seen Amelie riding by, at noon, in the direction of the Pourers's ranch. Leon frowned a bit. He did not like to have Amelie ride alone, especially on the forest roads. He flung himself upon his horse, shouted to the men to go on with their work, and took a short cut across the fields to ride home with Amelie.

He met her just as she came out of the door.

"Such a sweet little baby boy!" she called to Leon, as he rode nearer. Then her face clouded suddenly.

"The baby—our baby—" she said uncertainly. "You did not leave him alone?"

Leon stared back at her, his forehead wrinkled.

"The baby?" he repeated. "Why, surely, Amelie, he is with you?"

For an instant she did not reply. A slow fear was dawning in her heart that stretched her eyes wide and made them hard and glassy.

"No—no," she almost whispered. "I left a note—I thought you would come home at noon. The baby then—he is there alone—perhaps with—Caliban—" Her voice died away, as if she were afraid of the name she had spoken.

Leon tried to laugh, to make light of her fears. But his lips were a bit stiff, and he breathed hard as he helped her into the saddle.

They did not speak again, the husband and wife, but rode, rode as if for the saving of a life.

It was Amelie who dismounted first, when, at the end of that wild ride, her horse came to a stop, panting and trembling. She dashed the unlocked door wide open, and, an instant later, a wild scream sent the blood ebbing from Leon's face and made his hands numb clods of flesh as they fumbled for the gun in his belt.

The scene he saw, as he stumbled through the hallway, turned him sick with a deadly nausea of horror and despair.

Amelie lay fainting in the open doorway of the bedroom. An empty cradle, an open window, with muddy tracks on the sill, told a dreadful story. But the thing that made him cry out, savagely, hoarsely, was the dog—Caliban. The snarling, mis-shapen beast stood in the doorway, staring at him with red, malevolent eyes—and there was blood on the heavy jowls and the thick matted hair of the chest. Leon screamed like a madman and fired.

The dog still stood there, just an instant. The small, close-set eyes blinked slightly, the ugly head jerked back once—and he fell in a silent, twitching heap.

Leon was sobbing, hardly knowing what he said or did. And then—he heard a baby crying.

Stunned, incredulous, almost believing himself in a tortured dream, the man went slowly forward. The baby lay behind the door, lay there where it had been dragged to safety. It was crying with fright and hunger, beating the air vaguely with its pink little hands. And over by the dresser, in a pool of blood—lay a dead wolf.

"And dat is why," said Louie, the Frenchman lapsing into the argot of his daily life, "dat I get so mad inside of me when people say animals dey have no souls. Did not the dog, Caliban, have a soul? Oh, mon, Dieu! I know dis: when he died dat day, and hees spirit went out of hees big, ogly body and rose up to the skies, the good Saint who guards the gates up dere he look out, and say: 'Why, Caliban, ees dat you? Come in, mon brave. I did not know you. How beautiful you have grown!'"

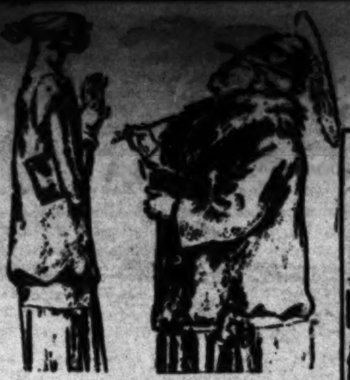
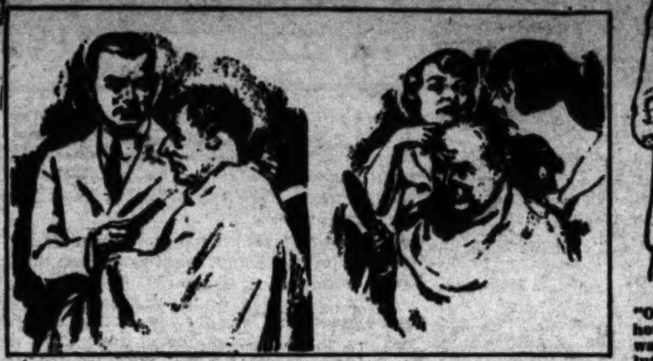
FLATTERY

By W. E. Hill

(Copyright, 1927, by The Chicago Tribune Syndicate.)

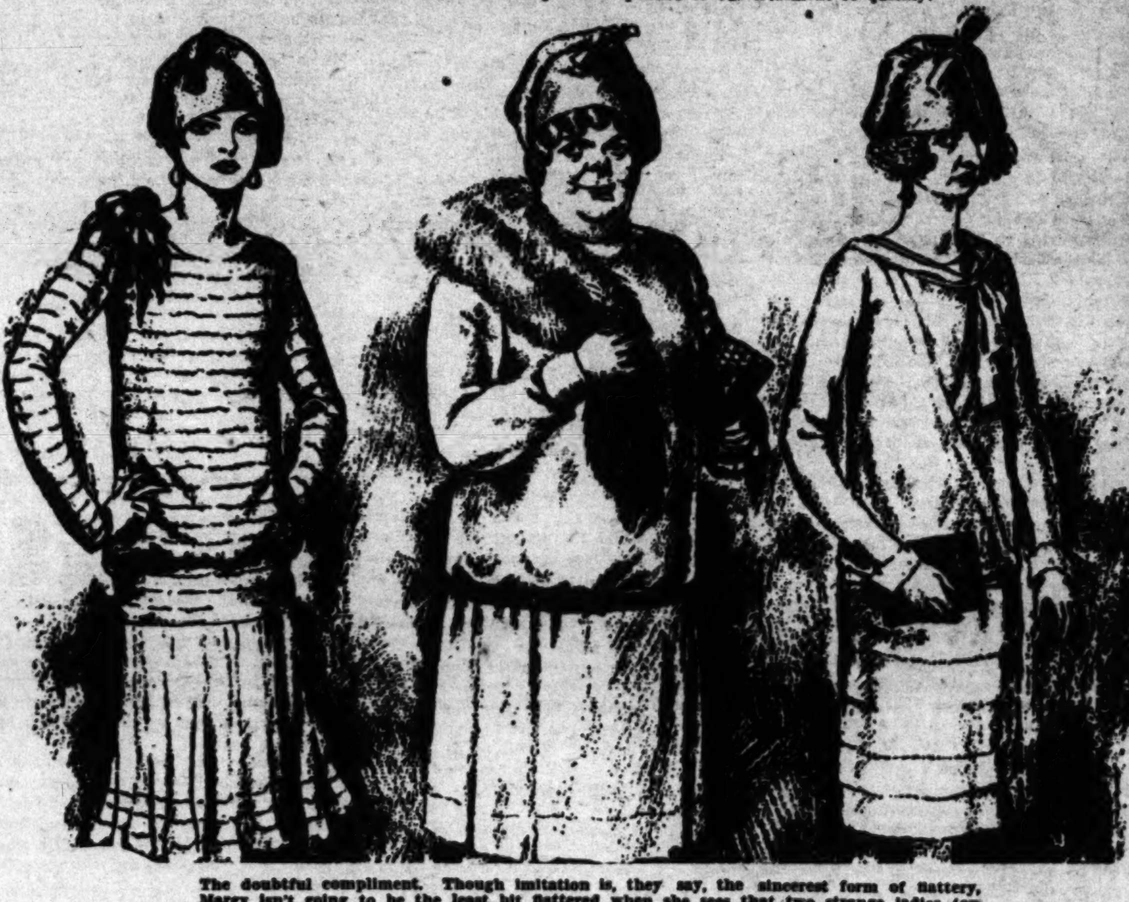


Refined Flattery—"Why, Lillyan, how adepoise you is lookin'!" "And you, too, Alvanetta, seems like I never seen you so embonpoint and slender! Almost spectral like." Miss Jones, who works out intermittently, meets Miss Johnson, who works out at even rarer intervals, and a few well chosen compliments are bandied about.

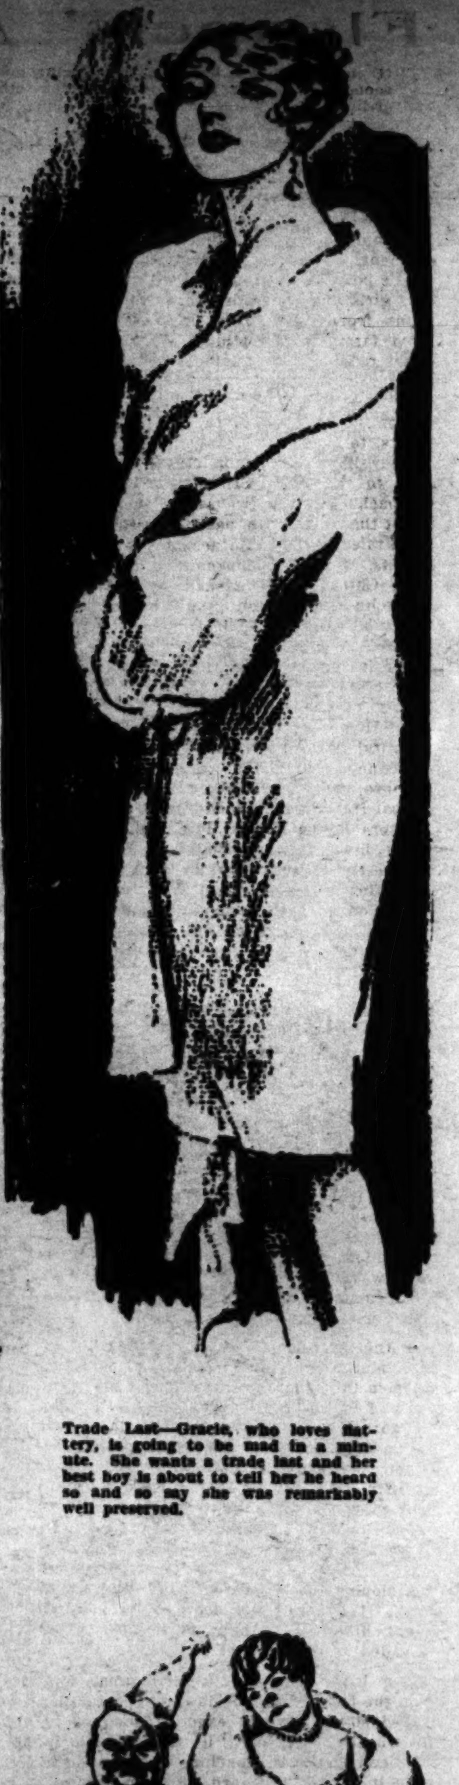


"It's the hair, not the hat." Men love to be flattered about their hair. And for just that reason many of our best and biggest business boys are going to the beauty parlors for their scalp treatment. The man in the barber's chair is asking Tony Passementril, the barber, if he will have any hair left when he is old. "Well," answers Tony, unfeelingly, "guess that depends on how long you last!" Over at the Hide-a-Wee Beautye Shoppe they do things with tact. This is only the second treatment butthe scalp has made such marvelous progress that Miss Flanegan has called her side partner, Miss Nolan, to see. "Never," says she, "have I seen a scalp that responded to our treatment so quickly!"

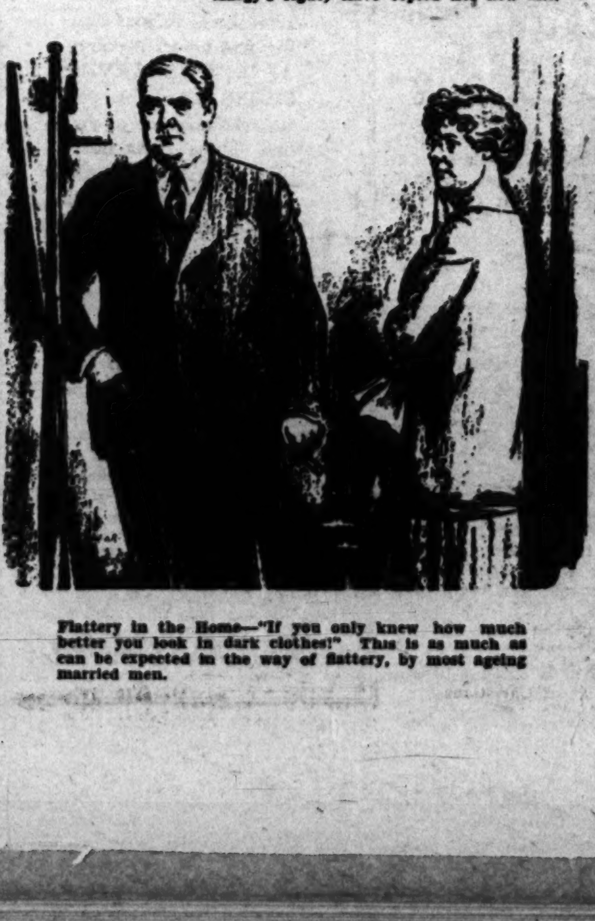
"Oh, I know I'm homely, and awkward, and absolutely devoid of charm, but do tell me what you think of me!" This, dear readers, is how a plain girl goes after it.



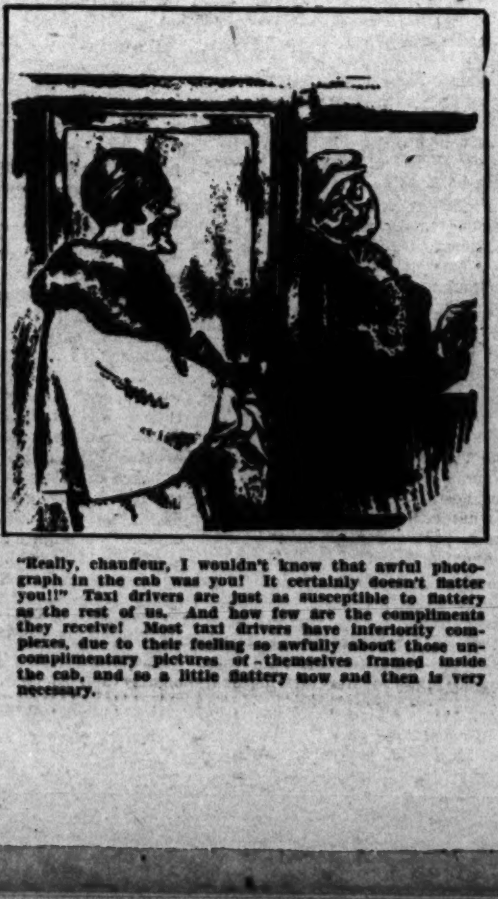
The doubtful compliment. Though imitation is, they say, the sincerest form of flattery, Margy isn't going to be the least bit flattered when she sees that two strange ladies (on Margy's right) have copied her new hat.



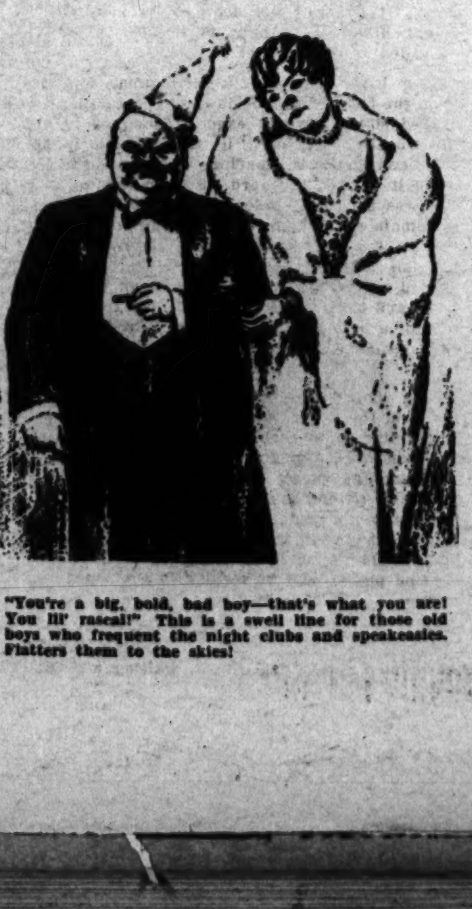
Trade Last—Gracie, who loves flattery, is going to be mad in a minute. She wants a trade last and her best boy is about to tell her he heard so and so say she was remarkably well preserved.



Flattery in the Home—"If you only knew how much better you look in dark clothes!" This is as much as can be expected in the way of flattery, by most ageing married men.



"Really, chauffeur, I wouldn't know that awful photograph in the cab was you! It certainly doesn't flatter you!!" Taxi drivers are just as susceptible to flattery as the rest of us. And how few are the compliments they receive! Most taxi drivers have inferiority complexes, due to their feeling so awfully about those uncomplimentary pictures of themselves framed inside the cab, and so a little flattery now and then is very necessary.



"You're a big, bold, bad boy—that's what you are! You lil' rascal!" This is a swell line for those old boys who frequent the night clubs and speakeasies. Flatters them to the skies!

A RAINY-DAY ADVENTURE

An Episode in the Married Life of Helen and Warren

By Mabel Herbert Urner

Creator of the "Helen and Warren" Characters

RAINING torrents. Coming down in slanting sheets.

From the crowded theater foyer, Helen watched the clamorous rush for taxis.

Better wait here than out under the dripping canopy.

A rending crash! Thunder. Dark as night—yet only half-past five.

The matinee audience still pouring down from the balconies—struggling out to the gleaming line of motors.

Still under the spell of the grim French tragedy, Helen shrank from the crushing, vociferous crowd. A scented Parisian crowd. The heavy perfumes accentuated by the dampness.

Useless to wait here. Too many pushing ahead of her.

That sidewalk cafe on the corner. More chance of hailing a taxi from there.

Holding her program over her hat, she darted down the street. Keeping close to the protecting shops.

Now under the cafe awning. But the rain beat beneath—drenching the pushed-back tables piled with chairs.

Taxis whirling by. Ignoring her frantic signals.

Paris aswarm with taxis. Yet impossible to get one when it rained.

The cafe lights blurred through the misted windows. Inviting glimpses of leather benches, marble tables, glittering glass and mirrors.

Go in and wait? Have an aperitif. Surely this downpour could not last.

No, almost six. Warren would be waiting—he liked to dine early in Paris.

Anxiously scanning the side street.

Down there—a taxi! Before that "Robes et Manteaux" sign.

Perhaps she could bribe the driver. What was double fare" in French?

Another cloudburst. The wind ferocious. A chair clattered to the pavement—blown from a table behind her.

Making a dash for the taxi now.

"Hotel Scribe!" she called to the oilskinned driver, dozing behind his protecting curtains.

Opening the door, she sprang in. He was shouting something back. A demand for extra fare?

"Yes—anything! Oui, oui!" waving him on.

Starting off now. How fortunate!

Passing the still crowd-blocked theater. She might have waited there an hour!

Her pumps soaked. And her suede hat! Bending over to shake out the water.

Then leaning back. Relaxed relief.

Gazing out the streaming window, Helen relived the last act of the play. Weird, gruesome—unforgettable.

Though in French, the vivid action easily followed. The anguish of a remorse-haunted victim. His struggle to retain his sanity.

Lightning! the electric flash illumined the car.

Mauve upholstery. Silver fittings—mirror, clock, vanity! A private car!

What would he charge her? Anything he wished—no meter. But better than waiting in this storm.

Almost there now?

Tearing a leaf from her theater program, she wiped the rain-bleared glass.

A storm-swept street. Small shops. Cafes. More chairs on tables.

Typical of a thousand streets in Paris. They might be anywhere. Impossible to read the names on the lamp posts. posts.

How far had they come? Was he taking her a longer way?

Soon a broader street. Residences. Stately white stone houses. Here and there long-lighted windows—glimpses of rich interiors.

Nothing like this near the Rue Scribe. Where was he going?

Opening the door to call. But a drenching deluge forced it shut.

Growing frightened now. They should have been at the hotel long ago.

What did it mean? Where were they? Where was he taking her?

Again pounding on the glass. But he could not or would not hear.

Paris! Such awful things happened in Paris! And no one knew where she was. He could take her anywhere!

Still obsessed by the play—receptive to sinister fears.

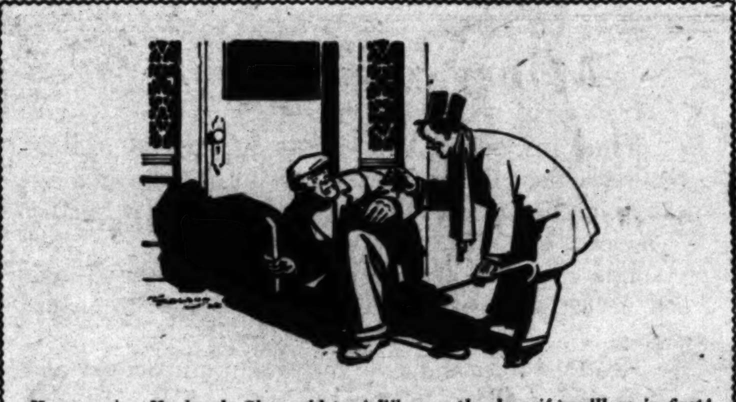
Crowding memories of sensational stories. Strange disappearances. Abductions. Unsolved mysteries. The underworld of Paris!

And Warren! Helpless to trace her. Wondering—

Slowing up? Yes, turning in at the porte-cochere of an imposing residence.

The lighted windows reassuring. No drawn shades. Nothing sinister here.

A flood of light as a butler ran out. Opening the car door for her.



Homecoming Husband: Shay, old top! I'll open the door if you'll go in first!

"No, no—it's a mistake," faltered Helen. "I—I thought this was a taxi—"

His puzzled shrug. Useless to explain to him. Better go in. Surely someone would speak English. She would ask them to phone for a taxi.

The tapestried hall most impressive.

Motioning her to follow, the butler led the way up the marble stairway.

The door at which he knocked opened by a maid. The frilly apron and cap of a French comedy.

And more like a French comedy was the luxurious boudoir into which she was ushered. Brocaded draperies, piles of cushions silk and lace. The air close, perfumed.

Before a silver-cluttered dressing table stood a tall, auburn-haired woman. Her long pink satin corset half laced.

Not troubling to turn, she met Helen's amazed eyes in the mirror.

"Vous n'avez pas apporte ma robe, mademoiselle?" a note of irritation.

"I don't speak French," stammered Helen. "Oh, it's all a mistake. I—"

"Mistake?" whirling about. "My gown—you have not brought it?" in clear, curt English.

"Your gown?" bewildered, shrinking back.

"Certainly—my gown! Madame Yvette promised it is ready at five. Because it rains—I send the motor. Now she has some excuse!" excitedly.

Helen standing awkwardly by the door. Her face aflame.

"Oh, I—it's all an absurd mistake! In the rain I took your car for a taxi. I told him Hotel Scribe—and he brought me here. I couldn't make him understand."

The woman stared—incredulous.

"My limousine—you thought a taxi? That is like an American!" contemptuously. "And you come here—into my boudoir?" snatching a fur-bordered negligee.

Curtly instructing the puzzled maid, with a dismissing shrug the woman turned back to the mirror.

Aquiver with indignation, Helen followed the girl down the stairs.

At the maid's rapid explanation, the butler opened a telephone cabinet concealed in the panelled wall.

Having phoned for her taxi, he motioned Helen to a marble bench.

No, she would wait outside. That haughty, insolent Frenchwoman!

Out under the porte-cochere, the damp air cooled her burning face—but not the flaming turmoil within.

To be taken for an errand girl—or a dressmaker's apprentice! Did she look like that? Even wet and rumpled—her Fifth avenue suit quite as smart as anything she had seen on the streets of Paris.

Her taxi? No, another private car speeding by.

How much longer must she wait? Warren! He would be desperately worried.

No friendly small shops. Only austere, forbiding mansions.

Helplessly she waited. How far to the Metro—the subway? No one to ask. An approaching headlight. Another private car? No, a taxi!

Heedless of the pelting rain she ran out, waving wildly.

"Hotel Scribe! Hotel Scribe!" she called, jumping in.

A dingy, gasoline-scented taxi. But Helen could have hugged the soiled upholstery.

Speeding on now. Soon back on a street of cheerful shops.

Yes, the dome of the Opera looming ahead. Not far now.

The time? Scanning the shop windows for a clock. After seven! Warren would be frantic. She was never later than six.

Almost there. Even in her agitation, trying to smooth her wind-blown hair. Hurried adjusting touches by the cab mirror.

Drawing up before the hotel. Straining to read the dripping meter.

Sixteen francs. Thrusting at the driver a twenty-franc note, Helen flew into the welcoming glow of the lobby.

Not waiting for the lift, she ran up the two flights.

Down the crimson-carpeted hall to their door.

Yielding to a swift impulse, she opened it noiselessly.

The room ablaze with lights. Warren standing at the window—hands in his pockets. His anxious attitude. A glimpse of his side face—grim, grave.

"Kitten!" wheeling about.

"Oh, I thought I'd never get here!" clinging to him.

"Where in blazes you been?"

"I haven't the least idea!" with a hysterical laugh. "In some Frenchwoman's boudoir—and she raved at me for not bringing her gown—"

"Here, what're you tryin' to put over?" shaking her. "Now cut the comedy! I've been waiting here since six o'clock."

Her breathless account of the adventure ended with an indignant,

"And taken for an errand girl! Dear, do I look like that ?"

"Look pretty good to me," he grinned, with rare indulgence.

"Oh, were you really worried? Dear, were you—"

"I was gettin' hungry," squelching her ardor for further admissions. "Butted into a private house, eh? That's like your escapades," reverting to his usual grumpiness. "You've certainly got a gift for gettin' in wrong—always pullin' some bonehead blunder. Now shed those wet togs. Be after eight 'fore we get anything to eat!"

Flappers' Acre --- Port of Call

By Barbara Miller

THE bronzed play boys of the Pacific seem to have solved that most perplexing of human riddles, the manner in which one may exist effortlessly, yet in perfect contentment. Prolonging the perfection of a happy childhood.

In Honolulu, the accepted scheme of things has been neatly reversed. It is the women who are the rovers, the feverish seekers after the improbable, which lies, so surely at the moment, just across the horizon, in the next exotic port. Hawaii is filled with these careless girls, who have drifted down to the Islands from little towns in New England, from farms in the Middle West, from the great cities of the Pacific Coast. Wanderers who will continue their travels in a few months, in a few years, to Japan, to China, to the Philippines, to the Straits Settlements, to Europe.

They have a common creed, a universal aim, to "go on." Strangely enough, "going back" is never discussed.

But the beach boys, hearing restless plans, vivid tales of the quaintness of the Japanese islands, of the gorgeousness of vast inscrutable China, of the casual gay life in the Philippines, smile politely and strum on the inevitable guitars, "Till you come drifting back—"

For it is the Hawaiian creed that every mortal once having tasted of the pungent beauty of the Islands, must return some day. Hence, probably, "Aloha Oe," that beautiful, plaintive yet hopeful farewell with the connotation "Until we meet again."

These beach boys who are, perhaps, the typical Hawaiians of today, have their headquarters at the Moana Hotel, center of the smart beach life of Waikiki. Here they initiate the eager tourists into the mysteries of surfing, when they feel so inclined. But if the waves are particularly fine for this difficult sport, they go out alone on their boards, for the sheer joy of the thing. They teach swimming in the same casual fashion. Through the long, summer days they play on the beach and in the water like children and in the evening they play their guitars, like gods. For Hawaiian music is like none other in all the world.

Eventually, they "leave the beach." But this decisive step is far in the future for most of them and why worry over tomorrow when a golden Hawaiian day and a glamorous Hawaiian night lie ahead?.

Life affords another alluring pastime to the boys of Waikiki. A diversion known, in the vernacular, as kidding the tourists.

One afternoon last winter a palatial around-the-world liner was in port. Waikiki was jammed. Unfortunately, there had been bad weather and, the usually placid water was gray and ill-tempered. So surfing was practically impossible.

But instead of bewailing the destruction of their "business," in the manner of sound and sensible merchants, the boys enjoyed themselves hugely. One tall, lean youth in particular hit upon a beautiful idea.

Armed with a neat little paddle, he was making the world safe for the "touri" by exterminating the stingarees. A purely imaginary danger, of course, but very dramatic as executed. He always contrived to find the obnoxious creatures in terrifying proximity to some fat and timorous old gentleman who had contemplated venturing only a few feet from shore or some lean old lady whose bathing suit was a laughable marvel of modesty in this day of abbreviations.

Among the hundreds on the beach, delighted spectators, only the few victims suffered, so, by the law of the greatest good for the greatest number, the stingaree crusader must have been justified.

Finally, weary of his mirth-provoking pantomime, carried on with the utmost gravity and courtesy, Joe returned to his fellows, sprawled comfortably on the sand. Someone suggested music, a guitar appeared, another, and soon the visitors began edging closer, closer to the careless group of boys—fearful of missing a single note of that haunting, sorrowful music.

After a year, they are still there, the same boys, Joe, the Kahanomokus—serious, kindly David, whose lomi-lomi treatments (the almost forgotten Hawaiian massage) have been a boon to innumerable invalids; Sam of the golden voice, "Little Bill" and Sergeant, who apparently will follow his illustrious brother, Duke, as the swimming champion—Frank, George and the others.

But of the girls, not one is left after a year. Jerry, quizzical, industrious, is in Paris; Betty is in Manila, Helen in Shanghai, Lucy in Tokio. Reporters, stenographers business women—all moving on—eternally.

Last year, in Betty's bungalow in Flappers' Acre, that group of bungalows along Kalai Road, favorite rendezvous of the girl drifters, the warm, fragrant air—scented with tropic perfume, with a hint of the sea—just stirred the vivid cretonne curtains at the French windows, played gently with the smoke of cigarettes. Helen told of a recent stay in Manila, some one else spoke casually of her plans for a year in Peking.

Strangely enough, the talk was never of home. The boats stopping at the Islands sail only one way—for the girls in Flappers' Acre.

But to the Hawaiian beach boys, Hawaii is the ultimate—home. Thoroughly accustomed to its beauty, to its ideal climate, they are nevertheless keenly awake to the loveliness of each flaming, tropic sunset, seen perhaps, tle lights twinkle through the heavy dusk, from a surf board off Waikiki, as the lit- from the glistening Moana to Squattersville, picturesque last stand of the island people; well aware of the breathless perfection of each moonlit night, when the waves are silvery music.

They travel, these boys, who are proud possessors of suitcases so covered with labels from all parts of the globe as to disconcert the most confirmed collector of that sort of cosmopolitan atmosphere. They travel, but they always come back home to Hawaii.

But the girls, so sure, so eager to go further, have dropped that word out of their vocabularies. Home has become where the job of the moment is, the spot where they happen to be stopping until another boat bears them away toward unexplored lands.

The Impractical Sex

By
James J. Montague

THERE was a difference of opinion about the location of the garage. There shouldn't have been, of course. Women cannot content themselves merely with being impractical. They insist on carrying out impractical ideas, and too often they have their way. No argument you can make to them can alter their opinions. And in the end it is usually easier to surrender.

In this instance I was determined not to surrender, and I didn't. Instead of being located in the cellar, to increase the fire menace and fill the house with gasoline fumes, the garage was built at the bottom of the hill in the back yard, 200 feet from the street. Men have an instinctive understanding of matters of this kind, due to the fact that they have always been the builders and the pioneers. It was admitted by the opposition when the structure was in place that it was highly ornamental, at the end of a sloping lane bordered with willows and lilacs. I suffered the door to be painted bright blue. Something must always be conceded as the price of victory.

Two long streaks of cement were laid from the front of the lot down to the garage, spaced so they would exactly acommodate the wheels of the car. It required a little practice to teach the machine to follow them when it entered the yard. Still more practice was necessary before it could be made to remain upon them when backing out—up hill. A few bordering shrubs suffered during this practice, and some sward was rubbed off the lawn. But soon I caught the trick, and could go in and out on the trajectory of a bullet. When I had acquired this skill, I could not refrain from boasting a little.

How fine it was to have the car stabled far from the house, where none of the reek of gasoline could permeate the living room, and where repairs could be made without shocking any guests who might not be accustomed to emphasis in language. Then there was my pride in the acquirement of perfect mastery of the art of steering. How that would assist in backing into narrow parking places, and in keeping in the exact middle of the ribbon-like roads in the country round about.

But despite of all I said the opposition maintained a skeptical and a waiting attitude, insisting that time would tell which was right. This irritated me, although it caused me no uneasiness. The summer and autumn sped, and no accidents happened.

Two weeks ago we had a soft rain. We had a dinner engagement at a house five miles away. I had allowed twenty minutes, more than ample time to get there.

For some reason, which I still do not understand, the back wheels swerved slightly as I backed off the garage apron, and one of them began flipping up mud on one side of the cement path. I put on more power, but the wheel merely continued to spin more rapidly, and more mud rainbowed into the air.

I got out and examined the situation. All that seemed to be necessary was to put something under the wheel which would enable it to bite. I found an old carpet and put that under. Then I started the motor again, putting on plenty of acceleration. The wheel spun merrily around for a few minutes, and then locked. I got out and made an inspection. The carpet was wrapped tightly around the axle.

It took me fifteen minutes to cut it free. Then I decided to do what I should have done in the first place, which was to jack up the wheel and put a board under it. I got out the jack, scooped out a place below the wheel and inserted it. Then I began to wind it up. I wound it up to its full height. But the car remained in the same position. I was merely winding the jack down into the soft mud.

We got to the dinner half an hour late, having come in a taxi. A garage man got the car out the next day. The opposition made no comment till she was seated at the table of our hosts. Then she said, apropos of nothing whatever; "I notice that you have your garage in your cellar. It must be wonderfully convenient."

I said nothing on the ride home. There are times when silence is the most effective way to preserve the entente cordiale which should always exist between man and wife. The streets were slippery with mud when on the following night we were driving home from the movies. I had some difficulty in getting up and down hills. But by throwing the machine into first speed I found we could ascend acclivities sidewise, and go down the other side in a sort of zigzag, which must have led bystanders to believe that we had run out of gas and had fueled up at a blind pig.

We arrived home without accident. The opposition got out at the top of the hill, and I threw the car into first and began cautiously to make the descent to the garage. The slope was about fifteen degrees. In the light of the arc street lamp behind me I could see the twin cement paths shining like mirriors.

With the engine in first, and slowed down, I put my hand on the emergency brake lever, and set out on my journey. All went well for twenty feet or more. Then the car began to go down the slope. It began a little too expeditiously, I thought. We were at home, and there was no hurry.

I set the brake, and tried to throw the gears into reverse, succeeding after the third effort. Still we gained momentum. The wheels were spinning backward. The speedometer indicator moved up to thirty-five miles an hour. I caught a glimpse of it just before I noticed that we were in front of the garage doors, and that they were closed.

But the fact that they were closed was of no matter. We made a hole in them just large enough to admit the car, with a great crash and splintering of pine. We made a hole a little larger in the rear wall of the structure, carrying away five two-by-four studdings in order to do so. We were out in the back yard behind the garage when we stopped. I don't know how it happened that I was uninjured. But I was, except that it took me some moments to get the breath back into my lungs.

There has been lately a new movement on the part of the opposition to have a garage built under the house. But there is no sense in it. One oughtn't to get panicky over a slight accident which may never happen again, especially when she has a bran-new car to drive around in.

Good Short Stories from Everywhere

COMPILED FOR THE TIMES SUNDAY MAGAZINE

Oh Suds

Bill: What is Bob so pleased about?

Harold: He's got an idea for an invention that will make him a millionaire."

Bill: Well, what is the big idea?

Harold: A cake of flying soap for shower baths.

Gentle Hint

Slowly he drew away from her. His arms dropped to his side. Suddenly his hands fixed themselves into a death clutch on the divan. She looked at him in surprise. Such a sudden change. He shook all over (the divan.) His eyes bulged. His breath came in gasps. His scalp moved as though trying to crawl under his collar. His color faded and then came back. He shuddered. Slowly he relaxed, a peaceful expression on his face. He was silent for a moment. Then he arose, once more a man. She looked at him wondering, for she had never seen a man act thus before.

"At last," he cried. "I have succeeded in yawning with my mouth closed."

Question of Notes

"Irving Berlin in his young days," said a New York music publisher, "was careful about money matters. That's how it is that he's a millionaire today—the first millionaire song writer the world has eyer seen.

"A famous comedian—he wasn't famous then—once wired Berlin from Chicago:

"'Please send new song. If good will send check.'

"Berlin knew the state of the comedian's finances, and he wired back:

"'Please send check. If good will send new song.'"

Couldn't Be Fooled

"Children are inclined to take things very literally," remarked Anne Wheeler, the settlement worker. "Take for instance the case of little Billy. His father had brought home a big box of candy but the child had been told by his mother that he must never eat candy without her permission.

"When a guest tried to make the little fellow take some he said, 'Me must ask my muddie,' and started off for where she was, over half a mile away.

"'But,' said the guest, 'why not ask your father? He's right out here on the porch.'

"To which Billy replied with indignation:

"'Don't you know me faddie isn't me muddie?'"

Twist of Fate

During the recent medical convention here, Dr. Barlow remarked: "A little more common sense applied to every-day life would save a great many doctors' bills. Too many people are like the young man who went to an oculist with his eyes in terrible condition.

"'I don't understand,' said the oculist, 'how you could have gotten your eyes into such a condition. Surely your work does not tax them to this extent.'

"No.' admitted the young man,' they got this way while I was reading a big, fine-printed book on 'Care and Treatment of the Eyes.'"

His Recipe

They had one of those dual divorce cases recently, where both parties are eager to secure the divorce and for no very good reasons except that they didn't seem to get along very well. The woman seemed to be rather catty and did not make nearly as good an impression as her husband, who finally remarked:

"It's this way, your honor. I like women all right, and especially my wife, but like toast and coffee, I'll be darned if I like 'em cold."

His Finish

Walter Stern, business manager of Universal City, is teaching the rudiments of business and finance to his daughter Barbara. The other day he sent her to the store for some beef, but to his surprise, she came back empty-handed.

"You don't mean to say the butcher had no beef?" demanded Walter curiously.

"I didn't ask him," said Barbara. "You see, just when I went in the door he sold an ox-tail to some man and I knew that was the last of the animal."

Receivership

"And what are ye doin' there, Sandy?" asked Timothy Burns.

"Getting ready fer Christmas," replied Sandy McPherson.

"But what fer be ye needin' the basket?" continued Timothy.

"For my presents, indeed," answered Sandy.

And as Timothy formed his next question, Sandy nailed his sock up, cut a large hole in it, and placed the basket under the sock.

Nothing Extraordinary

Nurse was bringing little Betty home from a party and took her hand to help her over a high curbstone. "My goodness, how sticky your hands are?" she exclaimed in surprise.

"So would yours be," retorted Betty, "if you had some molasses candy and two chocolate eclairs in your muff!"

Camouflage

"The aftermath of the war finds France making a pitiful bluff," remarked Senator Borah. "And it doesn't fool anybody. Indeed, it reminds me of the little Hebrew who was always the last to leave the theater.

"'But why are you always the last one out of the theater, Abie?' asked a curious friend.

"'Don't you get it, don't you get it?' queried Abie in surprise. 'W'en I come out last, everyone thinks I had a front seat.'"

Supreme Crime

Janet, a five-year-old resident of Boston, ran to her father one morning exclaiming; "Father, brother Harold swore!"

"Swore, did he?" inquired the parent grimly. "What did he say?"

"He said 'ain't,'" responded Janet solemnly.

Regular Caller

Some of the Hollywood High boys were invited over to a branch frat the other day and were finally asked to stay to lunch.

"No, thank you," spoke up one of the boys hurriedly, "I'm too hungry."

Guessed Wrong

The topic of the Garvanza school one day was "Preparing for the Future," and the little ones were duly impressed with the fact that advance work of any kind was a very desirable practice. All but little Johnny.

"My father an' mother," he declared, "say you never can tell how things are gonna turn out an' there's no use trying to plan ahead. Why, only last week, when the baby came, they found they had to change her name from Mary to James."

Out of Luck

Old Mose Parker was pretty sick and the darkey doctor promptly put him to bed and laid down all sorts of rules and regulations as to sleep and diet. After he had gone, Mose turned to his wife and complained:

"Mandy, how does dat dar fool doctah reckon Ah's gwine eat breast ob chicken ebry day if Ah hain't got mah ebenin's free to go out an' git de chicken!"

Old Reliable

The salesman, passing through the back country of Georgia for the first time, was trying to demonstrate the merits of a new brand of lye. The old storekeeper listened politely and when the booster began to weaken he remarked:

"All them things you say about this new kind of lye may be true but we have so many other brands of lies around here I don't think I'll try any."

Never Fails

"I had no idea," said Lizette Nies to a friend, "that profanity was so rife until I drove a car."

"Do you hear much of it on the streets?" asked her friend.

"Yes. Nearly every time I bump into some one he swears shockingly."

Didn't Work

Fred Newhouse, senior at Stanford University, was having a chemistry examination. One of the questions propounded was, "Give in detail the process for making mercuric bichloride."

In answer to this question, Fred wisely, so he thought, wrote; "God made all things, even mercuric bichloride."

Imagine his chagrin when he received his corrected exam book and read, "God gets the credit. You don't."

Disturbing the Peace

George Zain, who conducted the recent advertising contest in The Times, travels continuously from one end of the country to the other and he and his wife often prefer a quiet apartment to a hotel. But it is not always easy to get an apartment. We have fussy landlords still with us.

"Well," said the manager of an apartment house to Mrs. Zain one day, "you say you have no children, phonograph, radio or dog. You seem to be just the sort of tenant the owner insists on."

Neva smiled grimly. "I don't want to hide anything from you," she said sarcastically, "but you might tell the owner that my husband's fountain pen sometimes squeaks a little."

Earned His Fee

"Well, Mrs. Johnsing," announced the colored physician, after taking her husband's temperature, "Ah has knocked de fever outen him. Dat's one good thing."

"Sho nuff," was the excited reply. "Does dat mean dat he's gwine to git well den?"

"No," replied the doctor, "dey's no hopes fo' him; but you has de satisfaction ob knowin' dat he died cured."

HOW THEY MET THEMSELVES

SHE had said, "I'll be in the Museum Library—eleven forty-five," and there she was. Third table from the door on the left, a pile of folios before her, her head bent over an open page, one fine slim hand thrust up into her bright, cropped hair, dogged concentration in every line of her.

Michael walked over to where 'Toinette sat.

'Toinette had been watching him from under her lashes. She had been aware of him the instant he entered that door.

"What's this?" whispered Michael.

"Sh-h!" said 'Toinette softly.

She showed the page she had been reading—two-thirds of it given over to a picture, dim and dark, plainly inadequate in reproduction.

"Rossetti—" whispered 'Toinette. "Stuff for my Great Lovers story. Take a good look and let's go. Tell you about it later. Had a time finding it."

Michael took a good look. Her muted voice said: "Wie Sie Sich Begegnet—"

"How they Met 'Emselves—h'm'm?" muttered Michael.

A dark wood and a deep one—that was the picture. Coming through the wood, a knight and a lady in queer medieval finery. The lady's head-dress was heavy, above a face like a pearl, sweet eyes, sweet mouth. But what made the thing startling lay in the fact that, facing the knight and the lady, alike in every fold of head-dress and sleeve, alike in every contour, every feature—came through the wood to meet them—themselves. Edged with unearthly light. Shining with inhuman radiance. In the moment of that meeting, the living woman, both hands outstretched in terrified entreaty, sank back against her lover's arm, and the lover, staring into his own wraith's face, stood frozen before a gaze of immutable doom.

"It turns me cold!" sighed 'Toinette.

"That's because you're so imaginative."

"Can't help it—it's got me."

"Snap out of it!"

"Suppose—it were us!"

"It's not. We're as healthy as hedgehogs."

"That's nothing to do with Fate."

"'Toinette—shut the thing up—and come along with me."

Outside the great, dark building the sun washed earth and sky and air in gold. Summer mellowing, not yet searing the surrendered world. Trees yet fresh with the efflorescence of May, silvered ever so faintly with the dust of approaching August. From the Museum they walked to the Park.

Overhead, laced branches, jade against a cerulean sky; to one side, a flush of rhododendron—to the other, syringa in bloom.

"Nice world!" murmured 'Toinette.

"All in the eye of the beholder," said Michael.

They arrived at a stone wall on the edge of a lagoon, mercifully, for the moment not too densely populated.

"Now," he told her, "get it off your chest about the Rossetti. How'd you happen to find it?"

"When I told you—I was after stuff for my Great Lovers story—you know. I've got Abelard and Heloise—Antony and Cleopatra—Nelson and Lady Hamilton—Chopin and George Sand. I was looking up Rossetti—he and Elizabeth Siddalls were married. She was a milliner's assistant," said 'Toinette. "I want to tell it to you, Michael."

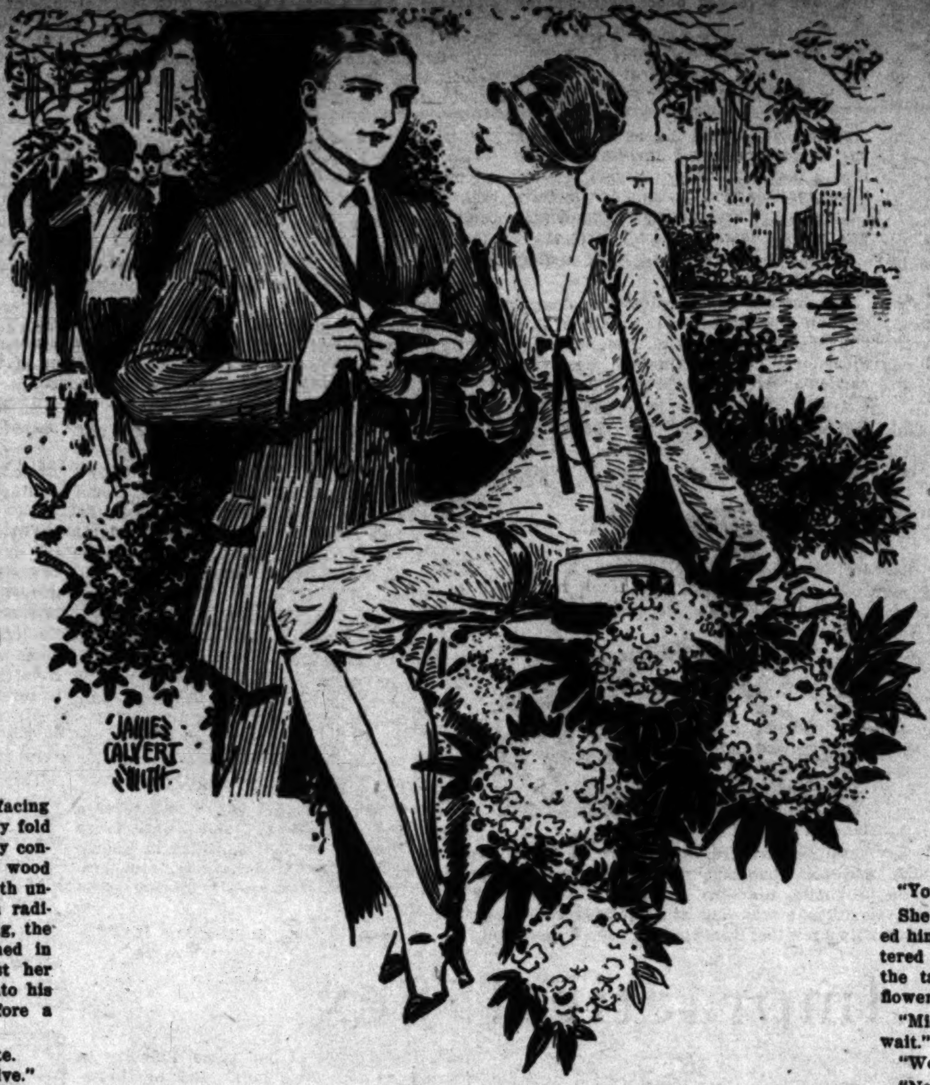
"At your feet, darling!" said Michael, and 'Toinette went on.

"Some artist found her—in the milliner's shop—and asked her to pose for him. She was so very beautiful. Then Rossetti met her—after that, she posed for him always—until she died. D'you see—she embodied his dream. Through her he could get his soul onto canvas. That's she—in the picture. He did it on their honeymoon. And she did die—only a year or so after."

"It's in the picture—" said Michael, "isn't it?" And whistled softly.

"Yes, it is!" said 'Toinette. "Something he felt and she felt—how slight a hold they had on life—and on their happiness. That's why, when I found it, it upset me, rather."

"Why should it?"



Michael put a hand in an inner pocket. I've got the license," he said significantly.

By Fannie Heaslip Lea

"When one loves," said 'Toinette, "one's vulnerable."

"But I'm not an artist—I'm a struggling lawyer. You're not a milliner's assistant—you're the hope of the Sunday magazine section."

"Still, there's you," said 'Toinette, "and there's me. And life's so ruthless. To the individual. Trying to hold on to happiness is like trying to swim the rapids with a crystal bowl in your arms."

"Not so bad as all that?" said Michael.

"I think so," said 'Toinette.

"Would it—spoil the pretty world for you—if—something washed me out?"

She told him, scratching with a twig on the rough stone of the wall:

"There'd be no answer—to existence . . . . I could go on with it—but—it'd be a fool's game . . . Michael—isn't it so? If I stepped in front of a taxicab tomorrow—?"

Michael said grimly, "I'd step in front of the ambulance."

"No, you wouldn't—you'd step after it—much worse."

She finished slowly: "That's why the picture got to me. I saw—death—which couldn't be—alleviated—nor yet argued with—breaking us up—perhaps tomorrow. Who knows?"

Michael put a hand in an inner pocket. "I've got the license," he said significantly.

"Have you it—with you?" asked 'Toinette.

"Always carry it with me—didn't you know that?"

"Remember the day we got it?" sighed 'Toinette.

"My memory's good for a week," said Michael. "We could have been married by now—we ought to be married. There's no sense waiting."

She said: "I wanted to wait—till I had my vacation. You know I can't get it before August."

"Don't you think marriage'll be vacation enough?"

"I wanted us to get away somewhere—into the country—together."

"We could come sit in the Park."

"With only ten thousand others."

He began to laugh, his audacious eyes burning into 'Toinette's misty ones. She slid a hand into his.

"Michael—I'm not fooling. People do die . . . . Things do happen. How do we know—any more than those two in the wood—that we mayn't be walking toward the end—today? I can't bear the thought. Don't laugh!"

"I'm not laughing," said Michael. "Old dear—I'm not laughing! Only thing I say, is—why hold out for setting and backdrop when, after all, we've got the cast assembled? Got the script in our pockets. Isn't the play the thing—Or does the success of our act depend upon the scenery?" He added abruptly, "What's the matter with this afternoon?"

"You mean—" said 'Toinette slowly.

"Yeah—we've got the license here. It wouldn't take us an hour."

'Toinette admitted, her smile tremulous: "Of course, it isn't the length of time it takes that makes the marriage ceremony dangerous."

"I mean it," said Michael doggedly. "It's Saturday. Monday's Decoration Day. We'd have two days off together, anyhow. Why not? Who's to stop us?"

"No one—if we don't stop ourselves."

"All right—let's go!"

"Where'd we go to?"

"Stay at my apartment."

"We might as well stay at mine. We both love it."

"Either way, 'Toinette. Keep either one—we could manage. You're going to do it! Darling—you're slipping!"

"Wait—" said 'Toinette breathlessly—"if I do—it won't make any difference—about my work. That's understood? I go back to the office Tuesday morning—just the same?"

"If you want to—why not? For the time being, anyhow. We can see how it works out."

"Michael—it's fifty-fifty, or not at all! I've told you that before. I pay my bills, and you pay yours. We can have so much more, that way. I don't want money—ever—between me and you."

"Have it your own way," said Michael.

"Partners?" asked 'Toinette shakily.

They shook hands on it.

"But you'll let me buy you a wedding-ring?"

"Yes, Michael."

"Le jour de gloire est arrive!" said Michael solemnly. "Where's the nearest jeweler's?"

"Wait—wait—wait!" implored 'Toinette. "Let me go to the apartment and change. I will not be married in this hat."

"How long'll it take you to shift—if I let you?"

"Not fifteen minutes. Michael—I've got a duck of a green crepe—and a hat with roses—you've never seen 'em—just the thing for—a wedding!"

They caught a taxi and rattled away to the windy, brownstone canyon where 'Toinette had her abode.

"Fifteen minutes, now," wavered Michael.

"You can wait in the sitting-room."

She turned her key in the door, motioned him in. Across the room a cool light filtered from western windows. Flowers on the table in a wide, black jar—Michael's flowers—delphiniums and peonies.

"Michael—I was so sure we ought to wait."

"Were you?"

"Now, all I can think of is, what if we lost each other, waiting?"

"We're not going to lose each other."

"People have died before this."

"And worms have eaten them—"

"Hush!"

"That's not me—that's Shakespeare—" aggrievedly.

For all his mocking, he kissed her as if he might never kiss her again.

She drew away from him, whispering tensely:

"Michael—what was that? I heard some one—in the bedroom."

"A maid—" said Michael.

"I don't think so," said 'Toinette. "Wait—let me see!"

"Let me—" said Michael quickly.

"Don't be absurd!" said 'Toinette.

She crossed the floor swiftly.

He saw her stop on the threshold—heard her gasp of amazement.

"Well, Eva Danford—Eva!"

Then, from the shadowy beyond, a sob, ending in a smothered cry.

"Tony!"

"Back presently," said 'Toinette to Michael, as she went into the bedroom, and closed the door.

Michael sat down in the chair by the tea-table and lit a cigarette.

They might, he reflected, when he could steady his thoughts into any sort of coherence—if 'Toinette hadn't insisted upon coming back to change her clothes—they might, by now, be standing before a minister.

However, 'Toinette had insisted—and there they were. Aground—before they'd even shoved off.

Eva Danford was the girl who had shared the apartment with 'Toinette before he met her. By the time Michael and 'Toinette came together, Eva had married and gone away.

Michael was tempted, having finished one cigarette, to knock on the door and call 'Toinette back—demand to know what was the matter—do something about it, if possible; if not, get away from here.

He was just on his feet when 'Toinette opened the door.

"Oh, Michael," she said, "I am so sorry, I didn't mean to leave you so long. Eva Dan-fore we subtracted a sergeant and two men from our force and posted them in a hut on the outskirts of the village, with certain orders. Then we rigged up a litter for Awudu, packed him on it, and presently arrived in camp. By midday the wounded man was looking much healthier—said he was feeling fine. A stout fellow, Orderly Awudu Ramanu!

The lieutenant and I had a meal; and then I settled down to my afternoon's work.

At three o'clock the aged chief of Mada crept in on all fours, with a lot of dust on his head. He told how Master Bakhai, the rejected of Babban Kurmi, had arrived in his village with a dozen other men a week ago, and had lain "doggo" there. They had promised to be good and loyal townsmen, but they threatened to kill the old man and all his family if he said aught to me of their presence.

Bakhai and Co. had further assured the chief that I should be clearing out of the district any day now, and that they would be very useful to him after I had gone. When the days passed and I did not go, however, and there was never any word of my going, while I was forever demanding news of Bakhai, and announcing that I shouldn't leave without him, the gang grew first impatient and then nervous.

Finally that morning they had fixed up the ambush, which the chief only learned about a few moments before we walked into it. I listened to his story, and then sent him outside to sit down with the guard.

That and other business kept me busy till sunset, when I stopped improvising on my typewriter, removed myself from the grass shack that was my office, and sought the outer air. The rhurki chair stood invitingly in the shade; beside it a box, and on the box my tea. While teaing I gave hearing to a dispute concerning a farm boundary.

The proceedings droned on. I, following the example of greater judges elsewhere, closed my eyes, opening them now and again. To one of these occasions I was prompted by a sudden silence, broken by a throat-clearing noise—the sort of noise that a non-commissioned officer makes when he desires your attention.

There stood Sergeant Isa Bauchi, with his two men. One of them carried a bow, with a little bag tied on one end of it.

"Halt!" and "Left turn!" barked the sergeant. Then he slapped the butt of his rifle, wriggled his legs, came to rest.

I looked—looked long. Then: "Excellent!" I said with great warmth and heartiness, and waved them dismissal. Sergeant Isa Bauchi slapped his rifle stock once more, turned smartly about, barked, and moved off with his party.

[illegible] fell, the supplicants faded away, and to me entered the lieutenant, attended by his orderly and retainers carrying long hammock chair, Sparklet bottle, whisky, cigarettes.

"You saw Sergeant Isa Bauchi?" asked the young officer.

"I did," said I.

"Five cartridges expended, four thumbs in the little bag. The beggars came back in a bunch to do a gloat about four hours after we left—a round dozen of 'em, all armed to the teeth, chirruping away, no end pleased with themselves."

During the days that followed all that district was very thoroughly combed out. We sought to convince the local savages that the leader of the ambushers ought to be caught, must be caught, and handed over. We satisfied them that everybody was going to be—and to stay—utterly uncomfortable until he was caught.

They tried all the usual dodges. An old fellow, all but blind, hovering on the verge of death from senile decay, was produced, securely roped, and the men who brought him were for persuading us that this was the desperate Bakhai! The ancient was untied and dismissed with kind words and a present of tobacco after a square meal and a good night's rest.

Then a young lad was brought—he looked about twelve years old—and tearfully insisted that he was Bakhai. Him we sent away home to his mother with a present of salt.

I remarked to my friend the lieutenant that the leaven was working and that I expected to see the "bad man" very soon now.

And it was so. One morning, when I tumbled out of my mosquito-netted camp-bed to look at the dawn, I discovered a score of grave and silent gentlemen sitting waiting by the all-but-dead camp-fire. They were unarmed, and they wore no gyves. Rising, they stood silent. I gave them good-day, and one said: "we have come with Bakhai."

A tall, lean, broad-shouldered fellow looked hard at me, straight in the eyes. "I'm the man you want," he said. "With my people I sat for you. It was my arrow that hit your man."

The soldiers came with handcuffs and leg-irons, and Bakhai entered into durance.

That, for the time being, ended our business in the district. The escort and I moved out of it, and after a few days' marching we parted company, they going to rejoin their unit, while I, with Bakhai under a strong guard, made for Provincial Headquarters. The man had to stand his trial, of course, and I didn't want to be the judge, preferring that another—if possible my Chief—should take the case.

So we came to a morning when, three marches only from our destination, I was taking early morning tea in a rest camp. It was bright and clear, the sun just up, the air cool, and all was peace. Tea, in pyjamas, can be quite pleasant in such conditions. As I started on my second cup there arrived at the double a soldier who said that prisoner Bakhai had stuck a knife into himself. So off I toddled to the guard hut. There I found Bakhai, naked, lying on the ground, apparently unconscious, with several holes in his stomach.

The corporal and men of the guard came running up. Seeing their prisoner ironed and reckoning him safe, they had gone a hundred yards away to wash in a brook, leaving their gear behind them. Prisoner had crawled along the ground and secured a bayonet, which he had stuck into himself again and again until he fainted. And there he was, and that was that.

I hurried off, got my bath sponge and Steward Musa, some perchloride of mercury and a wash-basin of water, and set about cleaning the wounds. Presently Bakhai came to, realized with annoyance that he wasn't dead after all, and proceeded to tear the wounds with his fingers. I detailed men to sit on his arms and legs.

I tidied up the wounds as best I could and sewed the edges together. It was a dreadful job, but at last I had it finished.

We knocked up a stretcher, tied the prisoner-patient down on to it, wrapped him in my blankets, got carriers, told off a man to hold my sun umbrella over the passenger's face, and sent the outfit on its thirty-mile walk to the doctor, with two unbridged rivers to cross on the way.

Natives are—well, natives. They have their little failings, but sometimes they are wonderful. Those people got that wretched fellow to the doctor in ten hours. They went literally through the rivers, bearing the stretcher at arm's length above their heads, so that at times from the bank all you could see were a lot of hands and the stretcher; the carriers, to their upheld wrists, were submerged out of sight under water. Wonderful!

The doctor, using his arts, made Bakhai lie quiet in hospital—a small shed with half-a-dozen rough bamboo couch-beds for equipment. On one of them my orderly, he of the poisoned arrow-wounded leg, was slowly getting well. There was a guard on Bakhai all the time, of course. Thanks to Dr. Morrison's magic, the pair recovered and were in due course discharged.

The man who emerged from hospital, however, was not at all the stout fellow who had come in at dawn to give himself up. Bakhai came out a poor thing indeed—bent almost double, so to go for the rest of his days; thin, haggard, prematurely aged; a grim, gloomy shadow only of the swift, supple, stalwart savage of a few weeks before.

We were in a very beautifully situated rest camp. On a little abrupt rise that looked across a wooded plain to the hills it stood, tree shaded, fanned by whatever breeze there was.

Late in the afternoon I quitted work and strolled over to the guard hut, Awudu Ramanu attending me. Sitting outside, gazing wistfully into the sunset in the hills, sat Bakhai, a sad and broken man. About him the guard were busy cleaning their kit, preparing the evening meal, putting out their sleeping-mats, smoking, laughing, chattering. All except the sentry with fixed bayonet, very close to Bakhai, very official.

I spoke to the prisoner and offered him a cigarette. Very civilly he returned my greeting, but declined the smoke. I have never seen such wretchedness in a man's eyes. To the corporal I said: "Get those irons off. This is a very sick man."

The corporal suggested that Bakhai might try to run; I replied that a man so damaged could not run. The irons came off. I stood between Bakhai and the guard, chatting with the men about little wars and small scufflings in which we had shared. The light was failing fast. Presently I gave Bakhai a thrust with my foot, and talked on.

Then came a sudden shout—"He's gone!" I snatched the sentry's rifle. "Let me shoot," I said. And I put a bullet or two well over the fugitive's head, just to inspire him to speed.

The corporal was for pursuit. "Rather!" I told him. "Take three men with you. Better leave the rifles here. You can take him with your hands; the rifles will only hamper you hurrying through the bush."

I thought it unlikely that any corporal on earth would find Bakhai in that bush in the dark, Bakhai with a good start, and not wishing to be found. And so it befell. The search party returned next morning empty-handed.

I thought, and still think, that it was better so. Bakhai in jail would have died within six months. Bakhai free, knowing that he owed his freedom to me—Bakhai a complete "crock," forever harmless—was a far better advertisment and warning to his fellows than a forgotten Bakhai dead in a distant prison.

...ford's here. She's in an awful jam. I want her to talk to you."

"What's the matter with her?"

"Wait—I'll make her come out. We can talk better here," said 'Toinette.

Michael made a protesting sound, disregarded or unheard. What was Eva to him, or he to Eva? He hated women who blubbered aloud. He hated melodrama of any sort. One adorable thing about 'Toinette, she could be trusted to carry off tragedy itself with a laugh. Scenes made Michael wince in the marrow of his bones. He felt that Eva was good for a scene in the primary colors.

"Eva, this is Michael," said 'Toinette. "Michael Timberlake. I'm going to marry him—sometime—" she dared to flicker an eyelid at Michael, as she said it. "Tell him what you've just been telling me, and get his slant on it."

The girl called Eva sat down, and 'Toinette sat on the arm of her chair, her own arm across the back.

Beside 'Toinette's clear radiance, Eva looked smudged and soft, like a misused pastel. She had, of course, been crying, and here eyes were puffed and red, but at that Michael reflected, her mouth was weak.

"Michael," said 'Toinette. "Eva has left her husband."

"She would!" was Michael's first thought, but he repressed it. He said nothing at all, trying to look sympathetic and feeling he looked a fool.

Eva gulped and said nothing, too. She leaned obviously upon 'Toinette.

"You see," said 'Toinette slowly, "there's somebody else—another woman. Eva's been afraid of it for a long time, but yesterday she happened to get hold of some letters and things—didn't you, Eva?"

"Bills," said Eva.

"And she feels," said 'Toinette, "that all in all, it's too much . . ."

"Close to three hundred—no less!" said Eva—with succinct venom.

"Pretty thick!" observed Michael guardedly.

"I ask you!" said Eva. She straightened under the least hint of masculine sympathy like a rose that has had its stem clipped and is set into water.

"He's a lawyer, you know, Eva," said 'Toinette. "Why don't you tell him the whole thing? It doesn't commit you, and you need an impersonal viewpoint."

Eva's readiness to tell the whole thing repelled Michael vaguely. The sight of 'Toinette's hand on Eva's drew him on.

"How long have you been married?" he asked.

"Not three years," said Eva. "Three years ago next month—wasn't it, Tony?" (Yes—she called 'Toinette "Tony!" Michael's aversion received fresh fuel. And she clung to 'Toinette, as if with a just claim.) "Just a little while—that's what makes it so rotten of him. There's nothing I haven't done—no sarcifice I haven't made for him. Why, when we were married, I was doing awfully well. I was secretary to a man in wholesale groceries—a big man. I had all sorts of future. And I chucked the whole thing to marry Ed and go be a book-keeper in a one-horse shop in a one-horse town"

"You wanted to go, old dear," 'Toinette reminded her quietly.

"Sure I wanted to go," said Eva "There's one born every minute! I was happy enough, before this thing broke. You were out last year, Tony. You know what a cute little place we had. I had an old woman who did all the work."

"What business is your husband in?" asked Michael.

"Ed? He's an engineer and contractor."

"I thought he was rather decent," 'Toinette put in. "I rather liked him, Eva," she added, looking at Michael out of frank, grave eyes—"a boyish sort of person. Might be easily influenced."

Michael began to be conscious of a stubborn leaning toward the unknown Ed—a tendency to make excuses for him.

"You see," said Eva throatily, "Ed had built a house—a Dutch Colonial cottage for her and her husband, just before her husband died."

"Oh—a widow!" commented Michael.

"A young one," said 'Toinette quickly. "I remember her, Eva. Rather pretty, isn't she? Clinging ways. Her husband was much older, Michael You could see they had nothing in common."

Eva thrust in—it was, after all, her story: "You see, working on the house, consulting her about everything, consulting her—I guess—about a lot more than was necessary—Ed—" the blurred face contorted wretchedly—"Ed fell for her. That's all there is to it! And then the old man, when he died left her flat, pretty nearly. She wanted a lot of things. So Ed comes through with 'em. One thing and another. From time to time. Maybe he began with—you know—the usual stuff, flowers and candy. But he got round before long to books and—and a phonograph. One of these new ones—you don't get 'em for nothing."

"Are you sure of all this?" asked Michael.

"Gosh!" cried Eva loudly. "I've been sure for months. Then last night didn't I show him the bills—and did he deny it? He couldn't. Roses one time, gardenias another. Once, orchids—orchids, mind you! And that was the very month I paid the butcher's bill myself, because it came in larger than usual, and I thought I'd rather pay it than talk about it."

"Eva!" said 'Toinette.

"Yes, I did," said Eva mordantly, "and it wasn't the first time, at that. Many's the bill I paid he never even saw. I'm not kicking on that. I was working. I made pretty nearly as much as he did—some months. I expected, when I married him, to stand my share of the check. But I didn't expect him to spend the money I saved him making presents to another woman. I'm human!"

Certainly, at the moment, Michael reflected, she was far from divine. He said:

"You say you showed him the bills? How did you happen to have them? Did they come to you?"

"Well, not exactly!" said Eva. "Even Ed wouldn't have nerve enough for that. They were all in one envelope—self-addressed—in the pocket of a coat I was sending to the cleaner's. The poor fish! Keeping 'em that way!"

"And you opened it?" asked Michael

'Toinette said, "Eva—you didn't!"

"Why not?" said Eva savagely. "Good thing for me I did. Then I showed 'em to him—last night. He knew I never had any of the stuff that was on 'em."

"What did he say?" suggested Michael.

"What does any man say in a tight place?" The sneer was oddly pitiful on that [illegible]stung mouth. "First, he lied—then he tried to brazen it out. Said he was sorry for her. Said she hadn't much—and she loved pretty things. Ha!" said Eva. "Of course, I didn't!" Of course, I liked buying my own strings of pearls."

"You did buy your own?" Michael suggested

"Yes—I paid for my own," said Eva with a touch of sullenness. "I'd got in the habit. When there was something I wanted, it was easier to go off and get it myself than to pull the womanly line—first pointing the thing out to him—then letting him know that I'd like it—then reminding him four or five times that I had a birthday or an anniversary or something coming—then being all surprised and thrilled when, at last, he came through. When you've made your own living since you were seventeen, you're kind of impatient of that harem stuff."

Over the tousled head, eyes met—Michael's and 'Toinette's. Reluctantly conscious of unpleasing reality. Startled—defensive.

"Still," said Michael, more gently than he had spoken. "I suppose, before you were married, you accepted presents from him without that feeling?"

"Before I was married—I accepted 'em—yes!" said Eva. "I didn't have to cadge for 'em. That's what gets my goat about marriage."

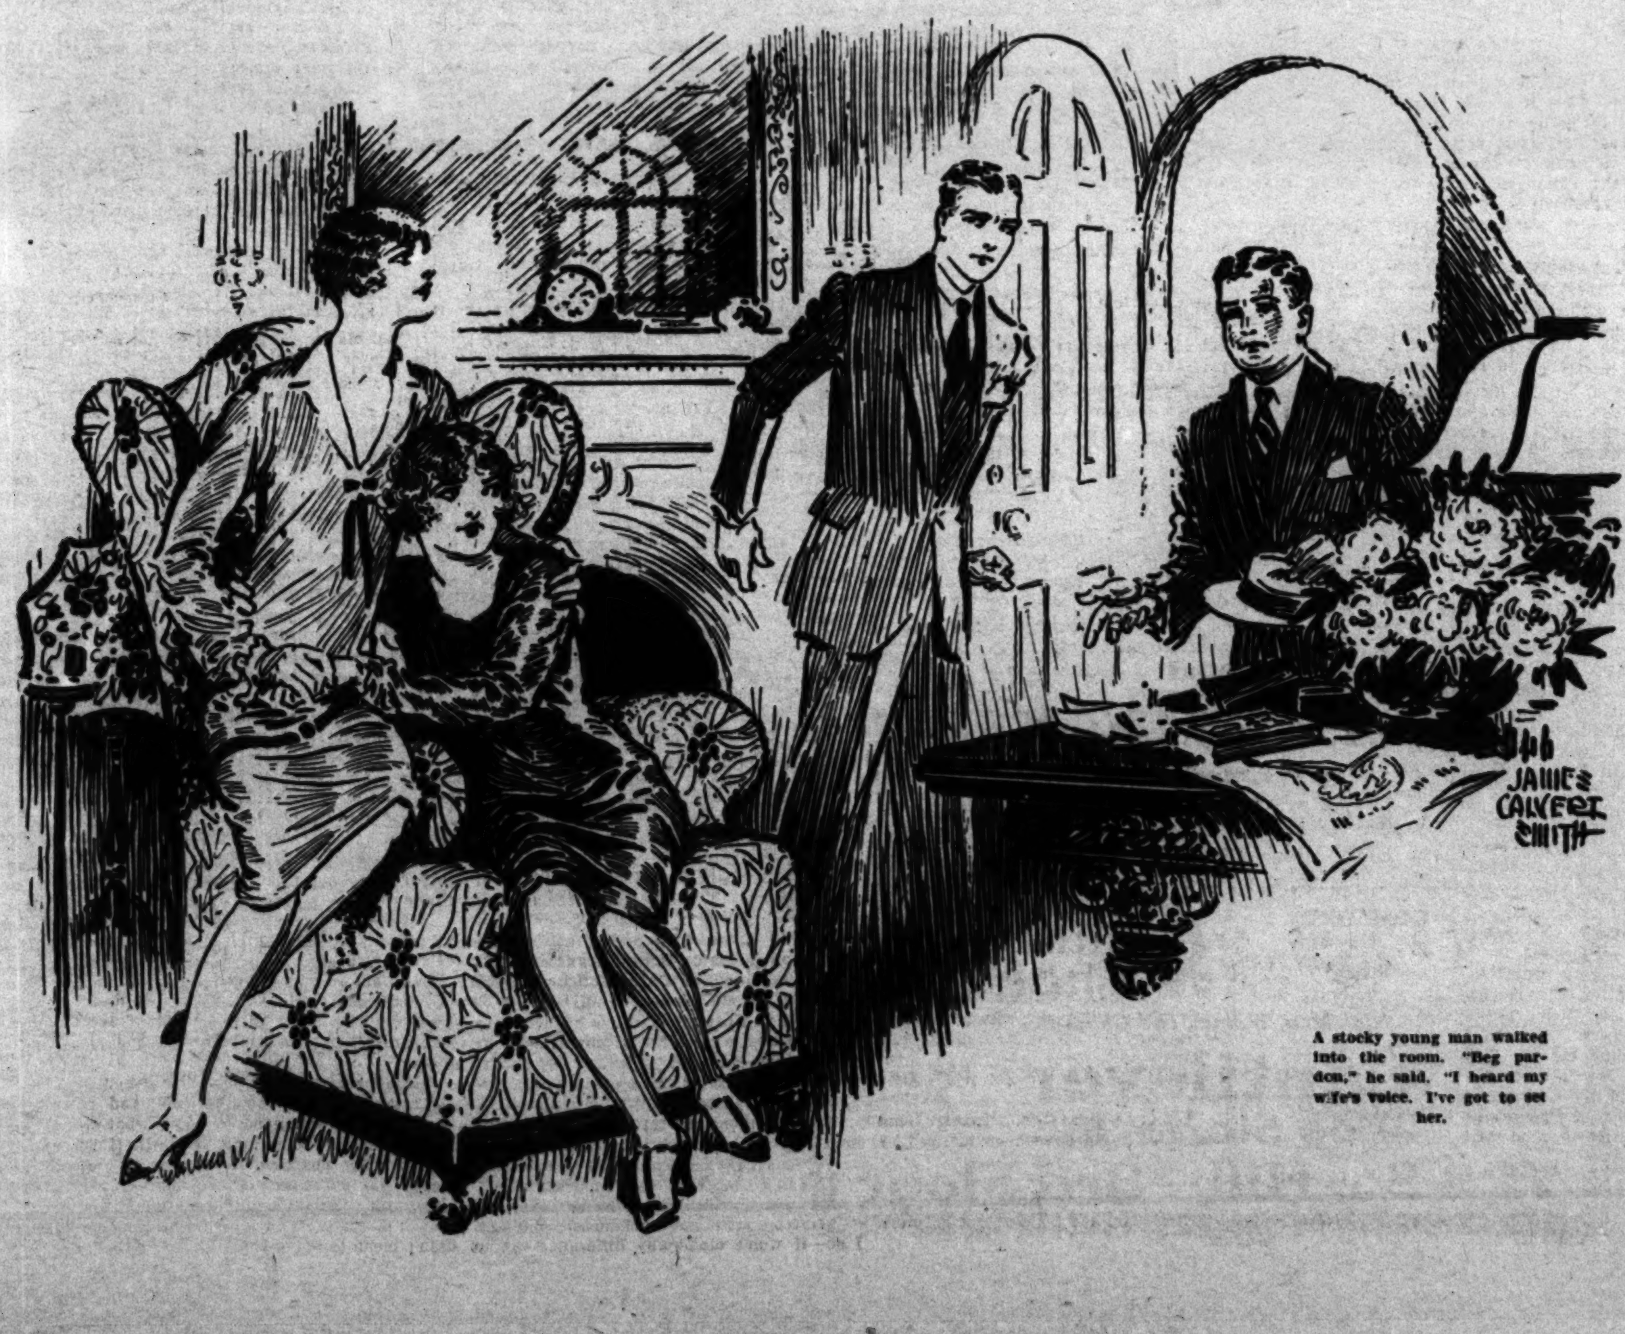
"Poor Eva!" sighed 'Toinette.

She smoothed Eva's hair. She glanced at Michael, and there was resentment—almost fear—in her look.

Michael had felt that fear taking shape. His own look begged for suspended judgment.

"What did you say to him then?" he prompted relentlessly

"I told him," sobbed Eva, "I told him I was through. I told him I was coming back here to live with Tony—get me a decent job again—and he could pay anybody's bills he wanted to—till he went broke. See if I cared! I left word with the old woman I was gone—and I caught an early train—while he was eating breakfast . . ." She added heart-brokenly, "I just got me a new



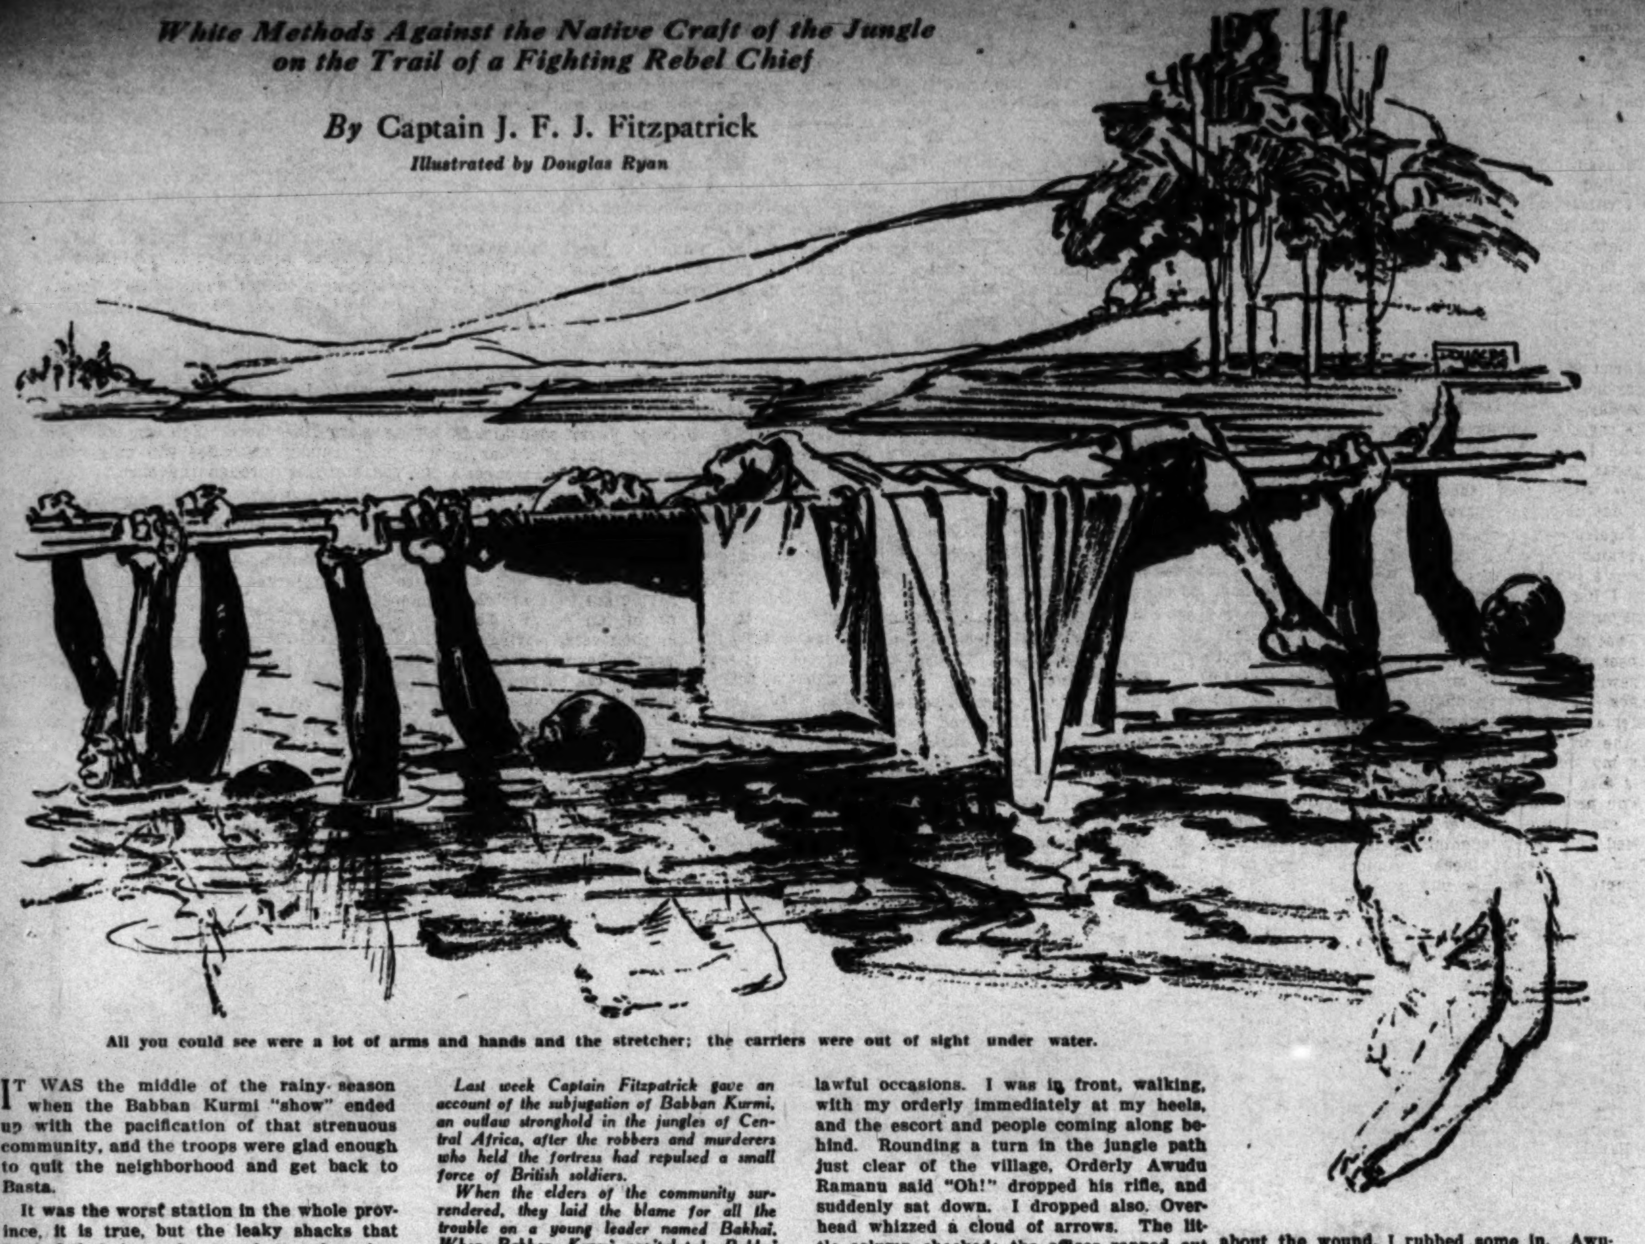
A stocky young man walked into the room. "Beg pardon," he said. "I heard my wife's voice. I've got to see her.

THE TERROR OF NIGERIA

White Methods Against the Native Craft of the Jungle on the Trail of a Fighting Rebel Chief

By Captain J. F. J. Fitzpatrick

Illustrated by Douglas Ryan



All you could see were a lot of arms and hands and the stretcher; the carriers were out of sight under water.

Last week Captain Fitzpatrick gave an account of the subjugation of Babban Kurmi, an outlaw stronghold in the jungles of Central Africa, after the robbers and murderers who held the fortress had repulsed a small force of British soldiers.

When the elders of the community surrendered, they laid the blame for all the trouble on a young leader named Bakhai. When Babban Kurmi capitulated, Bakhai had disappeared at the head of a small force of young outlaws. The following article tells of the long and patient hunt for the fugitive.

IT WAS the middle of the rainy season when the Babban Kurmi "show" ended up with the pacification of that strenuous community, and the troops were glad enough to quit the neighborhood and get back to Basta.

It was the worst station in the whole province, it is true, but the leaky shacks that formed their barracks were better than slopping and scrambling about through swamps and over mountains. So, when orders came for them to push off, they gave thanks and went quickly; they were gone within a couple of hours.

A British lieutenant and twenty-five native soldiers stayed with me as escort, and we settled down to the usual joys of work in a Pagan hill area during the rains.

My job was to make a map of the district, take a census, find out what the people did and what they possessed, assess them for taxes, preach the gospel of no murder, no highway robbery, no eating of the weaker brother, no selling of his wives and children into slavery, get some roads and markets made, induce the inhabitants to use them, and urge them to work, work, so that they could sell their surplus produce for money, buy themselves nice things, and pay taxes. Trade follows the flag!

The local savages, those who dwelt high up amongst the rocks, those who grew webfooted in the swamps, and their brothers who snaked about in the jungle—all of them, with their wives and children, heartily hated the lot of us. Of course, my business was the sort of business that would make any man disliked anywhere.

The people didn't want to be counted. They didn't want me to see their villages. They didn't like my writing things down about them. They loathed having to provide food and lodging for us, even though they were well paid.

The old ways were the ways they liked. Fighting one another, eating one another, stealing one another's goods and stock and relations, raiding down on to the trade road in the caravan season, with no annoying interference and nothing to pay. These had been their conditions until a twelvemonth back—and the world went very well then.

They realized that the census had something to do with taxes, so they went to all manner of trouble to conceal their numbers.

I had done quite a number of villages before I noticed that day by day, as we went along, the populations dwindled and shrank, until in one that was almost a town only seven decrepit old gentlemen were on parade, stated to be all the householders there were! After some fuss a further two hundred were discovered! That meant tearing up the particulars I had noted down, and starting all over again. It vexed the lieutenant and the soldiers, it vexed my interpreters and staff; it vexed me!

Meanwhile I felt confident that Bakhai, the rebel of Babban Kurmi, and the alleged cause of all the trouble there, was lurking with his following somewhere about the district. His departure from Babban Kurmi was final, I knew, for after the peace settlement his neighbors had divided up all his gear between them, and now went about telling the world they had expelled him. So he was finished there.

On the other hand, lots of little villages would welcome the influx of a dozen able-bodied men; they would be useful, offensively and defensively, against other small villages. I was certain that sooner or later, if I was getting the truth from the people, I should run across Master Bakhai.

In due course I approached the end of my labors. We had made our last camp out on a comparatively unswampy bit of plain, a mile or so away from a little jungle village called Mada. The chief of Mada was a very nice old man, and his people served us regularly with meal and grain and other things—altogether a decent, well-ordered community. The path to everywhere lay through Mada, and we were in and out of the place almost daily.

One morning we paddled through on our lawful occasions. I was in front, walking, with my orderly immediately at my heels, and the escort and people coming along behind. Rounding a turn in the jungle path just clear of the village, Orderly Awudu Ramanu said "Oh!" dropped his rifle, and suddenly sat down. I dropped also. Overhead whizzed a cloud of arrows. The little column checked; the officer rapped out commands.

We were traversing a narrow track at the time, a mere furrow, walled in on both sides with impenetrable jungle greenery; a path that went winding, with never a dozen yards of view. I wriggled to Awudu and laid him at length, but could see no wound. He put his hand to his thigh, and, turning up his shorts, I saw a small wound there. Snatching off my neckerchief, I bound it tightly above the place, twisted it tighter with my fountain pen, and then tore a handkerchief into strips to make the tourniquet fast.

From the left pocket of my bush shirt I took a tin box, and from that a safety razor blade. Then I got to work cutting down into the wound. It was very small and had no depth, and presently I came upon a tiny wooden knob, or bead, and hooked it out. It was an arrow head.

Some natives down that way use an all-wood type of arrow when they go out after other humans. The body of the thing is the usual reed, but the head is of very hard and brittle wood. This they further harden in a fire; then they sharpen it, but not to a fine point. A quarter of an inch behind the point they cut right in, so that whatever and whenever the arrow strikes, the shock of impact snaps it at that weakest point, and the arrow itself drops, leaving the little knob inside the wound.

The penetration is very slight, and if you did not know about this particular type of arrow, you would think all of it had fallen out. As the owner shooter has been at pains to poison his projectile, however, and as the poisened tip stays in the wound, it behooves all concerned to examine a wound most carefully, otherwise these ingenious part-time fighters get away with the trick.

The deadly arrow-point removed, I dived into the other pocket of my bush shirt and pulled out another little tin box with permanganate crystals in it. Having cut well about the wound, I rubbed some in. Awudu Ramanu, his eyes fixed, his body stiffening and beginning to jerk convulsively, lay groaning, and I feared he was going out.

However, the crystals quickly began to get in their work. The stinging pain roused him, and the appearances of imminent death abated. One is not often rejoiced to see a man suffering, but at times the sight means salvation. I poured a stiff dose from my flask down his throat, and, good Mohammedan as he was, all unaccustomed to strong waters, he gasped very heartily.

Then I had a pull at the flask myself, lighted a cigarette, and took a look around—to discover that the wounded man and I were alone! Thereupon I placed my revolver convenient to my hand, and then lay down beside him to wait and see.

The idea, of course, had been to shoot me. And had I been astern of the orderly, instead of him following on my heels, I should have got that which was meant for me. But an arrow shot from a bow moves a lot less quickly than a bullet from a gun. Ambushers aim at the leading man—and hit the next.

The lieutenant and his braves returned at the end of an hour, sweating hard, their clothes in shreds, bleeding and barked and bruised. Their dash at the ambushers, and the subsequent pursuit through that dense jungle, was the toughest sort of forlorn hope.

The lienenant asked me if I had noticed, on passing through, that the village of Mada appeared to be empty. I had not noticed it. It ought, of course, to have struck me at once, but the last thing I expected was to be attacked within a few yards of our pet village of Mada.

The officer was a very capable soldier. He made a careful search of the place, and found not a soul in it, though everything suggested that the inhabitants had stepped out of doors for a moment to look at a sunbeam, meaning to return at once. There-

YOUTH WILL BE SERVED—WHAT?

By Channing Pollock
PLAYWRIGHT AND PRODUCER

CHANNING POLLOCK.

ONE little prig getting ready to go to market is not my ideal of boyhood and girlhood. We have enough little prigs, and enough market men. I realize that youth will be served, and only doubt the value—to anyone—of its being served with wood alcohol and nasty nibblings at forbidden fruit. There is certainly as much exercise in swimming as in one-stepping, as much joy in jaunting as in jazz, and learning is the golden key that opens the treasure-house of the world.

Nobody, I think, wants to deprive youth of its pleasures—only to point the way to those pleasures that are least expensive and most enduring. The best the years give us is a new, and, I believe, a more accurate power of appraisal. What is most worth while in life? Appreciation of simple things; the capacity to understand and enjoy them, and not want the other kind; self-respect; a vigorous, healthy body and mind; independence—the independence forfeited by thriftlessness or misbehavior; work well done; tranquility, and, above all other things, knowledge.

"I know what pleasure is," said Robert Louis Stevenson, "for I have done good work." I know how to drain the last drop of delight from idleness, too, for I have read enough to understand poetry and lectures and music and architecture and the fascinating wonders of bee and flower.

Last night, while the sea spilled upon the beach almost at my feet, I was kept awake by a rowdy crowd of spoiled and sated youngsters finding cheap and bloom-brushing titillation in maudlin movement to the sour notes of a raucous saxophone. I wondered whether their intoxication would endure as pleasantly in their memories as an adolescent drunkenness of mine provided by head wind and a choppy, salt sea spraying over a sturdy boat. I wondered whether, in later years, they would miss the treasures delivered to me through youthful interest in books and pictures. I wondered whether "necking" was a satisfactory substitute for the quiet pressure of a hand that has been ready for your hand thirty years—or good training for the appreciation of that pressure.

"Experience is the best teacher," and perhaps it is useless to say these things to youth. But if youth could know at fifteen what I have learned at fifty—how much more pure joy there is in delving than in dancing, in learning than in loitering, how many primroses grow along the straight and narrow path, we should all save ourselves so many wasted years and tears!

[illegible] said it—awf'ly pretty . . ."

"You think you can never go back?" murmured 'Toinette.

"Me go back—now?" sobbed Eva.

"No one's asking you to—nobody's urging you—I only mean—if Ed were sorry . . ."

Some one was knocking.

"Just a moment, please," called 'Toinette—but too late.

The door opened brusquely, and a stocky, florid man walked into the room. "Beg pardon," he said. "I heard my wife's voice. I've got to see her."

"Not unless she wishes to see you!" said Michael coolly.

He moved between Eva and the stocky young man, and was, for his pains, shoved aside. Eva said, with a certain amount of impatience—highly unappreciative, all things considered:

"Don't be foolish—it's my husband!"

"How do you do, Ed?" said 'Toinette, coming forward, both hands in her pockets. "He is a friend of mine—and I am a friend of Eva's—she seems to be able to use a friend or two."

"I suppose you've spilled the whole thing?" said the stocky young man to Eva, less brutal than deeply reproachful.

Then they seemed to forget the existence of 'Toinette and Michael. They glared at each other, and their voices shook.

"Walked out—without a word!" he said.

She retorted. "Think I was going to ask you to see me off?"

"If it hadn't been for old Martha, I wouldn't have known where to look for you."

"You haven't done much looking for me lately. You've been too busy in another direction."

"Oh, good heavens!" said 'Toinette.

She went over to the windows, and Michael followed. They stood with their backs to the room.

"What's the big idea," jeered Eva, "following me up here, like this? Didn't you say enough last night? What do you think I'm made of—putty?"

"You said a good deal, yourself," he reminded her savagely.

"I'm no early Christian martyr," said Eva.

"You're a crazy little spitfire, that's what you are!"

'Toinette's eyes widened. She put a hand on Michael's arm.

"Did you hear that? He said 'little'! He must still be in love with her!"

"They're a couple of fools!"

"They're not unique," said 'Toinette. And withdrew her hand.

The fools had slackened hostilities for a moment.

"I want you to come back—like a reasonable person," the male fool was saying

"Sure you do!" said Eva. "What'll you say when you're asked where I've gone—and why? It's going to be awkward for you."

He urged doggedly. "We'll forget all about—the other thing."

"Who told you we would?"

"Eva—I promise you. It'll never happen again."

"What's the matter? Are you broke—already?"

That wrung a smothered expletive and a tortured growl. "You little cat—you!"

"This is too horrible!" groaned 'Toinette softly.

Michael pleaded. "Wait—he's called her 'little' twice . . ."

They waited. 'Toinette's face was set in a delicate mask of distaste. Michael's mouth was the mouth of one who tastes dust and ashes.

'Toinette stared fixedly across the street.

"And we were on our way—" said Michael, bitterly.

"So were the two in the wood," said 'Toinette.

Eva had begun to cry again "You can talk now," she said, "but if anybody'd told me—three years ago—you'd be buying another woman orchids—while I paid your butcher's bill! And I'm such a fool that an orchid would have kept me quiet. You didn't think of that—did you?"

"I didn't know you paid."

"You never asked! Anyhow—you never bought any for me—did you?"

"You never seemed to want anything you couldn't get for yourself. No kick to bringing stuff to you, because you'd likely brought it home yourself—the week before. I'm a fool for presents—and, when there's somebody who's crazy over the least little thing a man does for her—gosh, Eva—a man wants to do things for a woman. He wants to buy her things. And she makes a mistake when she lets him get out of the way of it. No matter how many things she can buy for herself—she can't buy the way he feels about her—when he's taking something home. You can't help caring about a person you give things to."

"Oh, don't I know it!" sobbed Eva. "Even when it's only a butcher's bill!"

"Baby!" said the stocky young man, with agonized brevity.

Eva came out of her husband's arms with a sigh—this time of shameless satisfaction.

"Tony," she called. "You had front row center on this show—didn't you?—you and Mr. Timberlake!"

"I'm sorry," said the stocky young man, shamefaced but also ineffably relieved. "It's a shame you had to be in on this I guess Eva and I will catch a train home—there's one at two-thirty. Sorry to have troubled you with our—misunderstanding."

Eva had her hat on, her face powdered and rouged by way of combatting her ravages of emotion.

'Toinette had her hat on, too—the suit—the hat she had worn all morning. Michael's heart went down. He could scarcely force himself to answer civilly, when Eva advanced upon him with friendly intent.

"Tony must bring you to see us sometime, Mr. Timberlake—some week-end."

"Thanks very much," said Michael.

'Toinette hadn't looked at him since she left him standing by the window. She hadn't looked at him kindly since that infernal woman began to blubber about butcher's bills and orchids and peasant china—and husbands.

"Well—good-by—and good luck!" said Mr. Danford.

"Good-by, Tony, darling—" said Eva.

Michael froze inwardly, watching her kiss 'Toinette. The sweetness of 'Toinette's face, the line of her throat—Eva's overblown, common prettiness If he had lost 'Toinette, he had Eva to thank for it. Coming along with her farcical tragedy—her slapstick heart-break—her easy noisy reactions—just at the moment when he and 'Toinette—when the road to heaven was opening before them.

"Well, good-by, everybody—" said Eva. Jaunty—absolutely.

Ignoring the ugliness of all that had gone before—the vulgarity—the cheapness. Not even apologetic.

The door closed.

Back against the door, 'Toinette looked at Michael for a long moment.

"Well—" she said—"shall we say good-by?"

Michael's world reeled. He said huskily: "I won't let you!—" and took her hands and pulled her almost roughly into his arms. "It proves nothing . . . they're not us . . . they don't know what love is . . . they'd make a mess of anything. They're stupid . . . they're weak."

"They're people!" said 'Toinette.

"Maybe!" said Michael.

"We have met ourselves, and they are ours," said 'Toinette.

"Don't laugh about it!" said Michael

"I'm not—much" said 'Toinette. Quite truthfully, since her lashes were wet. "And we were marrying to beat death. What does one do to beat life?"

"Marry each other," said Michael doggedly.

'Toinette strained back, but his arms were hard around her. She said—not looking at him. "They didn't disgust—nor alarm you?"

"Disgust—they were nauseating," said Michael. "But—"

"Yes—the immortal but!" said 'Toinette. "I'm listening."

Michael took her chin in the palm of his hand, and lifted her face till her eyes deepened, in spite of her, meeting his. He said passionately, pleading as he would never plead in any court on earth:

"Because another man's car goes off the road—that doesn't mean the road's no good. That doesn't mean that the place at the end of the road isn't still—waiting—for you and me . . . does it?

"Michael!" cried 'Toinette, a cry of exquisite relief—and longing.

"Does it?" said Michael—! and waited.

She flung herself against him, like a flame flinging itself out of murk and fume into upper air. She said—like a laugh—and a sob—and a prayer: "Let's go!"

Later, she pointed out to him, her head against his shoulder, watching a new moon go down behind tall buildings, yellow lights strung along the street below, smoke across the sunset: "One born every minute, very likely. But, at that—it's far, far better than not being born at all—h'm'm?"

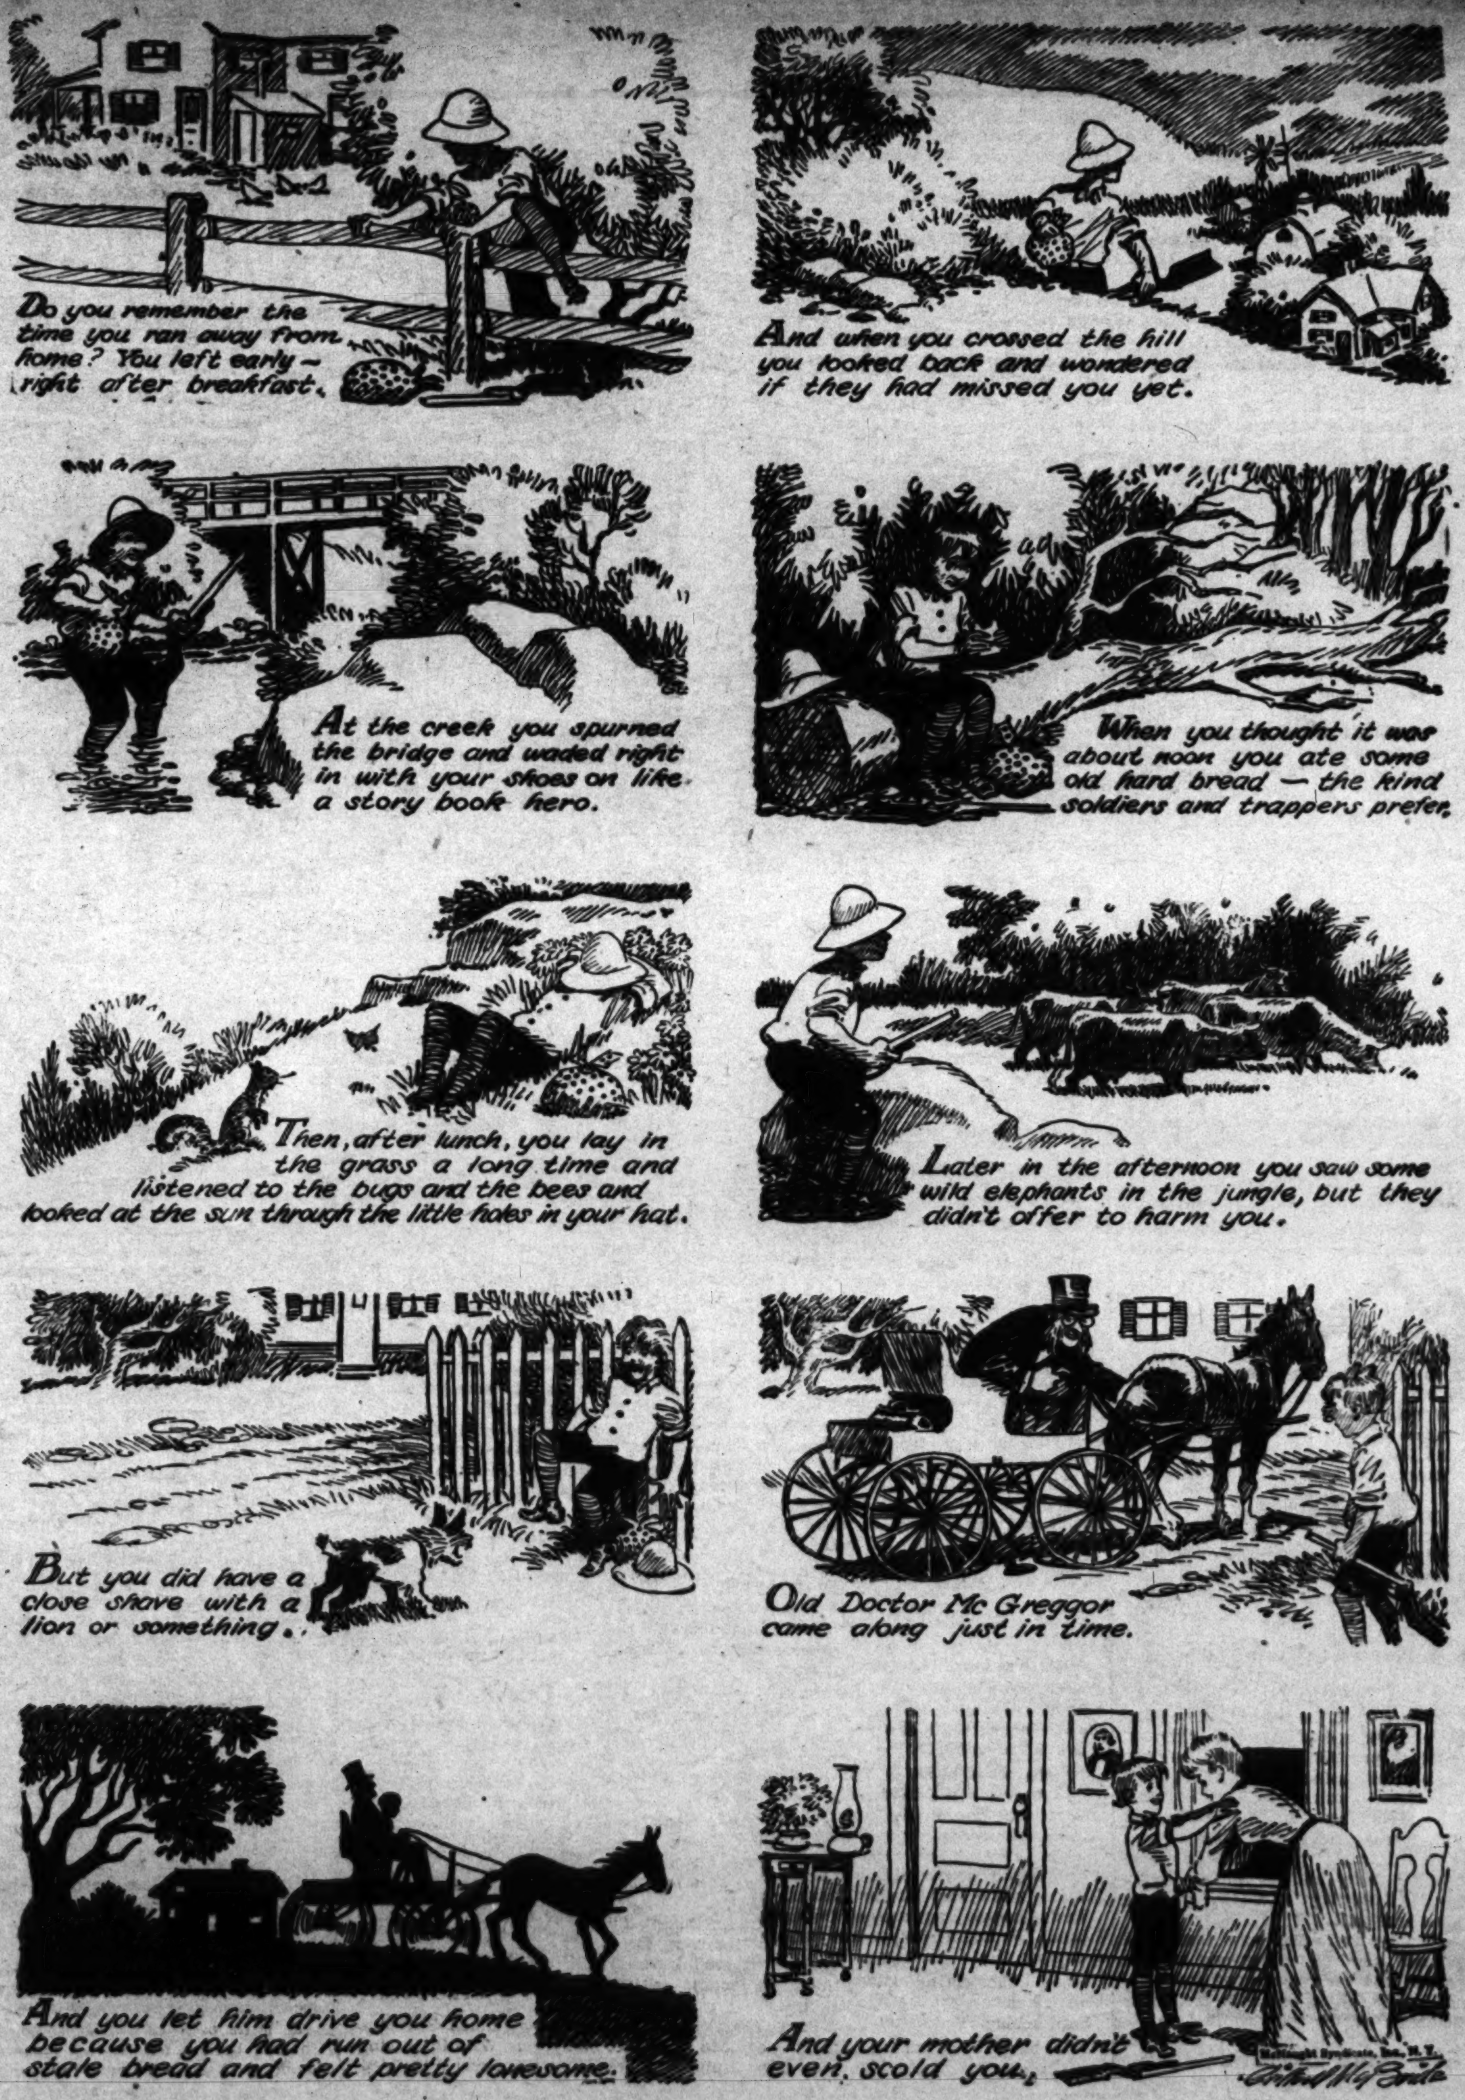
THE RUNAWAY

By Clifford McBride



Do you remember the time you ran away from home? You left early — right after breakfast.
And when you crossed the hill you looked back and wondered if they had missed you yet.
At the creek you spurned the bridge and waded right in with your shoes on like a story book hero.
When you thought it was about noon you ate some old hard bread — the kind soldiers and trappers prefer.
Then, after lunch, you lay in the grass a long time and listened to the bugs and the bees and looked at the sun through the little holes in your hat.
Later in the afternoon you saw some wild elephants in the jungle, but they didn't offer to harm you.
But you did have a close shave with a lion or something.
Old Doctor McGreggor came along just in time.
And you let him drive you home because you had run out of stale bread and felt pretty lonesome.
And your mother didn't even scold you.

RELATIVES

By Bruce Barton

MY FEET were tired from standing up in the crowded train, and maybe that affected my eyesight. Anyhow, the folks in that car seemed to me woefully unattractive.

There were men with unshaven faces, and women with disheveled hair, and babies who put their dirty fingers in their dirty mouths. Some sprawled and slept; some snored.

Our journey ended, and we were emptied into the depot.

There, behind a rope, awaiting our arrival, were many folks, as unattractive as ourselves.

But as we came pouring through the gates, behold a miracle! The homely horde rushed upon us. Cross-eyed men clasped unkempt women to their breasts. Withered old women planted kisses upon the cheeks of homely young women, exclaiming that they were beautiful and calling them, my dear, and weeping tears of happiness at their arrival.

And suddenly I was ashamed of myself; and I said to my wife: "What a magnificent thought it was, on the part of God, to give every human being somebody who thinks that he or she is wonderful."

Samuel Butler, who was very cynical, thought it a great mistake that the generations should overlap. He would have all of one generation pass away before any of the next were born—as with butterflies, for instance.

The butterfly spins a cocoon, puts into it enough food to carry the young one to maturity, then lies down and dies. So it would be fine, said Butler, if each one of us could be born wrapped in twenty thousand dollars, which would feed and clothe us to maturity—but with no parents, aunts, uncles or wise old friends to be a nuisance to us.

Napoleon is supposed to have had more energy and will power than any other modern man, but even he could not solve the relative problem. It is amusing to read his angry letters to his brothers and see what trouble he had in trying to teach them to be kings. They persisted in making a mess of things, and caused him more worry than all his armies.

So relatives are not an unmixed blessing; yet what a sad world without them! Every once in a while I go over to the Grand Central Station and see that welcoming scene repeated, and always it gives me a little thrill.

A hundred nondescript folks, from a hundred commonplace homes, waiting to welcome a hundred others. Yet by a certain divine astigmatism, each one of the hundred is supremely beautiful in the eyes of some one!

So long as he or she lives, there will be another who cares. Surely this is one of the splendors of life! And one of the great lines of literature is: "He setteth the solitary in families."

WITH THE BOY SCOUTS AT CATALINA

By Christine Emery

PROPRIETORS of summer camps, mothers and dieticians who have attempted to feed and plan a definite program for even a few boys when they are rushing through the "ravenous age" that is so emphatically a part of their existence between the years of twelve and twenty, can profit from a survey of what is accomplished by the executives of the Pasadena District Council in the Boy Scout Camp at Cherry Valley, on Santa Catalina Island.

To this summer camp, in relays every ten days, come the Scoutmasters with their active troops during the six weeks that the camping season is open. Surprising as it may seem, the total cost to each boy for the ten days' outing is only $12.50. Of this, $4.05 is spent for transportation, $5.40 for freight, equipment, supplies, salaries—including the employment of a competent chef and his assistant—fuel, and all incidental expenses necessary for the successful maintenance of the colony, while the remaining $3.05 is made to cover every item included in the food served for the entire twenty-seven meals that are allotted to each boy throughout his stay on the island.

"How can it be done at that price? What do the boys eat, and how much can they have?" These questions are answered by the evidence that careful planning and practical experience are behind every feature of the highly specialized camp management and that nowhere is this shown more convincingly than in the selection, purchase and preparation of the food. All Scouts "line up" at the mess tent for rations, knowing that while there is to be no waste, there is an adequate supply and that a fellow can always "come back for seconds."

A more comprehensive idea of the magnitude of this work may be gained by realizing that in spite of excessively high shipping charges, more than seven tons of staple food products were sent ahead in readiness for the opening of the camp.

The plain, well-cooked food that is eaten so eagerly, the open air, the sunshine, the unbroken routine of interesting activities, the recreation and the normal amount of restful sleep all promote immediate physical improvement and the average gain for each boy is four and a half pounds in the ten days of energetic camp life.

The schedule is a busy one. From six in the morning until nine in the evening the camp is the scene of practical progression in mental, moral and physical education. The daily program is followed with unfailing regularity and discipline is absolute, both for the training of the boys and the welfare of the camp.

Two swims a day—for that is all the executives advise—put the boys in the pink of physical fitness and they go about their work with keenest zest. Classes in primitive camp cookery, signaling, hiking, tracking, fire building, use of the compass, knife and axe, map making, nature study, life saving, seamanship, first aid, photography, carpentry and masonry all have their ardent devotees.

The necessity for personal and public health is wisely stressed together with that of individual responsibility, punctuality, kindliness and courtesy. That is why these boys, away from home and mother and, in many instances, dependant upon their own stamina for the first time in their lives, are capable of intelligent self-expression and why it is possible for the members of this mixed group to form a harmonious unit and consistently practice the same principles that make for success in the actual work of life.

THE RUNAWAY
By Clifford McBride

... and then at her flushed excited face. His own grew black as thunder.

"What man has been here?" he shouted.

"Man? Chris! You're mad."

"Not me. I smelt a rat when you wouldn't come with me this morning. Some chap's been here and given you that."

His words stung Carol to blind fury. In a trice she slipped back to a time when the sun was young and the great lizards and prehistoric beasts wallowed and fought in their primeval slime.

With all her force she struck her husband in the face. The ring caught his mouth, cutting his lip.

At the taste of blood he saw red. He rushed at her. The fiery sun set on a dun sea boiling in foam over sunken rocks and on two figures locked in elemental combat. . . .

It was over within two seconds. Sick with shame for their outraged code, they turned away—each unable to meet the other's eyes. They shrank to lady and gentleman, products of an overcivilized generation, stranded by some strange chance on a barren rock.

For their own magic island had sunk into the sea.

. . . .

They left the island next day. During the remainder of their stay they manufactured perpetual conversation. Once again the silence had fallen.

A few weeks after their return to the city they again met the devil. Business called John Brown to the capital. As he entered the restaurant of the hotel his eye fell on the couple at the next table.

The man was engrossed in his food—the woman concentrated on her cigaret. Both were married—for they had nothing to say to each other.

At that moment the woman looked at the devil.

Her eyes, though brilliant and beautiful, to him were terrible. They were blasted. And he had seen them brimming with the glory of the dawn. As his eyes fell to her hand, he noticed that she wore an emerald ring.

A terrible doubt clouded his mind. He remembered his own ring which he had lost on the island and his sense of guilt at being an intruder in a private paradise.

If this were his property it had brought with it no blessing, but a curse. He felt apprehensive, whenever he looked at the beautiful lady, as though the ruin of her happiness was his own handiwork.

He knew that he was fanciful, but the morbid dread throbbed like a festering wound; he felt he could not sleep unless his doubts were laid to rest.

Greatly daring, he approached a casual acquaintance and asked for an introduction to the Storms.

In the impaired state of their finances the young couple was not averse to wealthy new acquaintances. They were rather pathetic in their semi-isolation, for they were still too honest to command respect as splendid spendthrifts.

John Brown sat with Carol, in the lounge, lost with wonder at having netted this brilliant firefly as his companion. She laughed as his eyes strayed furtively at her hand.

"You're looking at my ring. It's treasure trove. I found it in a pool on a desert island. Very wrong of me to freeze on to it, but how can it belong to any one but the devil?"

Her word suggested a fresh train of thought.

"I've a confession to make," she said. "A few months ago you came, by accident, into my room at the Ocean Hotel, just as I was working a spell to call up his satanic majesty. And isn't it a shame? Ever since, I've called you 'The Devil?' "

John Brown licked his dry lips.

"I hope you've libeled me. One tries, in a small way, to be good. It must be terrible to be the Father of all Evil!"

He tried to think of the many charities to which he subscribed especially those which did not publish the list of donors. But he drank in every word, as Carol flippantly related the story of their adventure on the island.

"A glorious rag," she said in conclusion, "but my complexion never got over it. And never before have I inflicted this history on such a patient listener."

John Brown's throat was corded as he put the dreaded question.

"If it was so perfect, why didn't you follow up your good time? Why did you leave the island?"

Carol's face clouded.

"That part of the story is not for publication. But—it had to end. Winter was upon us."

"Yet," said John Brown," everything may depend on the manner of the end. Had it, by any chance, to do with this?"

As he touched the emerald ring she gave a cry.

"How could you guess? Yes, it had everything to do with the end. I cannot tell you any more except that the devil himself must have dropped it in that pool. For it killed all the happiness of a perfect world and ruined two lives, just as they were beginning again."

"Ah!"

John Brown seemed to shrink under his starched shirt front.

Carol's voice changed.

"I can't think what possesesd me to bore you with this," she said lightly.

"Your confidence is safe with me," remarked John Brown. "We're strangers. We may never meet again."

"I'm glad." She bit her lip. "For I've said too much."

"Then, won't you say something more? Tell me, is there a chance of future happiness for you?"

"No."

"Not if your husband could be given a straight explanation of how you got the ring?"

Carol stared.

"You're uncanny with your guesses. But the ring's not the trouble now. He knows that he judged too hastily. But we're divided by—a memory. We're like prisoners in this rat trap of society and debt—and we dare not be natural with each other."

Then the first gleam broke through her dead eyes, as though she felt the heated air cooled by the current of a mountain breeze.

"If only we could begin all over again!" she sighed. "Another chance! Out in the open, with the wind sweeping through us, things must come right. But—it's impossible!"

There was scarcely a pause. But in that moment, John Brown made a lightning decision. Not for nothing had he made a fortune in sugar and tea.

Because he had brought sin and sorrow into a brand new world, he had to make amends.

"That reminds me," he said. "I've an option on some land in Florida. Part of it is swamp and still has to be drained. Tremendous work, but excellent prospects—cotton, sugar cane, and so on. I want to put in a married man as manager because of the loneliness. Now, how does it strike you as a business proposition?"

Carol's face flushed deeply—her lips trembled.

"May—may I tell Chris?" was all she said.

Sunk in his corner seat, John Brown watched them meet. As they turned and advanced toward him, he saw that their faces were those of banished souls who have sighted Eden.

. . . .

So, now you know that the devil is a pleasant, retiring individual, who eats the three hundred and sixty-five breakfasts of bacon and eggs and goes to church on Sunday. You had better beware! For all you know, the devil may be your next door neighbor.

Shakespeare's Horn-book

Part of an old oaken spelling book, which classical experts believe William Shakespeare fondled and studied as a child almost four hundred years ago, has been found in the cottage of Anne Hathaway at Shottery, England.

Shaped like a butter patter or a ping-pong bat, the spelling book has the initials W. S. carved deeply on the back. It was discovered under the bedroom floor of the Hathaway cottage and comprised the oaken back, a portion of the handle and some of the nails which held in position a missing piece of transparent horn.

The horn, from which the term "horn-book" is derived, was used to protect rows of letters composing the alphabet from the grubby fingers of children who pored over it. Like the section of horn, the printed sheet of letters had also disappeared when workmen, engaged in restoring rooms in the cottage to their original form, chanced upon the Shakespearean relic.

Antiquarians have placed the memento on exhibition at Stratford-upon-Avon where the Shakespeare Memorial Theater was destroyed by fire a year ago. Funds for the restoration of the theater are being raised jointly by the American Shakespeare Foundation in America and the British Memorial Committee in England.

Shakespearean authorities assert the relic throws new light on the early life of the poet and his wife, particularly those misty years after the bard went up to London to write himself into immortality. According to Guy Pemberton, English scholar, the presence of the horn-book in the Hathaway home indicates that after the departure of her husband to London, Anne returned again to her parental roof, bringing with her the children as well as the spelling book for their instruction.

With the growth of the children past the ABC stage, the horn-book, it is believed, was used in games of battledore; at least it bears the scars of much rough usage. With its handle broken off and its pages and horn gone, the book is believed to have been used to repair a floor board or possibly to stop a rat's run, finally falling beneath the floor to gather dust for centuries.

THE ISLAND

She Conjure
From Society

IF YOU would conjure up the devil, you must eat an apple before the looking glass, while you comb your hair, at midnight, on All Halloween.

Although it was not October, Carol Storm tried to work the spell out of sheer boredom, in her bedroom at the Ocean Hotel.

Her surroundings were not conducive to superstitious rites. The electric light fell on the usual drift of a society woman who is living beyond her means. On the toilet table was a litter of trifles—tortoise shell, crystal and gold. Cast garments—fragile as a butterfly's wing—lay strewn on the carpet, thick as autumn leaves.

Yet in spite of the smother of luxury, there was a dominant vital quality in Carol, suggesting a Force which stretched beyond stuffy scented rooms and was rooted in the cool depths of dew drenched woods.

In her eyes was a look which was older than Eve and freer than the wind, as she bit her apple with strong white teeth.

A clock began to strike.

"Eleven, twelve."

The devil is a gentleman—so he was punctual to the minute.

Carol gave a gasp, as in the pool of her mirror she had a snapshot vision of a white face with blurred features and black ringed eyes.

"Oh!"

Her fright turned to amusement at the sound of a slam. Laughing, she crossed to the door which she had forgotten to shut.

"Only some one who's mistaken his number. Just my luck. Even the devil turns me down."

Carol was wrong. For the devil had seen her and marked her for his own.

. . . .

Carol saw the devil again, next noon, in the restaurant. He was a shy little man, with a pale puffy face and scared eyes. He seemed anxious to avoid the attention of the waiter during the progress of his solitary meal.

Carol's eyes danced as she spoke to her husband, who was eating his lunch in moody silence.

"Chris! Do you know who that man is?"

"That?" Chris wrinkled his handsome nose. "Yes, by sight. From the provinces. Very uncommon name. Brown."

"Brown? Thrilling. He's incognito."

Christopher looked at her—the dawn of suspicion in his glance. Yet no man had less cause to be distrustful of a beautiful wife.

"Look here, Carol! Do you know anything of this man?"

"Not me. I want to know. I'm interested. Tell me lots. Is he red or black? Odd or even."

"He's unmarried, if that's what you're driving at. But he's rich enough to afford to keep a harem of wives. Or, even you."

"Am I so specialized?" asked Carol lightly.

Her eyes grew misty as she wondered for the thousandth time exactly where she and Chris had gone wrong.

The first months of their marriage had been a glorious barefoot scamper—now it was a hobble in corn plasters. There was the perennial friction about money which she was totally unable to understand—since she had been educated on the principle that debt is merely rather amusing.

Carol had not begun too well. She was brought up in a rose lined bandbox—termed an apartment—where her mother flirted everlastingly, under pink candle shades, and all the candles were burned at both ends.

Christopher's friends had warned him that no good could come out of that rose flushed flat. So when Carol—lavish with her new happiness—spilled it royally about her, smiling on every man where she saw only Chris—she aroused the jealousy of the possessive male.

Life became a vicious circle. Because Carol had nothing to do, she did so many things. All these things cost money, which Chris tried to make. And when he tried to make money, he always lost more.

Adamlike, he blamed her for it all.

Carol noticed the fine lines spraying around his eyes and her heart ached at recognition of his defeat. She longed to kiss away the worry—regardless of the crowd.

She loved him so much, yet she could never tell him so—chilled by the resentful granite of his eyes.

She forced herself to speak lightly, since sympathy was an insult to his manhood.

"Been making a lot of money in the city, this morning, Chris?"

"No. But I'm losing a lot."

"Poor boy. How?"

"Tried to take something for a walk. It wouldn't interest you. And you wouldn't understand."

"Thank you for your confidence. I'm touched."

Bitterly she wondered if the end would find them like this—ever apart. Would she go into the darkness—still inarticulate—while their souls winged to opposing poles?

She toyed with her lipstick, to hide the quiver of her lips. It was one of her mother's tricks, which Chris detested.

He noticed that her eyes were still absently fixed upon the rich provincial—John Brown.

"Have you met this Brown?" he insisted.

"Of course." She laughed. "He came to my room last night. I invited him . . . Chris, don't be so childish! A mistake, of course, and I'm only joking. Let me tell you who he really is!"

Christopher paid no heed to her protest. His lips bitten to a line, he arose from his unfinished meal and strode from the restaurant. As he passed John Brown, who was counting his cherry stones, he muttered under his breath,

"The devil!"

. . . .

That afternoon Carol felt a strong reluctance to join the baskers who displayed the latest fashions in pajamas and beach suits, as they grilled on the scorching golden sand.

The pale green mirror of the sea was unbroken save for one long glassy emerald roller. As she gazed at it, Carol was rent with almost overpowering nostalgia for the mountain cool of sun slitted pine woods and the amber chute of a river in flood.

She wanted wild nature—not this fashionable farce of playing on the fringe of a tame ocean. All her crowd were staying at the Ocean Hotel—whose guests were millionaires only—and the Storms. There was eternal slacking, eternal dancing, eternal flirtation; every minute was time for cocktails or Charleston.

Carol clenched her hands. All she wanted was her own man. And, while Chris sat at her elbow, he was a million miles away, while every man in her crowd offered himself as substitute.

She did not change into her beach suit after lunch, to the dismay of the sun bathers.

"No." She shook her head at their entreaties. "I'm going for a walk. By myself."

"Why—on earth?" they asked.

"I want to find out if I still have a shadow," said Carol. "There's always such a crowd that I've not seen mine for years."

They all laughed. Remembering the pink shaded flat, no one accepted her explanation.

"Where's your husband?" asked some one.

"Gone back to the city, to make some money. That's all men care for—money."

Carol's lips were bitter as her voice.

"Yet she's some gold digger, herself!" murmured a sunburnt beauty in an undertone.

"And she can spend," agreed her neighber; for still the pink standard persisted.

As Carol walked by the fringe of the ocean, insensibly the discontent was smoothed from her face. She took off her hat to receive twin kisses from Cancer and Capricorn, which the north wind had borne in his mouth, to cook.

Once the huddle of striped bathing tents was passed, the beach was deserted, save for a small boy who was dazzling a smaller girl with the display of grubby treasures in his pockets.

Something in his bullet head and resolute lips reminded her of Chris. Her heart softened as she saw him in the guise of a small boy trying to impress her with his wealth of candy and birds' eggs.

"I understand." She nodded to the dimpling sea. "It must make a man feel sore when he's nothing to offer to his woman." But Chris, darling idiot, all I want is you."

She approached the rocks of the headland and rounded the horn of the bay. Her shadow, which had been a black distorted dwarf, now stretched ahead and grew taller as though it were the visible symbol of her released spirit.

On this side of the cape, nature appealed to her in elemental savagery. Black cliffs shadowed a chopped peacock-blue sea. Gulls mewed above the thunder of the surf.

Then she caught her breath at the sight of the indigo hump of a lone islet rising from the plain of the ocean.

According to her mother, who should know—and probably knew better—Carol was nineteen. She presented the appearance of the early twenties. But, at sight of the island, she looked her true age, which was about four thousand years old.

In spite of her French heels, her short orange georgette frock, her vanishing cream, and sunburn powder—she was a cave woman who saw before her the sandy bottom of her own home cave.

Her eyes shone, her cheeks burned. On that island she and Chris might find each other again.

. . . .

In her eagerness to tell her husband of her wish to rent the island, Carol ran all the way back to the hotel, taking off her shoes and stockings, so that the warm sand sprayed under her flying feet.

When they told her at the bureau that Chris had not returned, she made her own inquiries about the island. It was for sale, and might be rented for a term. It offered no attractions of any kind for visitors.

She ate her dinner alone—with a couple of men—a glass in her hand and a dream in her eyes.

Her husband had not come, when, weary from dancing, Carol went to her room. The night was too hot to sleep and she tossed in miserable suspense, sick with worry over Christopher.

Their lives seemed dangling on the lip of disaster.

Just before dawn she went to her window and looked out over the sea. A thin white line seemed to crawl eternally over a sheet of black enamel. The sky sagged down, darkly purple as an overripe fig. There was a throbbing universal mutter of distant thunder.

Suddenly Carol felt an uncontrollable urge to cut her way through the cool of the ocean under the low hanging sky, the stars tangled in her hair.

She yielded to the impulse with the same elemental passion with which she had recognized the island. Although she had no clear recollection of stealing from the hotel, she awoke to the fact that some one—barefoot and exultant—was flying over the tingling sand.

That some one was not Carol Storm, but her own shadow, slipped away to frolic in the darkness out of which it was created.

On the edge of the sea, she nearly collided with a man. It was her husband. As she recognized him, she quivered with shame of her mad adventure. But, to her astonishment, he expressed no surprise.

The normal order of things was swamped in a sense of unreality as he gripped her in his arms.

"Chris!" she cried in alarm. "What are you doing here?"

"Going for a swim."

He spoke thickly as he pushed her from him.

"Good-by, old girl. Good luck!"

In an agony, she clung to him.

"Chris! You're not. You're not!"

"Let me go!" He fought with her. "You don't understand. It's the end. I'm broke."

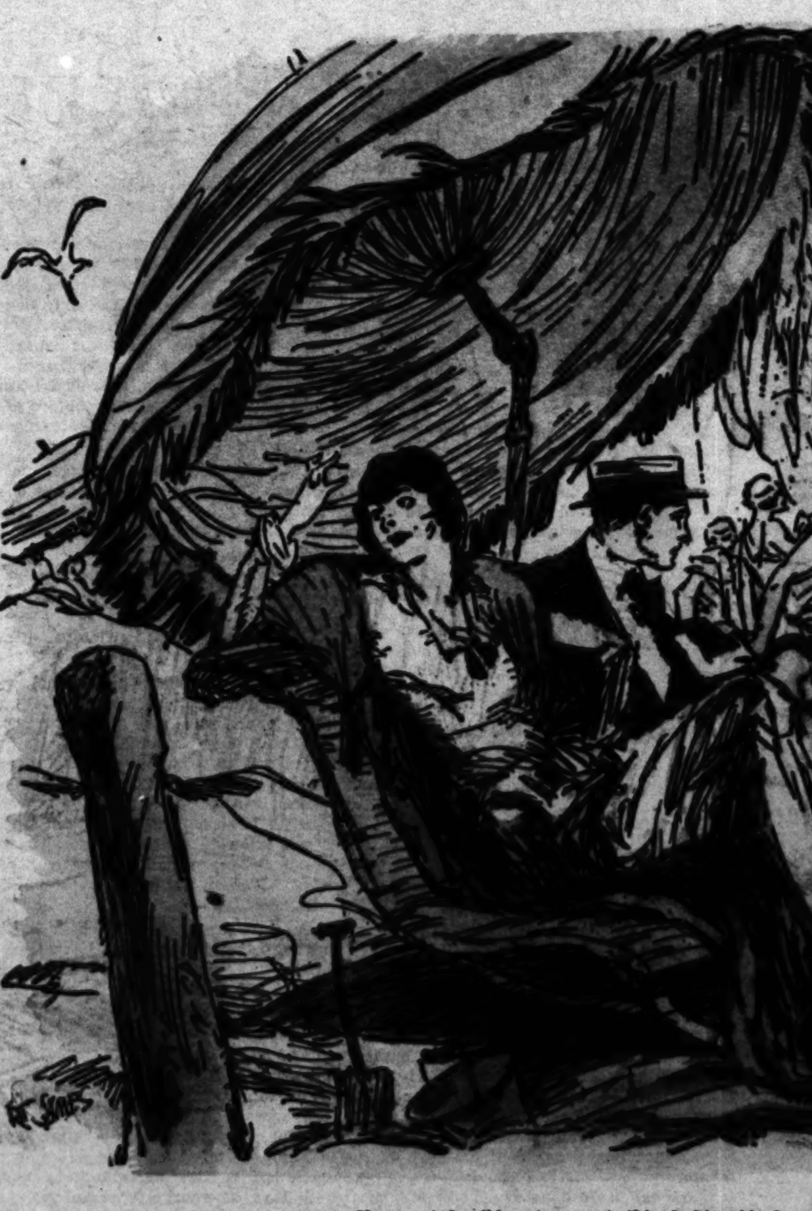
Her arms tightened around him.

"I do understand," she cried. "And, if you go, I'm coming, too. If there's land the other side, we'll make it—together."

"Don't be a fool, Carol. I tell you, I'm finished. But there are plenty of men to marry you. Men with money."

"Chris! You must listen to me!"

She pressed her hands upon his shoulders, forcing him to meet her eyes. She knew that, when day dawned, this scene would seem an incredible dream.



She wanted wild nature—not this fashionable farce

"You must listen," she implored. "I love no one. No one but you!"

He was arrested more by the passion in her voice than by her words.

"I—I believe you do care a bit, kid," he said brokenly. "But it's so darn hard to believe!"

"Then I'll make you." Carol felt strong and confident, now that the silence was broken. Unconsciously, she drew him away from the line of crawling foam

"You think," she said, "that I care only for luxury and—other people. It's not true and I want to prove it to you. Listen! We're going to camp out on an island. Just you and I."

The stars were dawning in the lightened east as she told him of the island.

"See!" she pleaded, "how humble I am. I only ask you to put me to the test."

Suddenly Chris gave a boyish laugh of adventure.

"Right. We'll try the island!"

The dawn wind stirred their hair. Those who had tossed wakeful, turned on their pillows and slept. Some who lay sick to death rested even better.

The darkest hour was past.

. . . .

The Storms rented the island for a problematical fortnight. They brought with them a sophisticated camping outfit, a stove, and a store of tinned luxuries.

On their first evening they dressed for dinner and made continuous conversation. Chris was bored and uneasy, as he still listened for the shrilling of the telephone bell. For weeks past he had lived at the end of a wire.

But when he was sleeping Carol came into her own. She stole from the tent and climbed to the highest peak of the island, whence she could faintly see the lights of the Ocean Hotel like a swarm of golden bees.

She taunted them with exultant freedom, until the sun clove the sky line like an angel with a flaming sword, cutting them off from the mainland.

Singing with joy, Carol dived into the mist feathered ocean.

On the third day Chris caught a fish. It was a very small fish, but, as he possessed no scales, he was obliged to estimate its weight.

As the fish grew daily heavier, so his zest in life returned, until the inspired morning, when Carol engineered a criminal accident with their oil and called upon Chris to make a fire out of sea drift.

In his first pungent whiff of smoke, Chris was healed of the smart of his financial cropper.

After the rite of the fire, they both had the freedom of the island. Days slipped into weeks imperceptibly as an incredible dream. There was no yesterday and no tomorrow.

Each dawn, Carol—awakening to fresh rapture—sighed. "This can't last a minute longer? Yet every night found them sleeping under the stars.

The weather remained perfect and their efforts to adapt themselves in their primitive conditions were crowned with almost miraculous success. They imported poultry and planted vegetables—and everything thrived. They even talked of getting a cow.

And as the days passed they learned that wealth is merely a question of relative expenditure and income. They were rich. Their small residue remained at the bank, untouched as the interest sufficed for their needs. Carol, who never passed a week without a mannequin display, dressed like her husband, in sleeveless sweater and shorts.

Both bore signs of the change. They scaled heavier, although they were in perfect physical trim. Carol's cheeks glowed like ripe apricots under her tan and Chris —a chocolate husk—looked her fitting mate.

Yet, although it was Eden, it was not perfect, while Christopher's jealousy persisted. He could not purge his heart of the old distrust. In the rosy canopy of sunset, he saw the remainder of the pink shaded flat.

Every day he questioned his wife about the possibility of visitors from the mainland. He was suspicious of her during his absence; he had known her as a beautiful worldling and he found it impossible to credit her with content without a sentimental stimulus.

The injustice fired Carol to a growing flame of resentment. There were times when she had to clench her hands, lest she strike the unworthy doubts from his lips with a blow.

. . . .

It was Chris who first glimpsed the dangers of this reversion to original type. One morning as he looked affectionately at the second helpings of bacon frizzling in the smoky pan, he made his complaint.

"Carol, do you remember we made a pact not to revert?'

"I do." Carol tossed her cropped hair, which shone like burnished feathers, guiltless of the trace of permanent wave. "We made a vow to look after our nails and not to drink with our mouths full. I know I'm the worst offender. What have I done now?"

"Something that must never happen again." Chris pointed an accusing finger at her. "Woman! You swam this morning with nothing on."

"Man! I'd the whole ocean on." Carol's laugh was shameless. "Besides, there was no one to see . . . But, you're right. Promise to hit me if I revert again!"

"Hit you? No blooming fear. That's rather too natural to be safe. We've got too near the bone."

Carol stared at him in surprise.

"What on earth d' you mean, Chris?"

"I mean we've got to guard against being too natural. All the time we've geen slipping back. We've left the middle ages far behind us and are somewhere in the Saxon era; at the present moment. But, if ever we lapse into savages, we shall never be able to live down the beastly shame. See?"

"I suppose so. The fact is there was never anything between me and a cave woman but a manicure and afternoon tea. But in future I promise to be a perfect little Victorian lady. What are you going to do today?"

Chris stopped in his occupation of tying food in a handkerchief.

"I'm off to the other side of the island to break up that old boat. Firewood for the winter. Bully. Pity we shan't be here then."

"No, of course, we shan't." They had to throw dust in the eyes of the jealous gods. "But we shall just go on living from day to day, until we wake up to find spring is here."

"Fathead. Say, Carol, I could build clinking winter quarters. My cave ancestor hadn't my advantages of trench warfare. Coming with me?"

Carol shook her head.

"No, I've other fish to fry. Will you be gone all day?"

"Yep."

For the first time he asked no questions. Of late he was deaf to his friends' warnings, because he was hearing the big voices —sea and wind—the call of the open.

Carol walked part of the way with her husband. Her eyes were filled with great content.

Rain had fallen in the night and the sea was a milky churn of gooseberry green. The wind blew from the pole.

"Perfect," she said.

The first signs of discontent showed in Christopher's face.

"We've made a scratch or two. Very tinpotty. I'd like to colonize on a big scale."

Carol went back, singing to her work. Weeks ago she had sown seeds in a secret hollow. She intended, today, to bed out her plants on a natural terrace above the sea. When Chris returned in the evening she would greet him with the surprise of a flower garden.

But—even then—the shadow of the devil lay black across the island.

. . . .

The devil—whose other name was John Brown—had made his money in chain grocery shops. While he was conducting his business, he was confident and pushing; but every social adventure plunged him into the native timidity.)

He lived quietly in a leafy eastern town, so that he was awed by the luxury of the Ocean Hotel, whenever he visited the coast.

On the occasion when he had entered a lady's bedroom, by accident, he had suffered agonies of confusion. At lunch the following day he saw the beautiful lady into whose privacy he had blundered and he was certain that she recognized him.

Fearful of complaint, he left the hotel within an hour.

However, during the summer he summoned up courage to pay many week-end vistis to the Ocean Hotel. He took a simple pleasure in being recognized by the manager and in finding that waiters coveted his service and tips.

One morning, toward the end of summer, he indulged in the novel adventure of hiring a rowing boat. After hours of prodigious exertion he sighted a desert island which he explored with the boyish zest of Robinson Crusoe.

He was blissfully clambering over the slippery rocks—barefoot and with trousers rolled to the knee—when he saw an object which made his timid heart beat faster.

It was a notice board which read: "PRIVATE, TRESPASSERS PROSECUTED."

As he mopped his brow, he heard the sound of a woman's singing. In desperate fright he slipped between two boulders and into a shallow pool of sea water.

Peering through the screen of seaweed, he watched the approach of the goddess of the island.

In spite of the change in her, he recognized her at once. She was more beautiful than ever, for she had sloughed the hard boredom of a woman of fashion like a castskin. In her eyes glittered the jubilance of the morning star.

"Oh, Lord!" muttered the devil. "Her! I've put my hoof in it again!"

When the sound of singing had died away into the distance he managed, by much hazardous scrambling over the rocks, to reach his boat by a short cut. It was not until his return to the hotel that he realized that the adventure had cost him dear.

He had lost his emerald ring. And since it might be anywhere in the pockets of seaweed which covered the rocks, or lying at the bottom of the sea, he accepted its recovery as hopeless.

. . . .

The ring might have lain, undiscovered for a thousand years but for the fact that the devil was in it all. Carol had conjured him up, so had to pay the price.

She found the ring gleaming in the bottom of her husband's private bait pool. Its discovery was the perfect finish to a wonderful day.

A recollection of the bad old days was connected with an emerald ring. She had coveted one which was displayed in a shop window, but Christopher refused to buy it for her. She was cut to the quick, not by his refusal, but by his words.

"Ask some other fool!"

She never forgot that he had played her so low.

Now this ring which glittered in Christopher's own treasury was testimony that he, too, remembered and wished to make amends. While she had been hugging her absurd little secret of the flower garden, he had planned a far more dramatic surprise.

She forgot her flowers and sat dreaming while the sun laid a golden pathway over the ocean. Presently she awoke to the fact that Chris would soon be home and find no dinner in the pot.

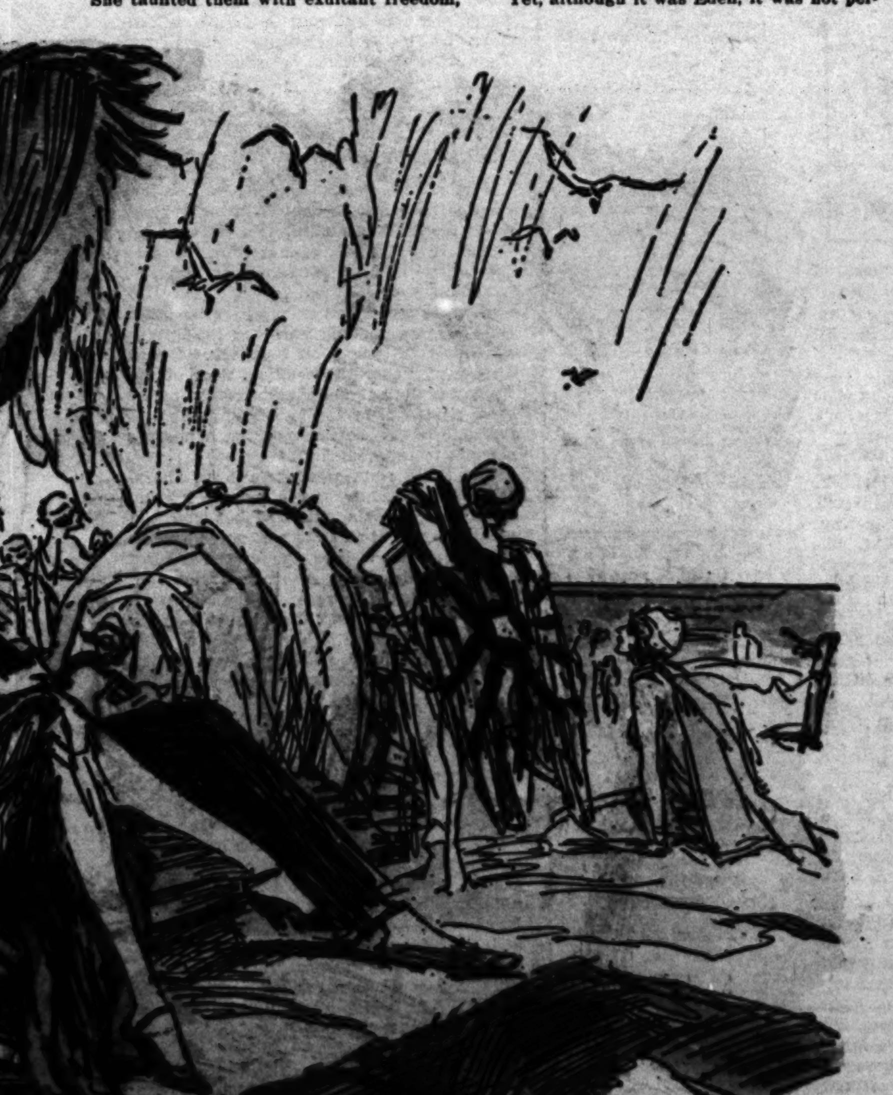
She did her best, but the devil was in it all. In her flurry she upset her pans and burned their contents. When Chris arrived —tired and hungry, thinking of the good meal which awaited him—he saw only a sketchy repast extracted from tins and smelt the odor of singed soup.

Carol almost choked him with the rapture of her greeting. His own response was but feeble, for he was still sad over the lost illusion of dinner.

"What's bitten you?" he asked. "You're all up the pole."

"This!"

He stared at the emerald lying on her



ionable farce of playing on the fringe of a tame ocean.

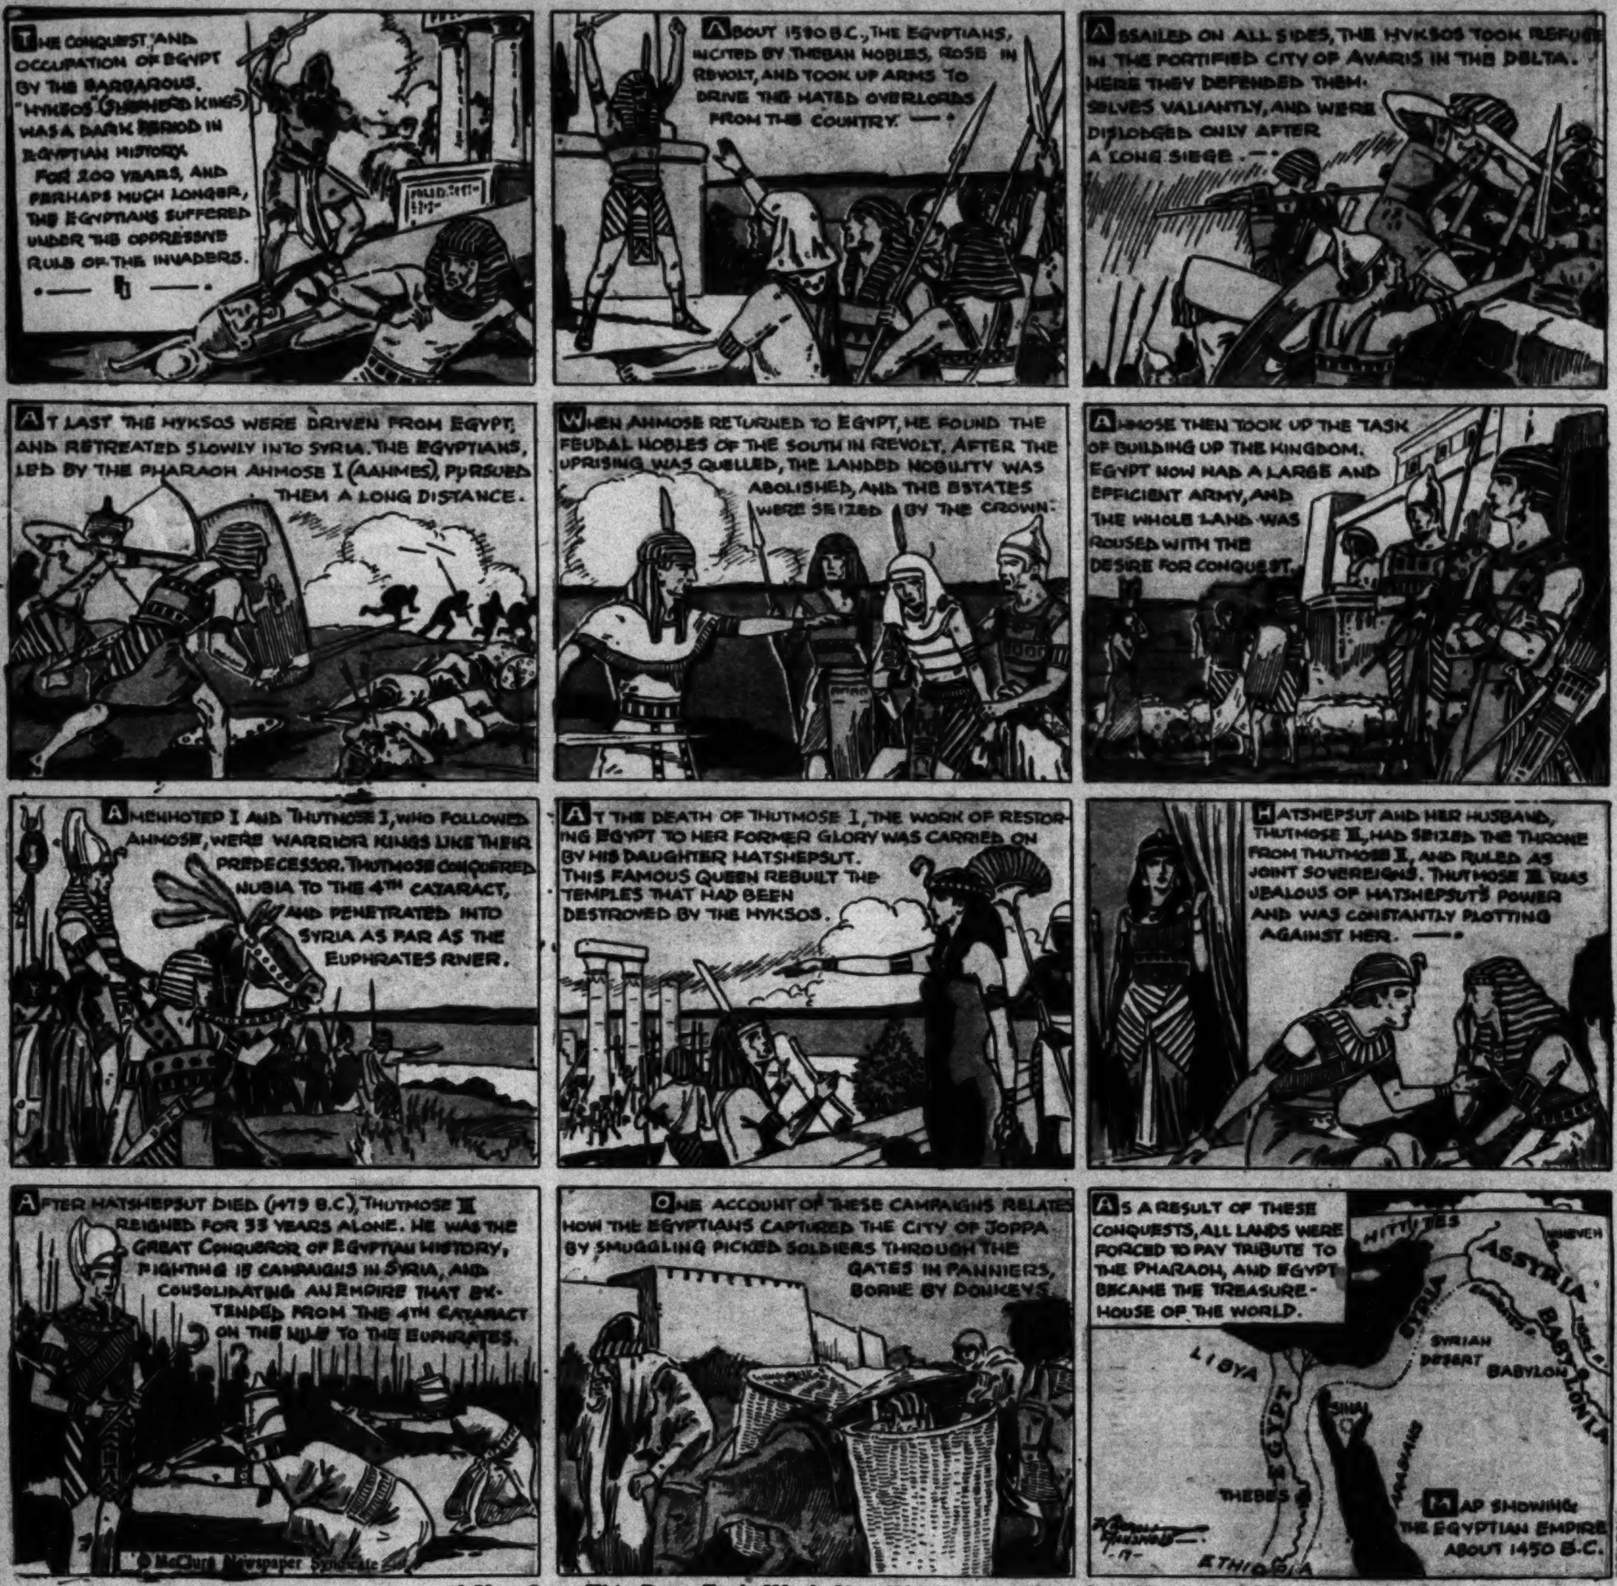
HIGH LIGHTS OF HISTORY

Warrior Kings of Ancient Egypt.

By J. CARROLL MANSFIELD



THE CONQUEST AND OCCUPATION OF EGYPT BY THE BARBAROUS "HYKSOS" (SHEPHERD KINGS) WAS A DARK PERIOD IN EGYPTIAN HISTORY. FOR 200 YEARS, AND PERHAPS MUCH LONGER, THE EGYPTIANS SUFFERED UNDER THE OPPRESSIVE RULE OF THE INVADERS.
ABOUT 1580 B.C., THE EGYPTIANS, INCITED BY THEBAN NOBLES, ROSE IN REVOLT, AND TOOK UP ARMS TO DRIVE THE HATED OVERLORDS FROM THE COUNTRY.
ASSAILED ON ALL SIDES, THE HYKSOS TOOK REFUGE IN THE FORTIFIED CITY OF AVARIS IN THE DELTA. HERE THEY DEFENDED THEMSELVES VALIANTLY, AND WERE DISLODGED ONLY AFTER A LONG SIEGE.
AT LAST THE HYKSOS WERE DRIVEN FROM EGYPT, AND RETREATED SLOWLY INTO SYRIA. THE EGYPTIANS, LED BY THE PHARAOH AHMOSE I (AAHMES), PURSUED THEM A LONG DISTANCE.
WHEN AHMOSE RETURNED TO EGYPT, HE FOUND THE FEUDAL NOBLES OF THE SOUTH IN REVOLT. AFTER THE UPRISING WAS QUELLED, THE LANDED NOBILITY WAS ABOLISHED, AND THE ESTATES WERE SEIZED BY THE CROWN.
AHMOSE THEN TOOK UP THE TASK OF BUILDING UP THE KINGDOM. EGYPT NOW HAD A LARGE AND EFFICIENT ARMY, AND THE WHOLE LAND WAS ROUSED WITH THE DESIRE FOR CONQUEST.
AMENHOTEP I AND THUTMOSE I, WHO FOLLOWED AHMOSE, WERE WARRIOR KINGS LIKE THEIR PREDECESSOR. THUTMOSE CONQUERED NUBIA TO THE 4TH CATARACT, AND PENETRATED INTO SYRIA AS FAR AS THE EUPHRATES RIVER.
AT THE DEATH OF THUTMOSE I, THE WORK OF RESTORING EGYPT TO HER FORMER GLORY WAS CARRIED ON BY HIS DAUGHTER HATSHEPSUT. THIS FAMOUS QUEEN REBUILT THE TEMPLES THAT HAD BEEN DESTROYED BY THE HYKSOS.
HATSHEPSUT AND HER HUSBAND, THUTMOSE II, HAD SEIZED THE THRONE FROM THUTMOSE II, AND RULED AS JOINT SOVEREIGNS. THUTMOSE III WAS JEALOUS OF HATSHEPSUT'S POWER AND WAS CONSTANTLY PLOTTING AGAINST HER.
AFTER HATSHEPSUT DIED (1479 B.C.), THUTMOSE III REIGNED FOR 33 YEARS ALONE. HE WAS THE GREAT CONQUEROR OF EGYPTIAN HISTORY, FIGHTING 15 CAMPAIGNS IN SYRIA, AND CONSOLIDATING AN EMPIRE THAT EXTENDED FROM THE 4TH CATARACT ON THE NILE TO THE EUPHRATES.

PRIZE-WINNING ESSAYS

Following are the two essays which were awarded first prize in the county schools' annual poster-and-essay contest:

WHICH ARE YOU

By Margery Bishop, Washington School, Bellflower.

Two little children had candy one day.
They both brushed their teeth before going to play.
But the difference, My! it was plain to be seen,
These two little twins named Bobby and Jeanne.
Now, Jeanne took her toothbrush pretty and clean
And with dental cream, healthy, white and plain
She brushed up and down, her gums around
And in back and top, till no spots of brown
Were left on her teeth. Her tongue she did clean,
And stray bits of food with the dental floss seemed
To come quite easily out of the cracks.
In fresh glass of water her toothbrush went back.
But the other twin, Oh, it was sad indeed,
His toothbrush a cleansing was greatly in need.
The dental cream harsh his teeth badly scratched,
And the stroke that he used was both forward and back.
His tongue he completely forgot, Dear me!
For such careless things should never be.
Now both of these kiddies are grown-ups now,
And all of Jeanne's teeth are perfect, I vow.
For her baby teeth all came out just as they should,
And her new teeth are even straight and good.
Jeanne brushed her teeth well as a child, you see,
So now they are clean as they ought to be.
But Bobby must go to the dentist I fear,
And have all those bad teeth out, is that clear?
Now, if he had done as his mother had taught,
He might not have the trouble the future years brought.
If a tooth was loose, Oh, my! how he'd cry
'Till to pull them his mother hated to try.
So now they are crooked and dirty, too,
And this is a lesson for me and you.
But Bobby has promised to keep his teeth clean,
And follow the plan of his sister Jeanne.

THE THIRD CHARMER

By Kathleen Nooman, Eighth Grade, Downey Grammar School, Downey.

On a vine-covered veranda of a small country hotel three men were talking on the subject of civilization. The tall, thin gentleman in the black coat related his experiences while living as a missionary in Boa-Boza, a remote and heathen land. He and his family had not only saved the souls of the tribe but had put clothes on their black bodies as well.

"Indeed," said the soap man, a clean-shaven, talkative fellow, "I heard of your activities there some years ago and went over with an extensive line of soaps. My family went with me and we canvassed the territory thoroughly. The natives found a real delight in cleaning. They had a perfect mania for laundry work and luckily my wife, who can foresee events, took along a supply of wash boards. The natives cut down on beads that year and invested in my products instead. They were compelled to cancel their order for pink toilet soap last season, however, as the children were crazy about eating it. The chief said such extravagance was criminal and contrary to the economic policy of the tribe. The council also cited the fact that there were sufficient cane stalks for the youngsters to chew and that it was ridiculous to gratify their whims. Moreover, three young girls who had developed abnormal appetites for the tin foil wrappings had fallen desperately ill. The medicine man declared evil spirits were imported by means of the foil and that in the future perfumed soaps in any form should be avoided. But even in spite of this drastic measure I can always count on a big order for yellow laundry soap each year so the ban on the pink variety in that district really didn't hurt my business." The salesman began searching through his pockets for definite statistics.

"Cleanliness," he went on, "is next to godliness." Here the soap man patted the minister on the shoulder. "A great work we've done and to you goes the honor of spiritual enlightenment. As for me, no doubt I'll be listed in political annals as the George Washington of Boa-Boza or the Hercules of the province. Old Here's undertaking, that of cleaning out the livery stable, was practically nothing compared with my clean-up campaign. Why, with sixteen cases of miracle soap I wiped out centuries of dirt. You can imagine—"

No one at this point could imagine anything for smoke began pouring out of the hotel kitchen. A call for volunteer fire-fighters and a shrill whistle of alarm terminated the speaker's narrative. His conversation had, however, given Mr. Bristle, the little traveling salesman and the third party of the group, a new and stimulating idea. He was a toothbrush agent and carried a supply of pastes and mouth washes as a side line. Business was a little dull just then, so he and Mrs. Bristle along with the four little Bristles set out for Boa-Boza.

Upon arrival they leased a grass hut on the outskirts of the village Pa Bristle, before rustling any orders, applied to the chief for a license to operate. The matter was taken up by the Council and unanimously disapproved of. The Medicine Man declared such actions might bring on untold miseries, and, since the tribe was getting along so well on soap and religion he saw no reason to antagonize the spirits. The assistant executioner was requested to notify the Bristles that their heads would come off by Saturday if they were still in the vicinity. This was distressing news, and Ma Bristle began firing clothes into the suit cases. She was in favor of making a hasty exit, but Pa said to take it easy as there were four days left in which to say farewell to Boa-Boza. Now, Mr. Bristle was an up-and-coming salesman. From his correspondence course he had gleaned some worth-while facts. One was to seize defeat by the ears and cut its throat right on the start. To be ousted from a territory so promising was more than he could bear. He figured that where there was soap there was hope and, on the strength of this calculation fell to making a desperate plan.

In the wee small hours of the morning just as the moon was rising above the cocoanut grove Mr. Bristle, with sample case in hand, stole into the royal chamber. All was quiet save the sound of regular breathing. He must be cautious as one false move might prove fatal. Fortunately, the Chief lay on his back with his mouth wide open, a gaping crater so to speak. The moonlight streaming across his face and as good luck would have it he suddenly began to snore—long, vicious vehement snorts. This was particularly welcomed by Mr. Bristle as the noise had a tendency to drown his own activities. He hurriedly opened his case, placed a sponge at the back of the Chief's mouth to catch the refuse and absorb the water that might otherwise dribble down his throat and cause him to awaken, and then proceeded to clean thirty-two remarkably dirty teeth. The process was thorough and brief. As a last act a pleasing antiseptic wash was used, the sponge removed and all was over. Mr. Bristle hastened across the banana field and all unbeknown to his family or any-one else slipped cautiously into his own grass hut.

When the Chief awoke next morning he was astounded at his exceedingly white teeth. His whole mouth seemed refreshed. He was delighted—so delighted that he dispatched messengers to the four corners of his little province offering a reward and great honor to the one who could shed any light upon the miraculous and mysterious doings of the night before. After a search the messengers returned but with no information. The Chief grew morose and despondent but after a time questioned his subordinates and discovered that a portion of his domain had been overlooked. In anger he ordered men to set out across the banana field and to scour every foot of the territory. Presently the messengers came upon a peculiar sight. Mr. and Mrs. Bristle and the four little Bristles were going through a mystic ceremony in the back yard. Handles protruded from each mouth. These were being propelled with the right hand of each individual. After some minutes of this exercise each expelled a mouthful of liquid. Next a cream-colored substance was rolled out from a peculiar little tube and spread upon each brush. The same queer performance was repeated on the other side of the respective jaws. The messengers found the process amusing and held their sides in laughter as they peered from their hiding places. When Mrs. Bristle's cheeks suddenly popped out like two round cocoanuts and began to show signs of motion, the head messenger could suppress his mirth no longer and with a whoop that coused poor Mrs. Bristle to swallow her mouth wash, he sprang into the clearing, seized Pa Bristle by the neck and dragged him before the Chief.

In fear and trembling the little salesman made a complete confession. Instead of calling the executioner the Chief, his heart swelling with gratitude, granted him a license to operate in Boa-Boza as long as he wished. He was invited to join the Council and take part in the royal feast. Every man, woman and child took up the toothbrush habit with even more vigor and enthusiasm than was shown for religion and laundry soap. Ever after, upon Mr. Bristle's yearly visits, he was welcomed with as much pomp and ceremony as was ever attributed a Roman hero.

pay should pay, but the members whose pocketbooks are sadly pinched, to whom bread and butter itself is a trying problem, become, of course, our dearest pals, and are never expected to donate funds at any time. Such members are carried on the sturdy shoulders of our Times Junior Club, out of the shadows into the sunlight.

One more point: From now on there will be alternate meetings for juniors and seniors. On the last Saturday of each month, a hi-jinks will be staged, first for one and then the other.

So that you will not be confused, let us set down the dates.

On Saturday evening, the 25th inst., our seniors will have another big doings. This is to be a hard-time party. Pretty frocks and white flannels are taboo. Ginghams rule and patched coats will be quite the thing. Of course, there will be surprises, queer refreshments, odd games, funny styles of dancings, one or two peppy contests. This promises to be one of our best features, so be sure to come on Saturday evening, the 25th inst.

Now we come to our juniors. Just for fun, on Saturday, July 30, we're going to have a fire-cracker party. That's heaps of fun. Everyone coming has to represent a sky-rocket, a package of sizzling crackers, torpedoes, or some article which has been used for years to help make July 4 a noisy, boisterous, happy day. There will be guessing games and spelling games and indoor bowling and dancing and an entertainment and more fun than you've had in all your life, so chalk that date on your good-time slate. Saturday, July 30, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, is the time set for our hi-jinks.

Also remember: juniors run from 7 years of age to 13; seniors, 13 to 21 or a little over!

Both groups must secure tickets to attend our affairs. Now we must consider our seniors again. Their jubilee rolls around on Saturday, August 27, and this is going to be some party, as the boys say. Time will melt away, finding ourselves in the days of '49, when milady sported ruffled skirts and sunbonnets. There will be miners and cowboys, Indians and big-game hunters, sawdust on the floor, and an honest-to-gosh '49 orchestra, with an organ such as they used, a fiddler in red shirt sleeves and boots and plenty of guns. As for surprises, you'd better hold your breath. This is going to be an exact reproduction of a real '49 party, and of course you know excitement rode high in those days. Some thrill? Well, I guess!

Doors will always open sharp at 8:15 p.m., so tuck that information securely away.

On September 24, we are planning a surprise, a delightful one, so we cannot jot down full details. A hint will suffice. One thing is sure, however, our fall season will open with a bang, and September 24 is the date. Better watch this column or disaster will overtake you. There's so much going on, and so many plans under way, you'll miss $1,000,000 worth of fun, if you don't keep in close touch with us.

But we want heaps of new friends enrolled this week, not only now, but every day. We want our membership to climb like the summer thermometer. If you are not a registered member, better look us up at once or send a letter to Aunt Dolly, care of The Junior Times, and you will receive a nice yummy letter in return.

Another thing, unless otherwise announced, our big parties will be held in the beautiful twin halls of the Southern California Manufacturers' Exhibit, Southwest Building, 130 South Broadway. Those behind this big exhibit have kindly donated the use of their halls to our organization and many of the exhibitors are also co-operating. For instance, at our recent affairs, ice cream suckers were donated for all by the Good Humor Ice Cream Company of Hollywood and Sparkletts artesian water was supplied free of charge by another Hollywood concern.

Charged with collecting fees from nonmembers for playing on the links, the starter of the Eastwood Golf Club near Dundee, Scotland, was recently sent to jail.

Fishermen at Dunkirk, N. Y., caught 3300 pounds of whitefish in one afternoon through the ice in Lake Erie.

QUESTION BOX

merely a question of constant watching, that and gaining ~~your~~ sister's confidence. Then again, you will have to handle the boys who deliberately go against your wishes. As long as they are calling for your sister and defying your commands, there will be havoc.

Better have a long chummy talk with Madge and point ou the fact that the two of you must pull together, just as thoroughbreds do, or results will be poor. Co-operation in all things becomes a necessity if we are to win.

There are other things in life beside jazz. It is a tremendous proposition, this daily existence of ours, and we have to be right on the job in order to conquer. This is what youth forgets. Golden opportunity lays her horn of plenty in our lap but once. We are not 17 forever; nor are our chances always equally good. To fritter away precious years and worth-while endeavor, when we could be gleaning a rich harvest, is the most foolish thing a person can do. But this is the mirage of youth. They figure on eternal pep; plenty of chances to make good—tomorrow! That, however, is not true. The eternal now is the only time we should reckon with. Tomorrow there may be a drastic change in our life to undo or do over the things we have neglected.

Point this out to Madge, and also I think I would lay down the law pretty firmly. If my advice has not helped you, get in touch with me, please, Don.

All my love,

AUNT DOLLY.

PARTIES FOR SENIORS AND JUNIORS ARRANGED; SURPRISES COMING

Every so often it seems necessary to extend an invitation to young folks to join our club, attend our dances and club meetings. Although our Junior Times holds an unending amount of information regarding activities, the public seems at a loss to know what our aim is. Therefore, we will set down briefly the whys and wherefores of our Times Junior Club.

To begin with, ours is a character-building organization whose membership covers the entire globe.

Our Junior Times is a top-notcher. This may sound like an egotistical statement, but buy other "junior" publications on newstands and compare them with ours. Two years ago, when I went to New York and Chicago, I was besieged by reporters asking me how I secured such high-grade art and literary work. The answer is simple: I accept only the best. The same may be said of members.

Undesirables are requested to give up their cards. They are a detriment to our club, not an asset. We do not want them.

Our Times Junior Club, as it stands today boasts two divisions, juniors and seniors; it has an art section, a dramatic club, a literary division, everything to interest wide-awake youngsters. The question is: Are you taking advantage of the many chances laid at your feet?

There's fun aplenty in The Times Junior Club, parties and meetings and picnics and heaps of good times for those wearing our white-and-crimson buttons.

There is also such a surprising amount of pleasant instruction and helpful guidance when it comes to art and literary work. Our club may well be likened to a huge apprentice shop, where youth is given its chance with a smile.

Another thing: Children in sorrow or perplexity have found many hours of comfort when confiding in Aunt Dolly. Their problems have vanished in the air, and everything has come right. If your heart is burdened, or you feel in doubt about school tangles, home quarrels, business complications, etc., turn to the pal who will never fail. A letter to Aunt Dolly means another smile coming your way. Fear will be banished and joy reign.

Concerning our dues, let us make this point clear. Those who can

Aunt Dolly's Question Box

Dearest Aunt Dolly:

One more perplexed boy who is asking help through the channels of your question box. You will give it I know, as not a youngster in the world has been turned down yet.

Here's my fix. Mother died three years ago, and dad is an engineer on the railroad, which leaves my sister and myself pretty much alone.

We have a tiny home, close to the wood yards, and while the neighborhood is none too good, it serves the purpose. I have quit school, but Madge is plowing through high. I do so want her to finish.

Question is: I'm worried about her. She's in with a set that I don't like, and although she knows we have very little money, keeps making unfair demands. Madge is 15 and I am 18, but I feel ten years older than my sister. The crowd she is in with makes my blood boil. It's nothing but parties and rides, and fellows trying to take her to the beach. Last week I beat up two boys, but this can't go on forever. I'm at my wits ends and worried sick. Why in the world is the world so jazz mad, Aunt Dolly? It doesn't give youth a chance to keep its feet on the earth.

Please help me dear pal. I need you.

Lovingly,
[Signed] DON.

Smiles! Those fleeting, magic little somethings, all powerful they are, lifting from darkest despair to greatest happiness, and again, overshadowing with blackest gloom.

Smiles there are, oceans and oceans of them, empty, or full of joy, shallow, or deliciously refreshing. The fawning smile of the parasite and the ever present, meaningless smile of the popularity seeker; the cruel smile of sarcasm and the crooked smile of hypocrisy; all these are smiles.

Then there is the smile of sympathetic understanding, the smile of good fellowship, the smile of a true and loving friend that sends a sparkle to the eye and a song to the lips; the smile that comes straight from the heart!

Yes, there are smiles and smiles. Which smile is yours?

AWARD SPECIAL STORY PRIZES

BESSIE PHILIPSON IS WINNER IN LETTER-OF-CRITICISM CONTEST

By vote of our readers, the story awards in our literary roll-of-honor contest of May 15 go to Dorothy Jane Tetsall, 214 East Fifty-first street, Los Angeles, and Roberta McPherrin, 1654 Golden Gate avenue, Los Angeles. The letter-of-criticism award was won by Bessie Philipson, 1047 North Figueroa street, Los Angeles. Her prize-winning letter, with another of interest, follows:

Dearest Aunt Dolly:

In criticising the stories this week, I'm going to tell many bad points as well as good.

In the story of the California mission tiles by Alice Marie Berry, I found myself wondering whether the story is true or fiction. If it is one of her own invention, I must congratulate Alice on her originality. It was very well written.

In the next story, "Why Roses Are Like They Are," by Frances Ames, I did not like the wording of the title. I would suggest "How the Rose Got Its Colors" or "The Story of the Rose."

I enjoyed "The Story of the Pine," by Cabolyn Lyman, except for two things. I can't understand how Diana arrived at the big pine tree so soon. This was not explained very clearly. Also I think it unreasonable that such a valuable prize be given just for the best essay of the English classes of one school. Usually such an award is given if the contest is interscholastic. Otherwise the story was fair reading matter.

The story I liked best was "Mrs. Tabby of Pumpkinville Lane," by Dorothy Jane Tetsall. The beginning and ending were both good, and the story itself was interesting. If I am not mistaken, this was the first story ever published in the Junior illustrating the intelligence and feelings of a cat. But I am going to point out one little mistake that almost every person makes. (I do it myself when I do not think.) In this story Tabby was terribly, terribly tired. Do you ever stop to think what this means? Was Tabby so tired that she was struck with terror? No. She was only very tired. This mistake is usually made with the words awfully, frightfully, horribly, dreadfully, etc. It would be a good plan that each reader check up how many times he misuses these words.

Sincerely yours,
[Signed] BESSIE PHILIPSON,
1047 North Figueroa street, Los Angeles.

Dear Aunt Dolly:

Our Junior Times of May 15 contained some very clever and unusual stories. All of them were, I feel, very well written, but, considering every point, I think that "Her S. L.," by Roberta McPherrin, had the greatest sum total of good points.

Although this story was not so much a fairy tale as some of the others, its writing required idea, enterprise and imagination. The author must possess all three of these qualities. The style is simple, straightforward and clear. The ideas are presented in correct order and a well-balanced, unified story results.

Most of all, the story is fresh and youthful. The description of the romance of a freshman is natural, sincere and real. The story is a story of youth, written by youth, and should be, because of this youth, attractive to everyone. I enjoyed it. Congratulations, Roberta!

Sincerely your niece,

LOVELY NIGHT
BY BERNICE GIBBS

Night is a lovely lady,
Slim, silver-haired, violet-eyed,
Gracefully garbed in clinging sapphire robes,
Diamond-studded.
Her breath is the fragrance of jasmine
Wafted on a soft summer breeze,
Her footfall the autumnal rustle of falling crimson leaves.

POETRY
BY ROSEMARY WIESS

You brought me a white rose today,
Kissed its cool living petals,
Absorbed its scented soul;
Which slipped into my being
And gave me a new and wondrous
Love of poetry . . . .
Of poetry sweet as honey
That must, like honey, be taken in drops
As the bee takes it from the heart of the flower.
Of poetry poignant
As the slow rending apart
Of two hearts that have grown together. . . .
Of poetry enticing as a glass of rich old wind
That fills my mind with a tumult of thoughts
Of tangible desires and dreams
That might have been made in heaven.

Dear Aunt Dolly:

When I opened your blue envelope and found that $1 bill inside I almost fell over. It was the most pleasant surprise I ever experienced and came out of a clear sky. The encouragement is as good as the money, so I am inclosing another poem which I hope may have as good fortune as the last one. With lots of thanks, I am,

Sincerely,
[Signed] FERNE MARCY.

OH, THE GLORY OF A TREE!

Oh, beautiful and stately pine,
Your branches towering high,
Your roots in nature's carpet,
Your needles in the sky.
It set's my heart a-flutter
When I look to you above,
And the flowers at your footstool
Seem to revel in your love.

All the elements of nature
Are within your boughs contained,
The courage and the gentleness,
The love are all maintained.

The gale will always find you
Full of courage and of power,
The bird will find a homesite
For his mate upon your bower.

With your foot upon the threshhold
Of the centuries to come,
Your leaves may sing the melody
Your soul has yearned to hum.

Of the gifts which God has given us
This world to beautify,
We love the best the forests
And the mournful songs they sigh.

So our hearts will beat the faster
When we gaze upon a tree,
If we leave it in its glory
For posterity to see.

Aunt Dolly's Letter Box

Aunt Dolly, dear:

Must write you a letter of appreciation, small as it may seem. I often wonder if T.J.C. members write in, voicing their approval, and vice versa. If they don't, their club spirit is low; that's all I have to say.

I just want to tell the world at large that I'm an old pioneer member, (joined in 1923,) and each year, each day, that rolls by, I see growth and progress in the T.J.C. It's one "wow" of a club, and I for one, just couldn't get along without it. You know what I mean: it's kind of wound itself around my heartstrings. There's something so comfy and wholesome about this club; it's not like any other I've run across. The spirit is different entirely.

Well, I suppose I'm boring you, but down in my heart I think you'll smile, and say, "Atta boy, Roy! that's the stuff." More members should write in, I think.

Ever your devoted Pioneer,
[Signed]
ROY E. CLEMENT,
245 Ocean View,
Venice.

Aunt Dolly, dear:

May I please join your wonderful club? The more I attend your parties and good times, the harder I boost the T.J.C. You see, I was one of your honorary guests, brought in by Shirley Mason, and I do want to send you a letter of appreciation.

I don't know anyone who would do the many kind things you do, dear Aunt Dolly, and so I want to give my tiny little mite in return.

May I become a real T.J.C. member and worker? I promise to keep your rules to the letter, and attend every meeting you hold. Who wouldn't? They are simply fascinating.

The peachy party you held in the Southwest Building decided me. I think it was just marvelous. Never had such a good time in all my life.

Please, Aunt Dolly dear, do write me soon, and mail that badge and button. I'm impatient as can be, just rarin' to go, as the cowboys say.

Every your devoted, true-blue niece,
[Signed]
MARGARET FILEY,
2456 West Adams street.

Dearest pal:

My, but I had a marvelous time when I came down to your clubrooms and met you last week. Perhaps you don't remember me. I am one of your cartoonists, kind of long and lean, with sandy-colored hair. (Not another member could be quite as homely as myself, so you surely must remember me.)

Well, anyway, I neglected to get my badge and button, and so am wondering if you'd be kind enough to mail them to me. I'm one of your hick nephews, live way off in Cucamonga, and so would appreciate receiving a little "hello" to relieve the monotony.

Am drawing heaps of comic strips, but please do not think I am working for cash prizes. Just the honor of seeing them published in your wonderful magazine would be an overwhelming joy, and I want you to really know that I mean it.

Everyone around here is 100 per cent T.J.C., and I am sure, dear pal, if you shipped me a flock of your famous red buttons I could distribute them with ease.

Another thing, we've always taken other papers, but not now. It's The Times for us. Any paper that backs a movement like this, wins!

Please, write soon, if you love me.
[Signed]
JOE RALSTON,
Box No. 436, Cucamonga.

Dear Aunt Dolly:

I don't know how I could thank you for having accepted me as a new member of The Times Junior Club. I think it is the best club in the world. Inclosed are my club dues, for I want to help the children that are in need. I am interested in your art department, so I am inclosing one of my pictures.

Lovingly yours,

Where Garden Charm and Education Are Met Together

By Frances Duncan

Left—In the formal garden at Laurel School Center the perennial border is in lavender and pink, with touches of white and yellow. The gate at its foot opens into the rose garden.

Trim, flower-bordered paths divide the garden, and cross-paths separate it into plots, where grow perennials for testing, also chrysanthemums, gladioli and irises in many varieties.

IT IS possible, perhaps, to learn milking in a correspondence school and navigation on an isolated farm, but gardening is a handicraft, as well as a science. To learn it when not in touch with Mother Earth is so unsatisfactory that it ought to be impossible.

Wherefore, the announcement that a summer course in gardening is promised at the Elementary Agricultural Center at East Forty-first Street, Los Angeles, under the direction of Dr. Clayton Palmer is good news to all lovers of good gardening. The course is given at the Center and, beginning June 25, lasts until August 2.

Nowhere in these United States, it is safe to say, can one get better training in school garden work than at these centers in Los Angeles. Nowhere have I seen it taught with so wide a range, with so much vision, so much variety of interest. The course is designed for those who desire to teach gardening, for those already teaching who would fain do it better, and for "those who desire a more intimate acquaintance with the commoner biological processes," which last, I take it, may be construed to mean that those who desire to learn the rudiments of gardening will there have an opportunity to learn, whether or no they intend to teach gardening, and irrespective of age, sex, or previous condition.

Heretofore there have been garden courses, given by able teachers, but these have been in a lecture room in a busy section of the city. Therefore, to have it taught at a school garden, and at such delightful school gardens as Los Angeles has, is an advantage so rare one grabs it. Here are plants in all stages of growth; here all the gardening operations may be seen; here is commercial horticulture; here training in the intelligent use of ornamentals. And the teaching is in a garden atmosphere—delphiniums abloom, garden-paths edged with pansies, a lath house that isn't a miniature model or a book illustration, but the workaday affair which is an essential part of a real nursery. Quite likely, Dr. Palmer will find that he has overflow classes and that his coadjutors at Laurel, Hammel, and other centers might need to take over groups.

Doubtless it is quite unorthodox, but one would like to see a class held at true gardener's hours. Henry Finck, he of the delightful "Gardening with Brains," is accustomed to work for two or three hours in his Maine garden before breakfast. It's a common practice with gardeners. There's a rare charm about the early morning; one has the birds for company and all else is exquisite stillness. Everything is fresh, lovely and unspoiled.

Consider, also, the benefit to the figure. Why might not a brigade of those ladies whom costume advertisers pleasantly characterize as "stylish stouts," take this occasion to amend their figures, and by the admirable exercises of weeding, hoeing, trundling the wheelbarrow, increase their knowledge as they decrease their weight? There are to be volunteer workers during the summer in the children's gardens. Why not groups of volunteer grown-ups?

More women know how to dress a child tastefully than know how to care intelligently for his physical well-being, and by the same token, more amateurs know what would look well in the garden, than how to make the plants thrive. It is the lack of knowledge of the rudiments of plant culture that causes suffering in the garden.

Aside from the chance of attending classes, no small profit may be obtained by using these gardens as small botanic gardens—which, in a sense, they are. Here are plants of wide range and many varieties all properly and legibly labeled. If visitors became over-numerous and worried the teacher, one or two of the more competent children could have the job of custodian, and see to it that visitors found what they sought.

It's an unusual opportunity. Those interested should inquire of the Dean of the University of California.

School Garden Has Real Charm

Folk who are unacquainted with our school gardens should take a walk, for instance, in that lovely and very flowery one at the Laurel Center on Santa Monica Boulevard and Fairfax Avenue, West Hollywood. Here, those who are worried about What Our Children Are Coming To, will see lads of the most difficult age happily employed in a garden that is fairly radiant.

Somewhat after the Elizabethan type are the trim, flower-bordered walks which divide the garden, the ordered squares of lovely flowers, blue delphiniums of the Vanderbilt strain, snapdragons in dark garnet and pale yellow, tall splendid spikes of gladioli in beautiful colors. Some of the paths are bordered with deep blue lobelia, which gives a charming note of color, some with yellow pansies, some with violet colored ones. On the woven wire fence which makes the boundary on two sides are flowering vines of various sorts, roses, passion flowers, bignonia. After the delphiniums pass and the gladioli, come phlox and chrysanthemums, and dahlias.

The year begins with the bulb beds near the building; then come the irises, which are of many and beautiful sorts—San Gabriel, Avalon, Isoline, and many another beauty. Just as most of the irises are passing, the roses are in their prime. And these, as befits roses, are in a trim little garden by themselves. A privet hedge, beautifully clipped, surrounds it, a grass path with stepping-stones runs down its midst, and on each side are roses of fine sorts—Claudius Pernet, Los Angeles, Hadley and many another in a fine state of cultivation. In fact, one of the pleasantest aspects of this garden is the evident well-being of the plants.

An interesting feature is the long border of native Californian plants. Here are the lovely desert flowers which, in earliest spring, make this strip in the garden a very jewel of color in lovely forms; there are holly and ceanothus; there are groupings of plants according to their similarity of leaf texture.

The length of the garden, beside the boundary fence, runs a long border of perennials. These are planted not to make a display, but here is "something doing" at whatever time of the year one looks. This garden must be a source of pure delight to the youngsters who work in it. To my mind, the happiest part of a country child's education in old New England, is the daily walk to school; the familiarity with one bit of roadside, with its endless changes, its unfailing interest. Always there is some new phase to notice, some lovely thing has just appeared, from the first bloodroot to the last fringed gentian. It is this delight which one daily path may hold, this charm in the changing year and what it brings, that has been kept for the child at Laurel Center. No boy or girl can help but know when the baby-blue-eyes come out and when the holly berries begin to show red. I am aware that this is considered absolutely aside from proper school garden work, nevertheless, to the child it is of high value.

For all its beauty, a wide range of activities is carried on at Laurel School. The garden was designed by Ernest Nies, well-known landscape architect, who is supervisor of this and several other gardens, and undoubtedly the border is his planning. Mrs. S. M. Morgan has had charge of the work with ornamentals and of the propagating, and C. E. Warner, of the fruit trees and vegetables.

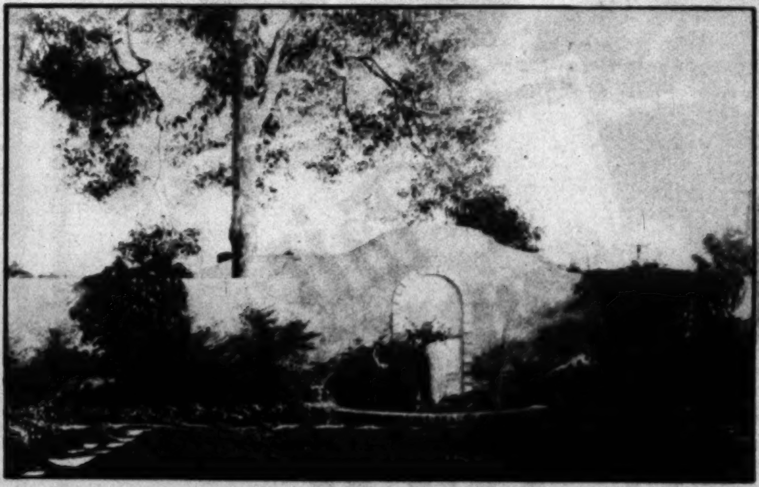
Aside from the really lovely aspect of the place, the charm of its flower-bordered paths, its flowery little plots, there is carried on here a wide variety of work; each square plot does its bit and more than its bit. As soon as the gladioli are past—which will be very soon—annuals will be planted to take their places and the bulbs left in the ground to be comfortably cared for by Mother Earth—who is, in this case, quite capable. Where bulbs are fading, little plants of annuals from the lath-house are being set out. In short, instead of the lock-step practice and garden experience limited to a few vegetables, the child learns the interweaving of garden work exactly as it is done in a good private garden—a thing that school garden children elsewhere rarely get. On rainy days there is plenty of work in the lath house. Here seedling trees are raised for reforestation, in which Los Angeles school children are playing so admirable a part; here are infant sycamores, liveoaks, pines, plane trees, jacaranda for street planting, and many others.

Next the street there is a delightful little formal garden, enclosed by a privet hedge, a broad grass path down the center and on either side a planting irregular in effect but actually alike on both sides and with groupings recurring regularly. Against the hedge are hollyhocks, pale yellow hemerocallis, blue sage, nepeta, here and there a touch of milk-white phlox, and a low border of deep blue lobelia. This planting with its varying tones of blues, gray-blue in foliage, yellow in the pale lilies, is charming; charming, too, is the broad grass path.

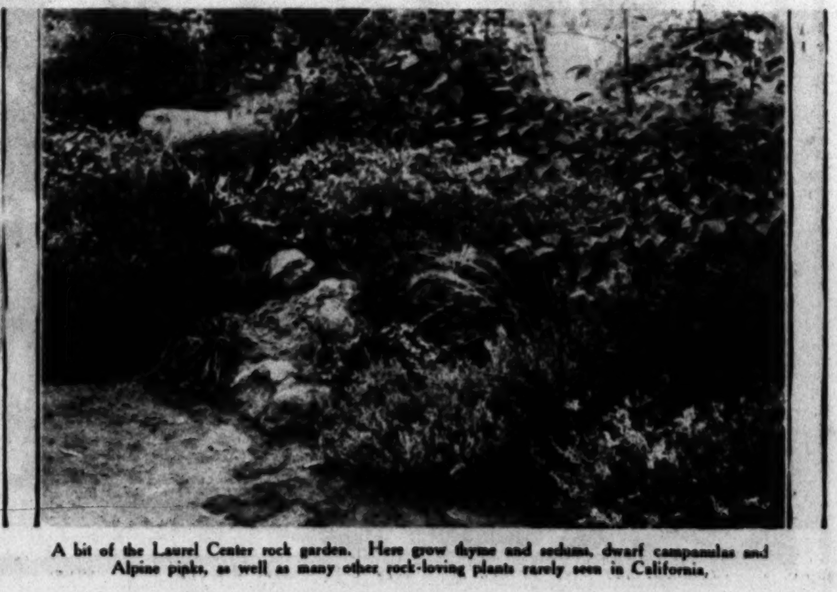
The patio is singularly restful, with its semi-circular pool and the curved panel and decorative deep blue jar, which form the terminus of what the landscape architect would call the major axis. Blue is the jar, and there are many blue flowers in the planting; underfoot is thick, soft green sward of clover and in the pool are water lilies, water hyacinth, papyrus, and other water plants. Here, also, one may see a blackbird take his bath.

East of the building is a charming rock garden. A real rock garden this, with rock-loving plants. Here are thyme, nepeta, sedums of many sorts, saponaria, heuchera, armeria, dwarf hypericum reptans, dwarf campanulas, Alpine pinks and many other lovely things, and a young birch tree to give it just enough shade.

Children of our day have so much that is noisy and garish; even gardens at times scream as vociferously with jarring color as a loud speaker with sounds. One feels sincere gratitude for this garden, for its quietness, its sweet and pleasant flowers.



A wall of the charming little patio at Laurel Center, showing the decorative panel, jar and semi-circular pool where are water lilies and other aquatics. The planting is simple, chiefly of flowers varying in shades of blue in the border beds; stepping-stones make the path, and the rest is as beautiful greensward as one can find in Southern California.



A bit of the Laurel Center rock garden. Here grow thyme and sedums, dwarf campanulas and Alpine pinks, as well as many other rock-loving plants rarely seen in California,

Hot Weather Helps for Inmates of the Poultry Yard

Under the grateful shade of the peach trees these biddies find the summer weather in the San Joaquin Valley as comfortable as they could wish.

This Atascadero lath house admits plenty of air all the time and yet there are no drafts, prolific causes of summer colds in flocks.

Palm fronds and tule mats help deflect the rays of the sun in the poultry houses and yards of Imperial Valley chicken raisers.

It's as cool and comfortable inside as it looks. With such pleasant quarters the layers don't need any vacations in summer.

The hotter it is, the more water chickens need. This sanitary drinking fountain in an Upland plant is but one of many types which provide hens with cooling drinks at all times.

A load of greens for a Lomita flock. Green feed is needed the year 'round and is never more essential than in warm weather.

It's a Laboratory Job, Growing Orchids

The Propagation of These Fastidious Flowers Is No Task for a Tyro—Tiny Seeds Are Sprouted in Sealed Bottles—Years Pass Between Sowing and Perfect Bloom

By HELEN W. KING

IT IS hard to think of anything as exotic in character, and as definitely in the luxury class as an orchid, in terms of commercialism. We are accustomed to seeing them, a single bloom generally, as the chief adornment of some florist's window. Orchid corsages and bouquets are reserved for very special occasions, for they are scarce and they are costly. We realize, rather vaguely, that someone has to grow them, but we can hardly conceive of their production on a large scale in greenhouses where the blooming plants run into the hundreds and the developing plants are counted by thousands. Yet we have a concern, at our very door, producing these fragile blooms on such a scale.

While orchid plants were first brought into this country in 1840, they were mostly bought by wealthy individuals who grew them in their private greenhouses for their own pleasure. It took the quarantine measure known as No. 37, which became effective in 1919, to lend inpetus to the commercial production of this plant and get the growers interested in developing both quantity and quality in this flower. This measure stopped the importation of orchid plants into the United States from the tropics, in an attempt to prevent the entrance of certain diseases and pests which were known to infect them in their native haunts.

If this government had not put such an embargo on the orchid, it is very likely that South American countries would have taken some steps to stop the gathering of the plants for export purposes. It takes years to produce one of these plants to the flowering point, even in the tropics. An orchid plant will sow somewhere in the neighborhood of one-half to three-quarters of a million seeds, but scientists declare that about one in a hundred million mature in nature. The seeds are so fine as to be almost invisible to the naked eye, and they can be blown away, smothered, devoured by insects, or otherwise prevented from developing. In districts contiguous to the ports, the orchid plant is practically extinct, and expeditions for the purpose of securing this plant, must penetrate the jungle interiors of the countries where they grow.

Contrary to general belief, orchids are more hardy in habit than numbers of other tropic plants. They are found at their best, at levels of 6000 to 8000 feet, where the temperature has a mean average of 70 deg. in the daytime and falls to 60 deg. at night. Very often a light snow will fall on the blooms, disappearing in an hour or so, without harming the plants. This hardiness is what has made this exotic a practical flower for commercial culture, and it is declared by some scientists that there are now more orchid plants in the greenhouses of England and America than in all of the tropics to which they are native.

CULTURAL METHODS

Very little was known about the culture of these plants for many years. In 1840, European scientists found that a certain fungus was always associated with the roots of orchids, and later, a French scientist, M. Noel Bernard, determined the fact that the presence of this fungus made possible the germination and normal growth of the seedling. The result of these discoveries was the development of two cultural methods, known as the "symbiotic" and the "nonsymbiotic." The first method, which means the living together of two organisms, was sowing of seed on prepared cultures to which had been added the fungi taken from the living orchid roots. It is the method generally used in Europe and has proved very successful.

The second method, one by which seeds are germinated without the fungal infection, was originated by Prof. Lewis Knudson of Cornell University. He discovered that the main function of the fungi was to digest the starches into sugar, so, like many a dietitian dealing with the human race, he eliminated starch from the orchid's bill-of-fare and sowed the seed on a sterile culture of agar-agar to which had been added a nutritious solution containing cane sugar.

This method was thoroughly proven as to practicability, and the results attracted the interest of Walter Armacost of Armacost & Royston, a firm growing nursery stock and hothouse roses, whose plant is at Sawtelle, near Los Angeles. A number of years before, Mr. Armacost had seen an exhibit of orchids at a San Francisco flower show and had been greatly attracted to the flower. A salesman from an English concern called upon him later, with colored plates showing the wide range of type and color to be had in these plants, and also showing what could be expected in the future from the orchid plant if it were properly hybridized. Mr. Armacost ordered a few for his own pleasure.

Not long after this, B. O. Bracey, an Englishman, veteran of the World War, came to see Mr. Armacost. He had, like his father before him, been employed on a great estate in England to grow orchids. He had come to California to grow oranges, but found the call back to his old line of work very insistent. He greeted Mr. Armacost's few plants like long-lost friends. Remembering something about the new method Prof. Knudson had discovered, commercial possibilities suggested themselves to Mr. Armacost and he made a proposition to Mr. Bracey. The result is, that under the care of the English expert and his brother, the business has grown and developed. Mr. Armacost recently sent his orchid man on a trip throughout the eastern centers of such production and on over to England, in search of new angles, advancements of method, and fine stud plants for hybridizing activities.

When orchid production was decided upon by Mr. Armstrong, Prof. Knudson was brought out here from the East and he remained long enough to thoroughly instruct Mr. Bracey in the science of his nonsymbiotic method. A laboratory was installed and production put under way. By this method, orchids are literally raised "on the bottle."

The sterile agar-agar culture is put in the bottom of a glass flask, nutriment is supplied, and the thoroughly sterilized seed is sown on top of the jelly. The flasks are covered over and kept on shelves in an incubation house, where a definite degree of temperature is maintained. The seed live within the flask for six or eight months, after which they are removed to colony pots filled with peat fiber. From this stage onward, they are grown in the open greenhouse.

This transfer from flask to greenhouse, is the critical stage. In the early days of the work, it is said, fully 95 per cent of the seedlings were lost. With perfection of equipment and operations, a point has now been reached where less than 5 per cent loss occurs. This makes possible the production of enormous quantities of seedlings.

Some seeds require a year to germinate and come to the point of transference to the greenhouse, some take two years. It depends somewhat upon the variety of the plant. It is all of six months before the seedling can be taken from the community pot and put in a single pot, and from then on, it is shifted every six or eight months to pots half an inch larger. The majority do not come to blooming short of five or six years, but orchid seedlings have been brought to flower at the Armacost & Royston plant in four years and three months, which is declared to be an absolute record.

An orchid will bear from one to three blossoms in its first year and after that, with proper care, will bloom indefinitely, once or twice a year, bearing an increasing number of flowers as the plant ages. The choicer specimens are used as parent plants, some of the stud plants in the Sawtelle establishment being valued by the grower at $500 apiece. These were imported from England and are particularly fine specimens of their variety. It is with these that the work of hybridization is being carried forward, in a constant search for new beauties and greater commercial values. Great advances have been made over the plant as it comes from the tropics, lovely as it is there, and new colors and features are being developed every year.

A GORGEOUS SORT

There are over six hundred varieties grown, but the one known as the Cattleya is the commercial favorite, this being unequaled for size and beauty of flower and color range. They are excellent keepers. A bloom will last as long after being cut as it will if left on the plant, ten days being given as the usual period a flower will keep its freshness.

There are some three dozen establishments in the United States growing orchids which have 5000 plants or over, this local firm and one in Seattle being the only ones west of the Rockies. The Sawtelle company has 8000 bearing plants, with 5000 more coming into bearing this year and over 200,000 seedlings in the greenhouses. It is impossible to estimate, of course, what the "incubator" crop will be.

To quote Mr. Armacost, "California climate lends itself to the growing of Cattleyas from seed, for the abundance of sunshine during all months of the year reduces the use of artificial heating to a minimum and gives the plants the advantage of natural sun heat. It is this that helps us lessen the usual time required to bring seedlings to flower."

Another thing which this company is working toward is the possible development of a perpetual Cattleya. The perpetual rose and the perpetual carnation have both been developed in recent years, and this dream may prove something other than the impossibility it is commonly regarded. One thing is certain—nothing but experimentation and effort will determine the limits of hybridizing possibilities, and California is evidently a good place to conduct this work.

One thing remains for us to see, certainly, and that is, if these lovely flowers can be produced on a commercial scale that will ever bring their prices within shooting range of most of us. As long as such laborious and lengthy processes are entailed in their production, it is possible to understand why orchids cost such a pretty penny.

A Trial Planting of Early Jersey Wakefield Cabbage.

This variety matures before most other kinds and is recommended as especially good for the Southern California home garden.

You Can't Always Treat a Cauliflower as You Can a Cabbage

By ROSS H. GAST

THIS article is concerned with the culture of the lowly cabbage and its more erudite cousin, the cauliflower. Mark Twain, in one of his periodic discussions of agriculture, observed that cauliflower was only cabbage with a college education. It is true that cabbage has never aspired to be more than a partner to corn beef, while cauliflower moves freely in the best circles, but both are stable commodities in the American dietary and should have a place in every Southern California garden.

In Southern California the best seasons for producing cauliflower and cabbage are the fall and winter months. Commercially, cauliflower is largely planted from July 15 to November 15, while cabbage is planted from September to December 15. However, one can make a planting of either of these crops in the home garden most any time with success if the proper varieties are chosen.

The initial preparation of soil and the first steps in the culture of cauliflower and cabbage are identical. However, cauliflower must be forced along more rapidly than cabbage, so after the plants have been set in the field or garden, cultural methods differ quite a bit.

Of the cabbage family, there are several distinct types and varieties which can be planted. The commercial cabbage in Southern California is the Winnigstadt, which is a very early, solid heading type. Other varieties used for shipping are the Copenhagen Market and the Cannon Ball. However, in the home garden, it would be a good idea to try the Early Jersey Wakefield, a sort grown extensively in the East, and the new Golden Acre cabbage. Both are very early and are especially recommended for home garden planting. Flat Dutch is another popular sort and may be used in the home garden. Recently, the writer described the Savoy cabbage, or the curly leaf type, which will produce good heads on poorer soil than other varieties. It is a very good home garden cabbage also.

Cabbage usually requires a heavy soil, but good drainage is essential. It will produce on lighter types, however, if they are properly fertilized. One should not incorporate raw manure in the soil before planting as this accentuates the danger of infestation by some of the most serious pests of the vegetable.

Cauliflower varieties are not so numerous. Commercially, the earliest crop planted is the Snowball; then come the Pearl varieties of which there are the Early, Medium and Late strains. The Medium is perhaps the most popular sort at this time. In recent years, Broccoli, which differs little from cauliflower, is planted for later crops, especially those planned to mature in the spring. Soil requirements for cauliflower are much the same as those for cabbage.

Where the Sage Honey Comes From

By OLIVER SAYLOR

Although sage honey is known almost everywhere, most of it is produced in California, and perhaps most of the sage from which honey is made is in the southern part of the State. Wild sage grows up to an elevation of 5000 feet, and in well watered canyons attains a height of six feet or more. It is said that sage requires a rainfall of ten inches to cause it to secrete nectar, so when the rains are light there is little sage honey.

Sage honey is obtained principally from the black and the white sage, but the black sage, also known as blue sage or button sage, is the more important honey plant. Black sage, Salvia mellifera, gets its name from the dried blossom which remains on the plant and turns a bluish black. The leaves of the plant are narrow and green above, while below they are almost white, and woolly. The flowers are blue and fade almost to white They are set in whorls and start blooming on the outer edges. As each tiny blossom opens a drop of nectar forms at its base. The period of blooming provides nectar for the bees from early April to about the first of July.

White sage, Salvia Apiana, is a stately plant, growing on long slender stems over six feet in height. The nectar yield is heavy at times, but it is far less dependable than the black sage.

The purple sage, Salvia leucophylla, appears to be almost identical with the black sage except for the color of its blossoms. It is not very abundant.

The sage ranges are being continually cut down by encroaching civilization. As more and more land is cleared the beekeeper is forced farther back into the mountains. Drough may prevent a nectar flow, but it does not kill the plant regardless of how severe it may be.

The honey from all the wild sages is almost pure white. Sage honey does not crystalize readily and may be kept for long periods in a liquid state. It has distinctive flavor and is much in demand. This year the sage honey crop promises to be larger than for a number of seasons.

Dangerous Scale Found

A shipment of plants from Pennsylvania found to be infected with Dictyospermum scale was intercepted by Quarantine Inspector George D. Hussey of the Los Angeles County Horticultural Commissioner's office recently. This scale attacks avocados and, as the State's groves are free from it at the present time, it is held to be exceedingly important that it be kept from being brought in from other sections of the country.

CAULIFLOWER AND CABBAGE

they grow in size, the stem of the collard grows upward, and continues to grow for several months, never forming a head. The tender terminal leaves are edible and the plant is highly regarded for chickens, for it grows over a long period of time, broad, new leaves being produced continually. As the plant withstands hot weather well, it is especially adapted to the desert sections of Southern California. The soil and cultural requirements are the same as for the cabbage, except that the plants should be spaced further apart in the row. Three feet apart is the best distance.

Kale is a very common plant in Southern California and poultry raisers grow it extensively for chicken greens. The dwarf sorts are hardier than the tall ones, but in Southern California both thrive throughout the year. The tall Scotch kale is perhaps the most common grown here, plants often reaching a height of eight feet. The tender leaves make very fine greens for people as well as for poultry, and are utilized for this purpose in the East.

The culture of this plant is about the same as for cabbage and collards. It will grow on poorer soil than the cabbage, but to produce an abundance of foliage over a long period of time, the soil to receive the plants should be fairly well fertilized. As the plants will often bear leaves for more than one year, it is best that they be set out in a favorable season, such as the spring or early fall. The plants of the tall sorts should be set three feet apart in rows spaced three feet across. This plant is often attacked by cabbage pests, and control measures as recommended for cabbage should be used.

discussed during the last two days of the convention, when the sessions were conducted in Giant Forest, Sequoia National Park.

TRYING PARA GRASS

WESTMORLAND.—W. W. Clark has been experimenting with para grass near this place. He believes that this will become an important forage crop. It is a perennial and a native of South America. It is killed by a temperature less than 18 degrees and is said to do well in localities such as those on the edge of the Salton Sea, not being injured, Mr. Clark says, by overflows. The local rancher is propagating it by cuttings. He thinks so well of its possibilities that he has called it to the attention of Secretary of Agriculture Jardine at Washington.

WILL POOL PEACHES

CHINO.—At a recent meeting of the Chino and Ontario Peach Growers Association, it was decided to form a peach pool including approximately 4000 tons of the fruit. It is expected that the crop will be sold the latter part of June. George P. Weldon, president of the association, says that the rumor of low prices is unfounded as far as he is able to find out. He believes good fruit will bring satisfactory prices this season.

NAP WEED FOUND

CORCORAN.—Patches of Russian nap weed, a most obnoxious pest, have been found near here, close to the line between Kings and Tulare counties. Samples of the weed were sent to the State University for identification. The pest was discovered in but a few places, and they will be treated with spray and also with carbon bisulphide for root eradication. The campaign against puncture vine is general in Kings county now.

START EGGS ROLLING

SAFFORD (Ariz.)—The Graham County Poultrymen's Association of Arizona shipped its first carload of eggs recently to Bisbee. The organization represents 35,000 chickens, most of them White Leghorns.

Would Save Pines

The United States Department of Agriculture is interesting itself in the White Pine, especially as applied to California, and George A. Root, assistant pathologist of the department, has been assigned to the white pine blister rust control work in this State. The State Department of Agriculture is cooperating in spreading information concerning the value of the white pine forests to this State and is aiding in the work of eradicating black currents, gooseberries and other species of plants that act as hosts to the white pine disease. Mr. Root states that the sugar pine timber in California is valued at over $120,000,000, and that both sugar and white pine produce the very highest grade lumber, commanding a premium price on the market. The white pine disease does not occur in California at present, and the work Mr. Root is doing is of a preventive nature.

Farm and Orchard Magazine
Devoted to the [illegible] agricultural interests of the Great Southwest, and issued every week with the world's biggest Sunday newspaper.

EDITED BY HAROLD M. FINLEY

Communications from practical farmers, ranchers, stock raisers, poultrymen, gardeners and others engaged either in a large or small way in the vital work of food production are gladly received.

Good clear photographs of interesting farm and garden activities are always welcomed. The Los Angeles Times Farm and Orchard Magazine is the only farm journal in the West printing illustrations in the incomparable rotogravure process.

Well, What of It?

IN AN effort to make us realize the situation very clearly, the United States Department of Agriculture has compiled some illuminating figures on the subject of the migrations of American people from the farms to the city and from the city to the farms. In cold figures it is shown that the movement away from the farm has been having the best of the argument, for while 1,135,000 persons moved from towns into the open spaces last year, a total of 2,155,000 shook the dust of the furrows from their feet and went where they could pound asphalt pavements as they went about their daily grind.

This figure represents the largest exodus from agricultural pursuits since 1920 and was very generally distributed, affecting proportionately every geographical section in the country. It is perfectly understandable why numbers of people, in this day and generation, should want to leave the farm, its burdens and discomforts in a few sections of the country where conditions of climate and the lack of conveniences actually make for hardship. But something seems to be "wrong with this picture" when applied to sections such as our own, where fine farming weather prevails most of the year, where electricity can be harnessed for the farmer's needs, lightening his work immeasurably; where splendid roads make it possible for him to keep in easy touch with near-at-hand cities and their attractions. "There's a reason," and one of another kind, for this general exodus cityward; there is evidence a?plenty that it is an economic one.

The growers as a whole simply are not making money at their business, or are making so little that they are constantly worried by the urge to try something else. People are willing to endure a certain amount of hardship, even in this soft age, to get ahead in the world, and farmers as a class are not given to bemoaning their lot when prosperity is coming their way. Critics who spend their time deploring the alleged "motor-age extravagance" of the modern agriculturist are off on the wrong foot—the farmer is not unreasonable in wanting to make enough to provide his family with some of the "luxuries" the city man takes as a matter of course. Here in California, probably more than anywhere else, he has them and has come to demand them, but who shall say that he shouldn't want them and have them? Our concern should be that the general condition of agricultural affairs is such that even here in California, of all places, many of our agricultural producers must scrimp to provide the comforts and conveniences that are coming to be accepted as the due of all.

Agriculture is picking up gradually everywhere—it always does after periods of depression and adjustment. In some places there are even evidences of prosperity. The problem always, in a way, affords its own solution. Overproduction in some one line or in various fields is responsible for much of the trouble in the first place, and the slump that follows sends people in droves to the cities. Those left start in making money. In fact, it isn't altogether certain that this cityward movement that is so alarming to some observers is so menacing after all. Those who are constantly whooping up new schemes for bringing more land under irrigation and increasing production are often in a very real sense "rushing things" to the actual detriment of the growers already established, at least under present conditions of marketing and distribution in the agricultural industry. Until farming has been put by the farmers themselves on a basis more like that of manufacturing, or our population has increased to the point where every acre's product is needed, we are bound to have these recurring worries over movements to the cities from the farms. Farming is a healthful occupation, but not very many of us would be willing to farm for our health alone.

Recent estimates of the United States Department of Agriculture say that 1,121,000 more people moved away from farms than moved to them in the United States during 1926.

Farm News of the Great Southwest
DOWN-TO-DATE REPORTS FROM TIMES CORRESPONDENTS

McFARLAND.—Most of the fields of irrigated wheat around McFarland have been cut and threshing is well advanced. J. S. Richards, who has fifty acres sown to Bunyip wheat, reports a yield of a ton to a ton and a half per acre of excellent quality and he says he has been offered $2.15 per bushel. He expects to plant the land to milo. William Kraft of this district has twenty acres of very uniform wheat and will plant corn on the land after the wheat is off. Dry land wheat in this section has been a great disappointment although early season conditions were very promising.

LAY FAIR PLANS

BRAWLEY.—Plans for the Imperial Valley Mid-Winter Fair are being laid already. H. E. Niven of Boulder, Colo., has been named to succeed W. W. Van Pelt, who resigned as secretary of the fair to take a similar position with the Ventura County Fair. The new fair board has been appointed as follows: William O. Blair and George A. Bailey, Calipatria; H. Roy Andre, Westmoreland; Chris Westgaard, Spruce; L. A. Strieby, Magnolia; Frank A. Dowden, Mulberry; Sam E. Robinson, Eastside; H. H. Clark, Thomas Anderson and Henry Zucher, Calexico; B. A. Harrigan, W. H. Brooks, R. Y. Watson and Ross T. Hickox, El Centro; M. C. Blanchard and C. F. Kamm, Holtville; Bel Hulse and Lester Eicholtz, Imperial; Earl Pound, Walter Havekorst, E. C. Schillings, F. J. Trude, Thomas B. Edgar, R. W. Stilgenbaur and D. J. Bell, Brawley.

FORM CITY FARM CENTER

SANTA ANA.—A city farm center, to be known as the Business Men's Farm Center, has recently been organized at Santa Ana, with regular business meetings each month. A program of agricultural interest is arranged for the members who are farm and orchard owners as well as business men. The subjects presented have to do with practical farm management problems. James Sleeper, county assessor, is president; J. A. Crookshank, president of the First National Bank, is director, representing the group on the farm bureau board of directors, and George Smith, Santa Ana, is secretary.

STUDIES RECLAMATION

EL CENTRO.—Kainchi Kachi, connected with the agricultural department of the Japanese government at Tokio, has been studying reclamation methods used by the Imperial Irrigation District in Imperial Valley of late. He has also been much interested in all agricultural work here.

ATTENDS MEETING

POMONA.—E. C. Hogsett of this city, secretary of the Farm Bureau Accredited Breeding and Hatcheries project of Southern California, recently was in Berkeley in attendance at a meeting of California poultrymen to consider the organization of a State-wide breeders' and hatchers' association for further standardizing the poultry industry. The movement is the initial step toward a national standardization project planned by Dr. M. A. Juli of the United States Department of Agriculture.

FLOODING BRINGS SUIT

ESCONDIDO.—A suit for damages for approximately $70,000 has been brought against the Escondido Mutual Water Company and the San Diego Water Company by Mrs. Elsie M. Von Seggern and four members of her family, owners of a dairy ranch at the head of Lake Wohlford, for injury alleged to have been done the ranch through flooding by the erection of the Wohlford Dam. The water companies recently brought a condemnation suit against the Von Seggerns to enable them to take possession of a portion of the ranch for reservoir purposes.

A STITCH IN TIME

REDLANDS.—Farmers of this section are making a drive on the puncture vine, for now is the time to eradicate it with the least work, the authorities say, for the burrs are just being put out and if the vines are hoed up, piled and burned now there will be little trouble for the rest of the summer. If they are permitted to go to seed, there is trouble all the rest of the year.

'COT CROP LIGHT

VISALIA.—Tulare county will have a light apricot crop this season, due to inroads of bird pests and some frost damage, according to Horticultural Commissioner Frank R. Brann. This county has about 5000 acres in apricots, mostly of early varieties. About $85,000 is usually received per year from apricots, both dried and for canning. Estimates this season indicate about a 70 per cent crop. Most of the bird damage is said to have been done by linnets and sparrows. It is expected that the county plants will open for canning around July 1. Frost damage to apricots was spotted.

THEY PICK THEIR OWN

YUCAIPA.—Cherrycroft, the big cherry orchard owned by C. N. Andrews in Yucaipa, is one of the interesting places in this section now, for Mr. Andrews is following his custom of letting the consumer pick his own fruit. Pails and ladders are provided, trees are shown to the consumer and he is told to "go to it." As a result he gets his cherries for less than he would pay for them on the market. Mr. Andrews keeps a crew of pickers just big enough to fill the orders that come in.

GRAIN CROP HARVESTED

FRESNO.—Fresno county grain men were busy the fore part of June, harvesting wheat and barley. The yield is reported to be slightly heavier this year than it was in 1926, because of the ample rains of the present season. Mariot barley and Baart wheat are the varieties principally grown on the west side of the county.

IRRIGATES NEW LAND

STRATFORD.—A large part of the water going down Kings River to the mouth at Tulare Lake bed has been used for the irrigation of 5000 acres of land which have had no irrigation water for many years. Frank Blakeley, pioneer lake land farmer, is irrigating the tract and will plant it to grain this fall. The land is along what is known as the Blakeley levee, fifteen miles south of here.

AN INTENSIVE PLOT

BALDWIN PARK.—Mrs. Frances M. Clark has managed to make her small place at 768 Maine street produce a great variety of food for the family. On a plot 66 by 150 feet she has fruit trees, grape and berry vines, flowers, ornamentals and a fine vegetable garden. She has also found room for 125 chickens, some White Leghorns and some Rhode Island Reds to supply the larder with both eggs and meat.

WATCH FOR GREEN ONES

EL CENTRO.—Strict inspection of cantaloupe and watermelons shipped is being practiced in the Imperial Valley and every effort is being made to prevent unripe shipments.

OFFICERS ELECTED

VISALIA.—Frank R. Brann of Visalia, Tulare County Horticultural Commissioner, was elected president; A. E. Morrison, of Sacramento, vice-president, and Fred B. Roullard of Fresno, secretary, State Association of the County Horticultural Commissioners at that body's recent sessions here. George H. Hecke, State Director of Agriculture, presided over the meeting. Agricultural developments of importance were

San Fernando Entry Is Still in Lead

SANTA CRUZ.—At the close of the seventh month of the California Farm Bureau laying contest, the pen of White Leghorns entered by the California White Leghorn Breeding Farms of San Fernando is still leading, with a total production of 1665 eggs. The entries owned by Russell Trapnest Farm of Santa Cruz and Charles W. Kolb of Monterey are tied for second place, each pen of ten birds being credited with 1498 eggs. Another pen entry owned by Mr. Kolb is in fourth position, with a production of 1434 eggs; James Gage of Novato is fifth his pen having produced 1432 eggs in the seven months; the entry of Brown and Mann of Seattle, Wash., is sixth, with a total of 1424 eggs, while seventh position to date is held by an entry owned by Cavagnaro and Custer of Watsonville. These are all of the entries that have laid over 1400 eggs in the first seven months of the contest and are all White Leghorn pens.

The highest pen of Rhode Island Reds is credited with 1232 eggs in seven months and is owned by Enoch Craws of Seabright. The high pen in the heavy division is a pen of Australorps owned by Live Oak Poultry Ranch of Burbank, that has laid 1285 eggs, according to the recent contest report, while the high pen in the club division is owned by Freemont Agricultural Club of Oakland and is credited with 1261 eggs to date.

The highest individual record for the first seven months of the contest has been made by a White Leghorn from the California White Leghorn Breeding Farms entry that has produced 186 eggs to date, second honors for the same period going to an Australorp from the Live Oak Poultry Ranch entry that is credited with a production of 180 eggs.

The high pen for the month of May in the light division was a pen of Leghorns owned by Collins Trapnest Farm of Santa Cruz that laid 266 eggs in the thirty-one days, while one bird from this entry and one from the entry owned by Alberta Ranch of Santa Cruz tied for high individual honors for the month, in this division each laying twenty-nine eggs. The high pen of Rhode Island Reds for the month laid 243 eggs and is owned by D. W. Rich of San Gabriel, while the high individual record in this division was a tie between birds owned by Covey Red Ranch, Toppenish, Wash., and Buell's Red Farm, of Oakland, each bird producing thirty eggs during the month. The high pen for the month in the Boys' and Girls' Club laid 248 eggs and is owned by Gray's Harbor Club, Elma, Wash., and the high pen in heavy division was one of Australorps owned by Live Oak Ranch that produced 225 eggs in the month.

Egg Production Costs Need Trimming

REDLANDS.—The Better Poultry Club was organized at a meeting of local poultrymen at the Mentone Inn recently. Clive C. Hinckley was elected president and Al McIntosh, secretary-treasurer.

During the meeting A. L. Campbell, assistant farm adviser of San Bernardino county, discussed the poultry industry as it relates to local conditions. He said that cost records kept at Fontana indicate that it costs 25 cents to produce a dozen eggs. There are times each year when the producer is unable to get that much for his eggs, so it behooves the poultrymen to figure out some way of reducing costs.

Chaffey Hens Complete Eighth Month

ONTARIO.—A pen of ten White Leghorns owned by H. B. Hamilton, of Ontario, won first place for high production during the month of May at the Chaffey Trapnesting Station here, with an average of 26.1 eggs per bird.

Second honors for the month went to a pen of Leghorns owned by George Smallwood, Upland, that produced an average of 25 eggs per bird, and the pen owned by J. H. Seefloth, Ontario, took third with an average of 24.9 eggs.

The high individual honors for the month went to birds owned by F. R. Rickel, Ontario; William Henry, Fontana, and J. H. Seefloth, these three birds tying for first place with thirty eggs each to their credit.

The high hen to date, owned by Mr. Seefloth, is credited with 197 eggs for the first eight months of the contest year while birds owned by Harrison Fowler and Mr. Hamilton are tied for second highest individual honors with 195 eggs each, while others from various entries rank almost as high, indicating an exciting finish in the last four months of the contest year.

The pen entry of Mr. Seefloth ranks first in the contest to date with an average of 166.3 eggs per bird; second place is held by the entry owned by George Smallwood, with an average of 158.9 eggs, and W. F. Courtright is in third place for pen entry with an average of 157.1 eggs per bird.

RABBITS SUIT HER

ARCADIA.—After keeping a few rabbits in their back yard in Los Angeles, Mrs. George Dempsey persuaded her husband to move to Arcadia so that she might have more room for the business of raising these animals for meat and fur. Mr. Dempsey is a carpenter, and while he follows his trade he manages to find the time to take care of the cleaning and heavy work so that Mrs. Dempsey can handle the rest of the care her rabbits require. She has 600 of them now, specializing in White New Zealand and White Flemish breeds. A large share of her output is taken care of on contract, and the balance is absorbed by direct sales.

Low Egg Prices Don't Daunt Him

PORTERVILLE.—In spite of eggs bringing only twenty cents per dozen, H. Johnson of the Saucelito district near here, says he has made money. Mr. Johnson is a member of the Porterville Poultry Association. He and his wife do all of the work, so the "overhead" is low.

Their flock consists of 2600 White Leghorn birds one and two years old, and during May he says they laid 4690 dozen eggs which brought $938 at 20 cents a dozen. Feed for the month, including mash, meat scraps, shells, grit, tobacco dust, epsom salts, charcoal, wheat, milo and milk, cost $399.39.

The best milk is that which is kept clean, cool, and covered.

Beet Growers Look for Better Prices

SANTA ANA.—Although the sugar beet acreage this year is not much greater than it was in 1926, the crop itself will surpass that of 1926 by approximately 20,000 tons, according to officials of the Santa Ana Sugar Company. This year's crop it is expected, will bring more than $1,000,000 to the growers.

Rainfall at opportune times this year increased the production of beet lands in the county. Sugar prices this year are also favorable, it is reported. Last year's high mark was $5.15 per hundred pounds. Already this year the price has reached $5.50 per hundred and better prices may be obtained, the officials of the sugar company believe. More than 1500 workers will be employed in the county to harvest the crop this year.

Approximately 11,000 acres in Orange county are planted to beets this year. The Santa Ana Sugar Company has 44,000 acres under contract. The other beet area, near Los Alamitos, boasts about 6500 acres of beets this year, with smaller acreage scattered.

The beet harvest in the Santa Ana area is estimated at approximately 39,000 tons this year. Last year the yield amounted to only 26,000 tons. An average price of $11 per ton is expected.

The Santa Ana Sugar Company's plant at Dyer is the only one which will operate in Orange county this year. Approximately 300 workers will be employed in the factory. The plant is expected to open early in August.

Odd Origin for Grapefruit

This Thriving Eagle Rock Tree Was Started in a Flower Pot Back in Illinois.

Grapefruit Tree Gets Start Back East

EAGLE ROCK.—On the property of R. Baily Carson here is a grapefruit tree bearing a crop of fruit this year for the first time. The bulk of the fruit is in a cluster among the top branches of the tree presenting a rather unusual appearance.

It is the origin of this tree, however, which makes it interesting and unique. It was started from a seed planted in a flower pot as a house plant and grown by Mr. Carson in his home in Peoria, Ill. After keeping it there for a couple of years Mr. Carson loaded a box car with their furniture, included the plant, and moved to California. He kept the young tree in the pot for a couple of years after arriving here, and planted it about two years ago on his Eagle Rock property where it has flourished like a native.

Conditions Favorable to Gray Scale

EXETER.—Death rate of citricola scale, commonly called gray scale of the orange, will be low this year because of the increased moisture content of the soil, according to Frank R. Brann, Tulare county horticultural commissioner. At a recent session of the Exeter farm center, he said:

"While fumigation is most satisfactory for control of citricola scale, in case of bad infestation on large trees, spraying gives excellent results if the time of application, material and methods of application are correct. Spraying has an advantage over fumigation, in that it reduces the number of thrip, aphis and other insects all at the same time. On small trees use 2 per cent of lime sulphur, three-fourths of a gallon of oil and one-half pound of spreader to 100 gallons of water. When the orange is about as large as the end of the finger, spraying may be done for thrip. Spraying should not be done here after June 15 because of the high temperature and high humidity."

East Buying Lemons in Good Amount

WHITTIER.—One hundred and twenty-six carloads of citrus fruits were shipped by the Whittier District Fruit Exchange during the last week in May. The shipment was composed of eighty-one cars of oranges and forty-five cars of lemons.

This brings the total for local Valencia shipments up to 356 cars for this season. The market for Valencias has been good and they have brought as high as $6.60 for the best sizes, although the price has ranged downward as low as $2.40.

The eight packing-houses forming the Whittier District Fruit Exchange are all running, packing Valencias principally. The market for California lemons has been good, the warmer weather in the East having stimulated the demand.

Wasco "Cant" Growers Expect Good Year

WASCO.—Declaring that the cold weather this spring was of benefit to Wasco cantaloupe growers, W. W. Broaddus, who has 160 acres of melons this year, stated that this year's yield will be heavier and of a better quality than for any previous season. Poor markets for the last two years caused a decrease in the acreage planted to melons in the Wasco district this year. The first carload will probably roll between July 5 and 10, according to M. Broaddus. This will be several days later than the first shipment of last year. While some earlier plantings were injured by aphis and frost, most of the crop is in excellent condition. Mr. Broaddus planted his melon seed about April 1, two weeks later than usual, because he had a "hunch" that there might be a late frost. His "hunch" was a good one.

The Hoover Farm comes second as a producer of cantaloupes, having planted nearly a hundred acres. Some of these were planted early and suffered from frost but the balance of the crop is in excellent condition.

Wasco cantaloupe growers expect a good market. Imperial Valley's huge crop will be marketed before the Wasco crop matures and it is believed here that the Turlock crop will not start to roll until after July 25, which will let Wasco pass its peak shipments before that competition materializes. This should give a clear market in the Northwest and little competition in the East.

Harp and Beckett, have 100 acres of cantaloupes planted on the Harp ranch at Corcoran this year where they are testing out that section for the small melon crop. Mr. Broaddus, who has a contract to market this crop, says a wonderful stand has been secured and that prospects point to an excellent yield of high quality melons.

"The Corcoran country is a very promising new district," Broaddus states. "Soil conditions seem to be very well adapted to cantaloupe growing there. These melons are growing in former alfalfa ground, and will mature at about the same time as the Wasco crop."

Grape Crop Estimates Are Made

FRESNO.—Estimates of the probable production of grapes in California this year, obtained in authoritative quarters here, place the crop at a figure slightly less than last year's 2,040,000 tons. Slow growing weather, cool days and nights and rain, delayed the crop, making prospective maturity one week late, instead of two weeks ahead of normal as was the case last year. Although E. M. Sheehan, president of the California Grape Growers' Exchange, places the probable shipments at 65,000 cars, authorities here express doubt that shipments of fresh grapes will reach last year's tonnage of something over 63,000 cars.

Ward B. Minturn, vice-president of the California Vineyardists' Association, and one of San Joaquin's authorities on grapes, says that "an accurate estimate of the probable tonnage shipped east and prospective raisin tonnage is impossible, owing to weather and other important factors entering into the question." Mr. Minturn and A. J. Sturtevant Jr., also an authority on the grape deal, are of the opinion that this year's crop will be smaller than that of last year.

A good crop of Muscat grapes is promised; the crop if Thompsons that has set, is light; other varieties, both table and juice sorts, are spotted in some instances as much as 65 per cent of normal, according to the opinion of growers and shippers who have inspected wide areas of vineyards. Because of the work of the Vineyardists' association and its stabilizing effect on the fresh grape market, the carlot shipments of fresh grapes will, it is believed, be of sufficient size to hold the raisin tonnage down to, or below, the 1926 total of 250,000 tons.

HAVE A WHEAT SURPLUS

PHOENIX (Ariz.)—Sixty million pounds of wheat will be produced in the Salt River Valley, and 15,000,000 more in the Gila Valley this season, according to Lyle E. Weir, vice-president of the Gila Valley Milling Company. He says that this is a surplus over local consumption and about 20,000,000 pounds will be shipped out. Most of the Gila Valley wheat has been contracted at $2.25 per hundred.

Four Cows Make Great May Records

The report of the Los Angeles County Farm Bureau Dairy Cow Competition for the month of May shows that 9030 cows were tested, representing 113 different herds. The average yield for all cows tested was reported to be 950 pounds, and the average fat was 35.95 pounds per cow. Seventy-seven cows were culled out of member herds in May, and 2980 cows produced forty pounds or more of fat each, during the month.

The highest producing purebred heifer on test during the month in the association yielded 66.6 pounds of butter fat. She is owned by the Los Angeles County Farm at Hondo. The highest producing grade heifer, owned by G. O. Phelps produced sixty-seven pounds of fat. The El Colmo Ranch, Norwalk, had the highest producing pure-bred cow, which yielded the remarkable total of 125.7 pounds of butter fat during the month, while the highest producing grade cow, owned by Ideal Certified Dairy, Glendale, did almost as well by a production of 119.2 pounds of fat.

The highest five producing cows in pure-bred herds of thirty head or less, yielded 271.6 pounds of fat and are owned by Harry Johnson and Sons, Artesia. The high five cows in pure-bred herds of more than thirty cows produced 479 pounds of fat and are from the El Colmo herd. The best five cows in grade herds of thirty cows or less made 346.3 pounds of fat and are owned by S. W. Boekema of Hynes and the best five cows in grade herds of thirty to sixty head, from the herd of Bos and DeGraaf, Hynes, yielded 357.8 pounds of fat. The best five cows in herds of sixty to 150 head (grades) produced 376.5 pounds of fat and are in the herd owned by W. S. Thompson, Burbank while the best five cows in grade herds of over 150 head produced 457.5 pounds of fat and are owned by the Adohr Stock Farms, Van Nuys.

There were more than forty cows on the honor roll list for the month ranging in yield from 80.1 pounds of fat up to 125.7 pounds, as in the case of the highest producing purebred in the El Colmo herd. Four cows produced over 100 pounds each during the month, two of these being owned by Adohr Stock Farms.

El Monte District dairy herd.

Prosperity Coming by the Milk Route

By KLYDE H. YOUNG

EL MONTE.—In a farming section which has always depended upon agriculture for its income certain factors enter into increases which are vital and yet which are little known. The district around El Monte has always thought in terms of walnuts, general farming, and dairies, with the last named industry occupying a minor position. But as the years have gone by dairying has become more important, of such importance, in fact, that today the distribution of milk has passed all other forms of farming in and around this little city. The local Chamber of Commerce recently made a survey of dairying activities within a three-mile radius of El Monte and the results were surprising in that there were found to be eighty-five separate dairies with over 5000 cows, shipping 50,000 pounds of milk daily.

Of the eighty-five dairies it was found that forty-nine were doing a wholesale business and thirty-six were distributing milk by retail. The principal distributing plants for the wholesale delivery are the Los Angeles Creamery, the Valley Dairy, and the Arden Dairy. The Los Angeles Creamery distributes from its El Monte plant throughout the San Gabriel Valley, with most of its products going into Pasadena. The Valley Dairy runs forty trucks throughout Southern California distributing milk and ice cream. The Arden Dairy Company sends its certified milk all over the metropolitan district of Los Angeles through the Crescent Creamery Company's distributing system, and covers the outside territory through local distributing agencies.

Frank Pellisier & Sons have one of the largest dairies east of town and sell blooded stock in addition. Recently, they sent six head of registered cows to Colombia, South America, as a nucleus for a herd of pure-breds to be established in that country by a graduate of the University of Wisconsin.

The money brought into El Monte through the sale of milk is of great importance to this community. A conservative estimate, made by the three large distributing agencies, places the daily income therefrom at over $1500, or much over a half million dollars annually.

Leghorns Bring Her a Fair Profit

ARCADIA.—Mrs. A. H. Neugenbaum says she started in the chicken business very largely because a small boy of the family wanted them. The family came from Michigan eight years ago and bought one and one-quarter acres of land at 1433 Second avenue in this city. Fruit trees were planted, a garden established and provision made for a flock of White Leghorn chickens.

Each year Mrs, Neugebaum buys 1000 baby chicks, selling off the cockerels at broiler age, and she usually disposes of some of the pullets, retaining enough to keep up a flock of 300 layers. The eggs from these are sold from the home.

Mrs. Neugebaum believes that, while the commercial egg business does not make one rich, at least on the scale on which she operates, it does offer a reliable way of making a comfortable living.

"CANT" DEAL IS ON

WESTMORELAND.—Up to June 1 Brawley led in Imperial Valley cantaloupe shipments with 634 cars, but Westmoreland was close second with 631 cars. Seeley shipments to that date amounted to 142 cars, El Centro 137, Heber 45, Edgar 42, Calexico 28, Holtville 28, Meloland 2, and Imperial 1 car.

Three Perfect Scores Made in May

POMONA.—A pen of White Leghorns owned by Moses L. Frick of Bell is the high pen to date in the Southern California Farm Bureau laying contest here. This pen was credited with 1561 eggs at the close of May which ends the first seven months of the contest year. Second place is credited to the entry of White Leghorns owned by J. T. Milligan of San Fernando, with a total of 1441 eggs during the same period. Feather Hill Poultry Ranch of Santa Barbara, is in third position to date with a pen record of 1411 eggs.

The highest pen record for the month of May was made by ten Rhode Island Reds owned by L. T. McLean, Arcadia, that yielded the remarkable total of 274 eggs; second pen honors for the month went to the White Leghorns owned by Collins Trapnest Farm of Santa Cruz, that laid 266 eggs, while third place for the month was a tie between Mr. Frick's entry and the pen owned by Orange Grove Ranch of West Riverside, each pen producing 260 eggs in the thirty-one days. Fifth place was captured by the entry of Hoover Bros. of Pomona, that laid 259 eggs; sixth place was a tie between pens owned by California White Leghorn Breeding Farms and E. E. Eisenberg, Riverside, each pen laying 257 eggs. Highland Ranch took eighth place with a production of 255 eggs; Fontana Farms of Fontana was ninth with a pen record of 248 eggs and tenth place was held by a pen of Rhode Island Reds owned by D. W. Rich, San Gabriel, that produced 245 eggs in the month. High individual production to date is held by a White Leghorn owned by Feather Hill Poultry Ranch that is credited with 182 eggs in the first seven months of the contest: second high hen is owned by Bonnie Brae Ranch of Burbank, with a total of 178 eggs; third high hen, owned by Mr. Frick, is credited with 176 eggs; fourth position is a tie between birds owned by Feather Hill Ranch and Mr. Frick, each having laid 173 eggs, while sixth position for individuals to date is held by a bird owned by J. T. Milligan, San Fernando, with a seven-month production of 172 eggs.

A Barred Plymouth Rock hen owned by Dryden Poultry Breeding Farm of Concord, a White Minorca owned by Lee P. Freeman, La Mesa; and a Red owned by L. T. McLean of Arcadia, tied for high individual honors for the month of May, with perfect scores of thirty-one eggs each, while two White Leghorns and a Rhode Island Red tied for fourth position with records of thirty eggs each. These latter owned by Highland Ranch of Upland, L. T. McLean and Orange Grove Ranch. Production of the light birds in the contest for the month of May was reported to be 75.13 per cent, and 72.35 per cent for the heavy breeds.

High Production Marks Arizona Contest

TUCSON (Ariz.)—The production to date in the fifth Arizona laying contest in progress here is reported to be 64.8 per cent, or 2 per cent higher than last year's record at this time. The leading pens in the contest at the end of the seventh month are in the same relative position as was recorded last month. The entry owned by A. C. Wrenn of Florence is credited with a total of 1652 eggs; a pen owned by Carl Slater of Florence is second with a total of 1607 eggs, while third place to date is held by the pen owned by T. H. Short of Tucson, with a seven month's production of 1555.

The high individual hen in the contest for the seven months is a White Leghorn from the A. C. Wrenn entry and she is credited with a total of 192 eggs in the first 212 days of the contest year, having missed only twenty days since the contest started November 1, 1926. The Hayden Poultry Farm has the second highest individual hen, a White Leghorn that is credited with 178 eggs in seven months, while third place is a tie between three hens with records of 173 eggs each, which are owned by T. H. Short, Carl Slater and C. A. Shupp.

In the heavy class the Rhode Island Reds owned by H. L. Schornick, Tempe, are leading with a total of 1431 eggs to date. John Moeur's entry of Reds is second with a production of 1327 eggs. For the first time in several months the Leghorns have passed the Reds, the production of the Leghorns for May being 70.5 per cent as compared to 60.3 per cent for the Reds.

A pen of Leghorns owned by Carl Slater took first place for the month of May with a production of 263 eggs, while second pen honors for the month went to Leghorns owned by C. A. Brion of Chandler producing 255 eggs in the month. The high individual bird for the month, with a total of thirty eggs, was from the Carl Slater entry. All of the twenty pens in the contest are made up of Arizona birds.

Growing Early Vitamines in Imperial Valley's Big Tomato Fields

By IVA M. McFADDEN

SINCE early May, Imperial Valley tomatoes have been on the market; the earlier Mexican fruit is cleared from the boards, and the Coast product not yet matured, wherefore Imperial's tomatoes, like a beneficent flood, are reaching out to markets near and distant.

Not overly large is this desert tomato, which now holds the center of the stage, but firm while still juicy, an excellent table delicacy. It offers the housewives, at a time of the year when vegetables are comparatively scarce, a delightfully refreshing salad foundation.

To the dietitian, it may be only a particularly inviting form of valuable vitamines; to the housewife a convenient answer to her menu problem; but to the producer, this tomato is the climax of many months of diligent work and thought and planning.

The summer before, the grower chose his land. It must be not too soft, not too hard, but a happy medium, a mellow, sandy loam. This land is then plowed, checked, flooded, disked and floated to get it into perfect condition. Next, beds are thrown up, seven feet apart. This is done either by teams or tractors; if by the latter method, two beds are made at each round and fertilizing is done at the same time, commercial fertilizer being used.

Once the beds are laid up they must be "subbed," so that the water may penetrate and settle the soil. This is done by running small streams slowly through the ditches. Planting follows as soon as the soil is sufficiently dry. October and November are the planting months. The seeds are placed just above the waterline on the southern exposure, for all beds have been thrown up east and west in order to procure this sunny, protected seedbed for the plants. The hills are made five feet apart. Transplanting is not practiced in Imperial Valley tomato fields, but enough seeds are planted to insure a sturdy vine for each hill.

As soon as the seeds are well sprouted, hills are thinned to two plants, later, and when these are about ten inches high, one of these is taken out. If in any hill no plants start, this hill is replanted; occasionally a sturdy plant from an adjoining hill is moved to a plantless one to insure a full stand.

Shortly after planting, the hills are "brushed," as a protection against frost. Miniature wigwams are constructed, closed on the north open on the south; for this, arrowweed from the ditch banks and other waste spots is used with newspapers interwoven to make the little tepee quite warm. So great has been the demand for arrowweed for this wigwam-making, that the weed is growing scarce and has to be trucked for miles—some growers trekking seventeen miles after their supply. It is the practice of growers to gather it in the summer so as to be forehanded. For two years the same supply will serve but after that the fiber rots. The cost of "brushing," which involves skilled hand labor, runs from $50 to $60 an acre. The brush cover remains until all danger of frost is over; then it is removed and, if in good condition, stored until next year.

As the plants grow, the ground is kept in cultivation, the furrow being gradually worked away from the plants so that at the end of the season each tomato is standing near the center of the beds.

To the tomato, worms are the most serious enemy. From the time the plants are an inch and a half tall until the stalks are as large as a lead pencil, the growers watch for cutworms. First they attack the stems but later they may be found in the fruit itself if it hangs close to the ground. Another small worm burrows in about the stems, and the large tomato worm, whose presence causes serious injury to the vine, may make his appearance.

When the plants are small, a prepared poison mash has been successfully used; as a protection to the foliage on the larger vines, the plants are dusted with calcium arsenate. This year, for the first time this dusting was done by airplanes. Successful pest control is a matter of early measures at exactly the right time. It is too late to do much after the fruit begins to set.

After the fruit is mature, under the supervision of American foremen, the fields are gone over regularly. All tomatoes which are "mature green" or even farther advanced are picked and sent in lugs to the packing houses. Here all defective tomatoes are culled out and three classes made —"mature greens" to be sent to distant points, "pinks," and "ripes" for the nearer markets. The "mature greens" are packed and each tomato wrapped separately in tissue paper. "Pinks" and "ripes" are either wrapped and packed in lugs, or in four-basket crates. Occasionally some lots of "ripes" for the Los Angeles market may be packed loose in lugs without wrapping.

Tomatoes Are Ripe.

Mexican pickers are going over the Imperial Valley fields daily now.

Time was when individual growers packed in their own sheds, but this practice is being abandoned. The largest shippers of tomatoes bring all their tomatoes into a central shed so that they may be absolutely sure of a uniform pack. This is particularly necessary for the shipments to distant markets.

These packing sheds are very bee hives of industry. Trucks come and go with their loads of tomatoes in picking boxes; graders are busy; packers attain astonishing speed. The grading is usually done by men, but both men and women are employed in the packing. Always the cars are in waiting, for the sheds are located on the railroad tracks.

While to the uninformed, the tomato may seem a most perishable vegetable and little suited to distant shipping, yet the care it receives at the shipping point and the careful grading and packing have made a far-flung distribution possible. The cost of shipping from California to the Atlantic Coast cities gives Florida the control of those markets, but to Canada and all the Pacific Coast and east as far as Chicago and Minneapolis go Imperial Valley's tomatoes.

SEEKING BETTER ONES

Even the culture is studied with long-distance shipping in view. The most constructive producers and shippers devote some of their land each year to experimental purposes under the direction of the University of California. Already important results are being obtained. Earliness, good shipping qualities, smooth, uniform fruit of good shape and size and a good yield are the qualities most sought for. A larger tomato is being tried out, also one with a much reduced seed content. Since decay begins in the seed cavity, a reduction here presumably delays decay and increases the shipping value. In the variety mentioned, the center is almost solid with small seed pockets about it. Should this tomato prove highly productive it will have a strong appeal to the trade. At present, the most commonly planted tomato is King of the Earlies. The Earliana, which comes into bearing first, has a fruit too small to compete with other sorts and is planted sparingly.

A close check is being kept on fertilizing methods, trials have been made of the effect of thinning, and of staking vines both of these practices seeming too expensive to be commercially practical. Some experiments are being conducted in artificial ripening.

The product of much thought, of much experimenting, of much hard work and expense, is this Imperial Valley tomato which today graces the Canadian and western dinner table. To its culture over 2000 acres are devoted in the valley. Small growers give individual attention to their small patches, large acres are painstakingly handled by the larger companies.

Ranking high in vitamine content the tomato is recommended by dietitians, but it hardly needs the endorsement; Nature herself creates at this time of the year a real desire for some fresh, cool, appetizing uncooked vegetable. And Imperial Valley answers the call with her early tomatoes.

New Station Cares For Heavy Tonnage

WESTMORLAND.—The depot which the Southern Pacific built this year in Westmorland is now beginning to see its seasonable activity. Until 1927, business has been done through a box car on a siding, but last year almost 2500 cars of perishables originated in Westmorland and on this showing the railway expended $25,000 on improvements. The new building is designed at present only for freight service and is up-to-date in construction and equipment.

Five additional men are employed at this place through the melon season to accommodate the rush. Last year cantaloupes aggregated 1316 cars and watermelons 890. Grapes, stock and hay make up a considerable total of outgoing shipments. A track capable of holding eighty cars has been laid down adjacent to the new building and the road alongside this track will be surfaced after this year's rush is over. Fully seventy-five cars may be loaded at one time from this new track, which was laid primarily for the handling of watermelons.

The stock pens have been enlarged to such an extent that any quantity of cattle may be shipped at one time.

Uncle Ab says vociferousness is no argument.

'Cot Picking Time Is at Hand

HEMET.—Ten thousand tons of apricots in the Hemet Valley is the estimate made by local fruit and cannery men for the season which will get under way late in June. This tonnage is a little less than that of last year, which exceeded 12,000 tons. The quality of fruit this year is expected to average better than in 1926, however, as nearly ideal weather conditions have prevailed, with plenty of rains during the winter and no serious frosts. While prices have not yet been set, it is expected that returns will average well with those of last year, when the Hemet Valley crop brought nearly $400,000. But one cannery will operate in Hemet this summer—that of the Hemet Packing Company. The plant of the California Co-Operative Canneries is to remain idle, as in 1926, although the big dry-yard in connection will probably be operated. Most of the apricot crop will be dried, although some 'cots will be canned by the Hemet Packing Company and it is probable that outside canneries will have buyers in the valley.

About 6000 tons of peaches are expected to be picked from the Hemet Valley orchards this summer, according to reliable estimates. This is about the same as the 1926 crop.

Already fruit pickers are commencing to come into Hemet, although there will be no work in this line until late in June. During the height of the 'cot season, approximately 4000 people will be engaged in the various activities connected with the harvest, picking, cutting and pitting, hauling and in the cannery.

Citrus School Program Is Announced

Citrus growers throughout Southern California will have their annual opportunity to discuss their problems and gain the latest information on orchard management and pest control when the Southern California Citrus Institute and the tenth annual Pest Control school open at the Citrus Union High School between Glendora and Azusa, June 24 and 25, under the auspices of the Agricultural Extension Service and the Southern California Citrus Growers' Department of the Intercounty Farm Bureau.

The institute program will begin at 9.30 in the morning of the 24th, with an address from T. H. Lambers, president of the Los Angeles County Farm Bureau. Citrus orchard cultivation will be discussed by W. R. Schoonover, citrus extension specialist, Frank Daybell, consulting horticulturalist; and W. M. Mertz, citrus grower. The morning program will conclude with talks on irrigation by Prof. S. H. Beckett and Dr. I. G. McBeth.

The cost of producing oranges will be the first afternoon topic, under the direction of H. E. Wahlberg, Orange county farm adviser, followed by a discussion of the effect of Boron on citrus trees, led by S. M. Brown, junior chemist of the Riverside citrus Experiment Station. A field trip will occupy the balance of the afternoon.

The following day will be given over to the school on pest control, starting with the control of red scale by means of spraying, followed by fumigation by R. S. Woglum, entomologist of the California Fruit Growers' Exchange. H. J. Ryan, horticultural commissioner of Los Angeles county, will discuss the Black Scale Situation in this county. J. R. La Follette, assistant entomologist of the California Fruit Growers' Exchange, will speak on red spider control in coastal areas, while W. E. Landon also an assistant entomologist of the Exchange, will talk upon the control of red spider in the interior districts.

In the afternoon, the status of citrus pest control in Orange county will be the subject of an address by A. A. Brock, horticultural commissioner of Orange county. J. A. Prizer, manager of the Placentia Orange Growers, will take up the effect of oil sprays on the keeping qualities of Valencia oranges, and D. B. Mackie, entomologist of the State Department of Agriculture, will conclude the program with a paper dealing with the status of the white fly eradication program.

What Failure to Spray Cost One Man

A horrible example of what happens when the grower doesn't spray is the case of Farmer A, according to one of the experts at a recent pest control meeting in Los Angeles county. He failed to use an arsenical spray on his young tomato plants, and the tomato fruit worm got 'em. Seven hundred picked boxes gave a packout of but 140 boxes, and this was not enough to pay for the expense of picking. This farmer, said the speaker, has undoubtedly learned the lesson of proper control of the fruit worm at an early stage.

The pest control meetings, held under the auspices of the Los Angeles County Farm Bureau in San Gabriel and San Fernando Valley recently, have been well attended. Gardeners and truck growers there are convinced that insect control is as necessary as irrigation or cultivation. Timely applications for pests and the importance of keeping proper insecticides on hand, were stressed at the meetings.

An expert says water is often the most expensive ingredient in Bordeaux mixture and other spray solutions, because of the large amount of labor involved in handling it.

CAULIFLOWER AND CABBAGE

both doing best if additional plant foods are supplied.

One can easily grow plants of cauliflower and cabbage for home garden planting, as both vegetables should be transplanted. In commercial practice, the open-bed system of planting is used in growing cabbage and cauliflower plants. Though the seeds are small, they germinate readily in a good seed bed. When only a small number of plants are required, make a sunken bed about four feet across and ten feet long and sow the seed in drills twelve inches apart, covering them with a quarter of an inch of moist soil. This bed can be flooded frequently after the seedlings are above the surface, but never before. Application of water should cease about ten days before the plants are to be set or transplanted, to permit them to harden. The best plants are those which reach a height of ten inches, the proper size for transplanting, when they are about four to five weeks old. They should never be transplanted after they are forty-five days old because such plants usually flower out prematurely.

The sunken bed system of growing plants such as cauliflower and cabbage, which really means a bed prepared by raising borders six inches high, is best because flat planting and flooding encourages proper root development for a plant which is to be taken up and reset. When planted on double rows or ridges a long tap root will be the result. The tendency of the roots under this system is to go down to reach the moisture supply which is below the plant. When planted flat and flooded, more small fibrous roots are produced which is the best for transplants.

The preparation of the plot to be planted to cauliflower and cabbage requires close attention. At this time of the year, it will be necessary to flood it very carefully, assuring moisture penetration to a depth of from two or three feet at least. Following this application of water, which should be made in beds about four feet square, the plots must be spaded and then levelled carefully with a rake, breaking up all the larger clods. Cauliflower and cabbage should be planted in rows two and one-half to three feet across. For the earlier varieties of cauliflower, the plants should be spaced two and a half to three feet apart, while earlier sorts can be placed twenty-seven inches to two feet apart. Cabbage can be set as close as twenty inches apart, especially if the soil is fertile.

The proper method of setting these plants in the home garden is to draw a shallow furrow and after a day or two this furrow plants in the bottom of this, placing about three inches of soil about the roots. As rapidly as the rows are planted, a small stream of water should be run down the furrow and after a day or two this furrow can be worked in around the plants. The same method of planting may be used for cabbage and cauliflower.

CULTURE VARIES

From this point on, the methods of culture of cabbage and cauliflower diverge. Cauliflower should be given one or two applications of commercial fertilizer such as fish meal, this to be worked in around the plant. About one tablespoon of fish meal to every plant will be sufficient for each application. Plantings should be irrigated between rows in wide shallow furrows once a week or at least every ten days. Cauliflower must be kept growing very rapidly to be of best quality and if growth is delayed or set back in any way premature flowering or loose heads will result. Remember that if cauliflower stops growing, there will be none for the dinner table.

While it is essential that the development of cabbage must progress steadily and while the application of fertilizers after transplanting is advisable, such intensive culture is not such a necessity as it is with cauliflower. This is especially true of the Savoy cabbages which will produce good heads on soil which is not of optimum fertility. Irrigation should be regular and applied about every ten days, while with both cabbage and cauliflower hoeing between plants to keep out the weeds is considered good practice.

There are two or three other close relatives of cabbage and cauliflower which the home gardener may wish to try. These are Brussel sprouts, collards and kale. Brussel sprouts do not grow especially well in Southern California, although the gardener who is painstaking and willing to fight black aphis can produce a good crop. The soil and cultural requirements are generally the same as those for cabbage, though there are a few differences. It requires several weeks longer for them to mature than it does late cabbage. Very heavy rich soil is best for them, and animal manures, in addition to some mineral ones, should be used for the best results. The seed must be planted not earlier than July 1, and not later than November 15. The plants are set thirty inches apart, in rows three feet apart, and then cared for like cabbage. In order that the sprouts may be large, it is advisable to keep the leaves trimmed off the lower portion of the stem, but the terminal leaves at the top are left for shade. Good seed is the most important factor for the successful culture of this vegetable.

Collard is the "headless" cabbage and highly prized in the south for greens. When the plants are young, they cannot be distinguished from those of cabbage, but as

Rancho Vista

"In the Heart of the Avocado Empire"

Interplanting with winter vegetables between rows of young trees, popular in the Vista District, will afford opportunity for income the first year at Rancho Vista.

Celery at Vista brings a premium because of its superior quality and often nets the grower $1,000 an acre profit, Modest, but attractive, Spanish bungalow recently completed at Rancho Vista. Building and architectural restrictions insure a community of permanent beauty and equalized valuations.

A. W. Theisinger and one of his valuable four-year-old Avocado trees. From this acre of young trees, Mr. Theisinger this year harvested more than $3,000 in profits. This expert grower has charge of the planting, budding and care of the Rancho Vista Planted Avocado Estates—now on the market at opening prices.

BIG PROFITS BEING MADE AT RANCHO VISTA

Rancho Vista Avocado Estates were placed upon the market less than a year ago, yet improvements and record of sales total HUNDREDS OF THOUSANDS OF DOLLARS. With every new building put under way, with the completion of every new improvement on the tract—each and every parcel has been increased in value.

If you were among those who purchased at Rancho Vista in the beginning, then you have seen the value of your parcel increase in amounts that vary with location. Some of those early purchasers have already resold at very handsome profits. Others have refused considerably more than they paid.

Rancho Vista is in the heart of a new and wonderfully fertile irrigation district located in a frost-protected belt in Northern San Diego County. We call it new because water was turned into the great new Vista Irrigation System only in February, 1926. WHERE COULD YOU INVEST YOUR MONEY MORE SAFELY THAN TO PUT IT IN A PARCEL OF LAND IN THE CENTER OF THIS DISTRICT, WHOSE DEVELOPMENT HAS JUST STARTED?

In addition to the amount of increase your investment will earn at Rancho Vista—if you choose—you might also enjoy a handsome income almost from the beginning.

Keep in mind that at Rancho Vista you will get some of the finest Avocado land to be found any place. It is also California's finest winter vegetable and bulb growing section.

IT IS OPTIONAL ON YOUR PART WHETHER YOU BUY ONE OF THE INCOME ESTATES or whether you select the raw land either to plant it yourself or just as an investment.

A THREE-WAY OPPORTUNITY FOR PROFITS

1. You can buy an income-producing estate and we will care for it for you.
2. You can buy the land and do your own planting.
3. You can make a small investment here in an undeveloped parcel and enjoy the increase in its value caused by thousands of dollars now being spent in surrounding improvements.

Profits already made at Rancho Vista only suggest what may be expected here during the next few years. You can still get ocean-view building sites and a selection of the finest income estates in Southern California AT OPENING PRICES. And under any of our "THREE WAYS TO PROFIT," Cool, conservative bankers who have inspected Rancho Vista declare it to be one of the outstanding developments of its kind in California.

Copenhagen Market cabbage is a favorite market garden variety in Southern California.

The Savoy, or curly-leafed cabbage is popular with many folks, and can be grown successfully on the lighter types of soils.

The cauliflower is an aristocratic cousin of the humble cabbage. Here is a typical cauliflower plant after transplanting.

Southland cauliflower growers practice irrigation every week or ten days after transplanting, for the plants must develop rapidly.

Snowball cauliflower has no leaves naturally protecting the curd, so lower leaves must be tied like a hood over the head as soon as it begins to develop.

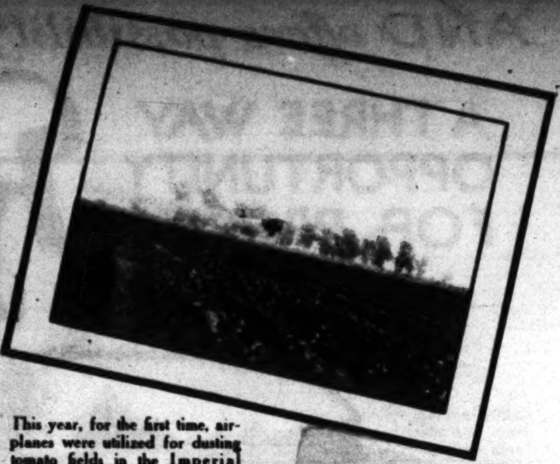
The Early Imperial Tomato Catches the Market

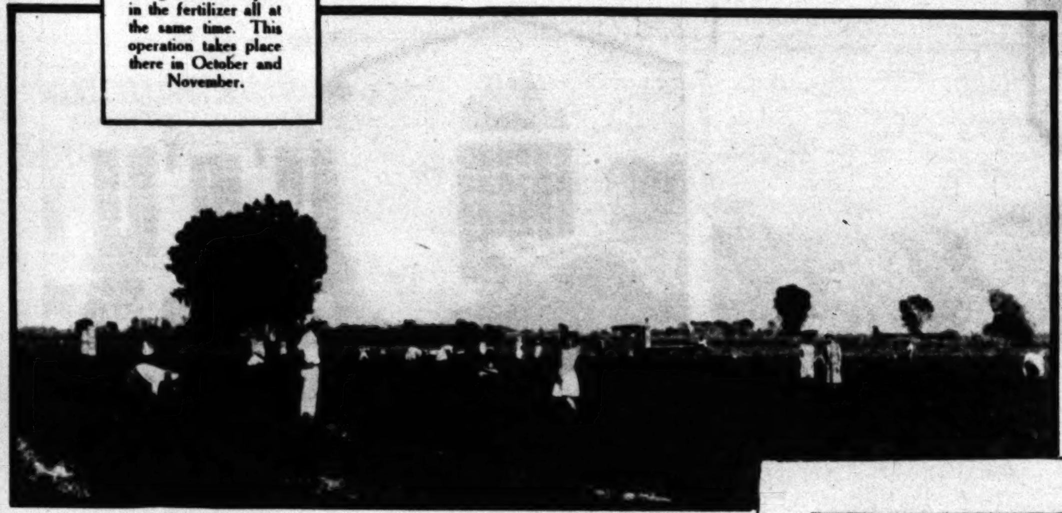
(Illustrating article by Iva M. McFadden)

The Imperial Valley tomato grower plows his ground and puts in the fertilizer all at the same time. This operation takes place there in October and November.

The hills of tomatoes are protected with little wigwams made of arrow weeds and newspapers as a winter shelter against frosts.



This year, for the first time, airplanes were utilized for dusting tomato fields in the Imperial Valley. Calcium arsenate was the dust used to discourage the worms.



When picking time arrives, early in May this year, Mexicans begin gathering the crop. "Mature green" tomatoes are picked for distant shipments, the "pinks" are harvested for nearer markets and the "reds" are for the cities close at hand.

The pickers bring the tomatoes to the edge of the field where the lugs of fruit are transported to the packing houses.

Right—Grading is a particular job, for a ripe tomato won't hold up for long distance shipping, and a green tomato isn't attractive on the nearby markets.

Solid and luscious—just the way the salad-seeking housewife likes to find them.

Right—During the shipping season high school girls find lucrative employment in the Imperial Valley packing sheds, sorting, grading and packing tomatoes for eastern markets. The shipping season runs into July and the market is an eager one extending eastward as far as Chicago.

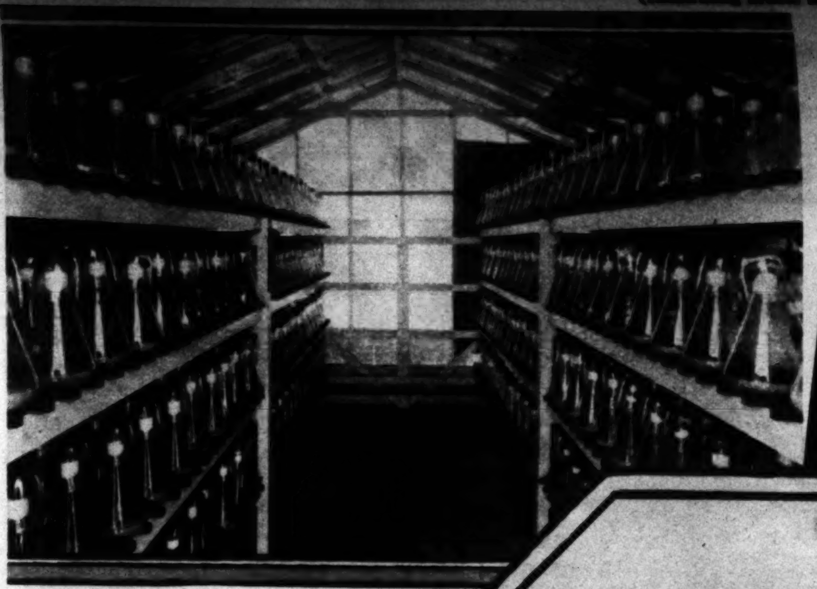
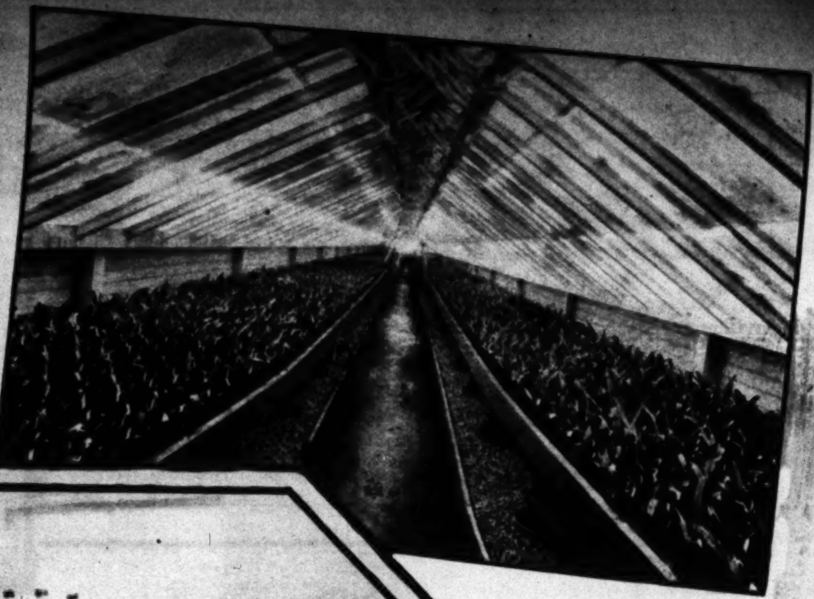
The Exotic Orchid is a "Bottle Baby" in California

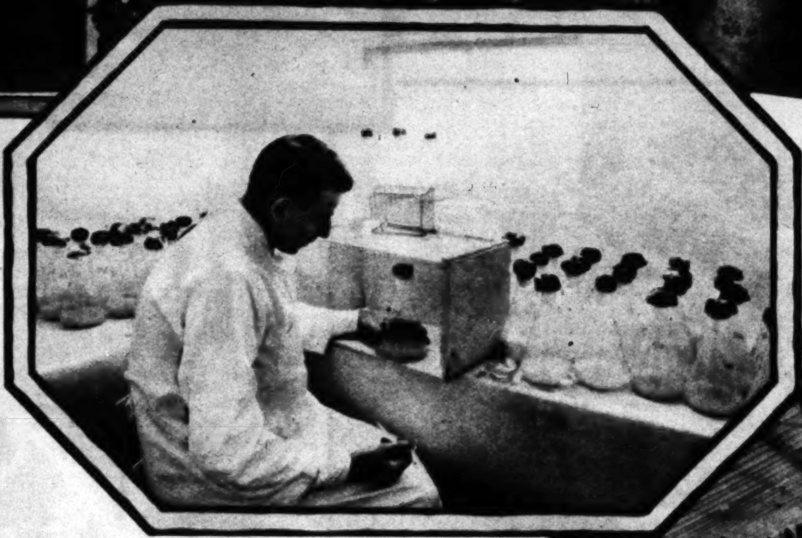
(Illustrating article by Helen W. King)



The modern orchid is an "incubator Baby." The seed, sown on a nutrient jelly, grows inside glass flasks for eighteen months or more. Flask, jelly and seed are thoroughly sterilized at the time of seed sowing, and the incubator house is kept at a fixed temperature during this period.



Orchid growing isn't to be classed as a "get-rich-quick" proposition. Here are approximately 26,000 orchid seedlings only two and a half years old, and probably they will bring the patient propagator a tidy sum in the course of a couple more years.



B. O. Bracey, orchid expert for Armacost and Royston, at work in his laboratory at Sawtelle.

Hybrid seedlings often bear three blooms at their first flowering.

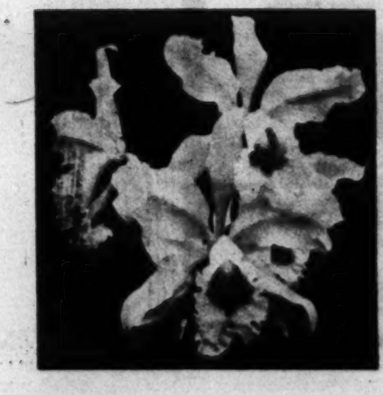
Laelio Cattleya, Canhamiana. This is one of the valuable Cattleya stud plants, showing the floriferous character of the mature plant.

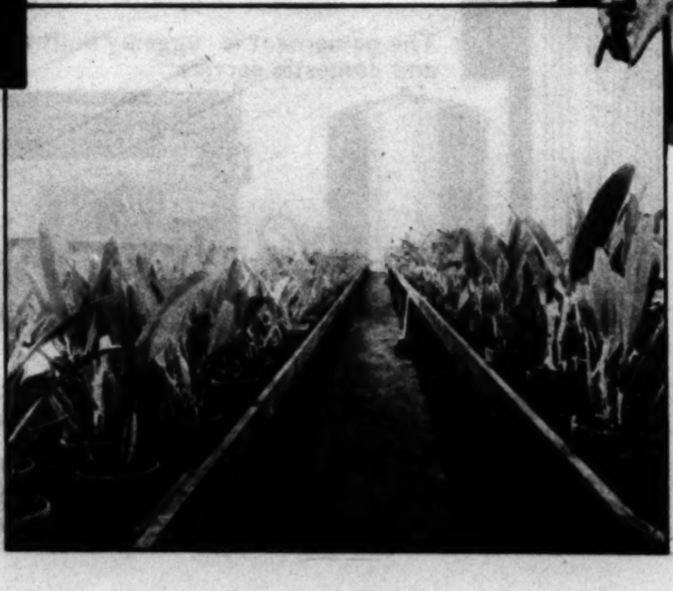
Dusseldorfii Undine, another rare stud plant, of a pure white Cattleya variety in great demand for bridal bouquets.

An unusual type of orchid, appealing more to the collector than to the florist.



Frilled and lovely in texture and coloring, the orchid is deservedly Milady's first choice as adornment for her daintiest frock.

Right—When the seedlings look like this they are due to bloom very soon and the profits will begin to appear after the long period of years spent in scrupulous care of the delicate plants.



More odd than lovely, but varieties like this interest the orchid lover intensely.
